There has been one case in the current parliamentary Session, however, where due to an administrative oversight not all hon. Members whose constituencies were affected by a particular ministerial visit were informed in advance. Immediate action was taken to rectify this, however, when the error became apparent.

Cargo Vehicles

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unscheduled stops there have been involving truck cargo heavy duty mark 2 vehicles since January 1994; and if he will provide a breakdown of the circumstances which resulted in these incidents.

Mr. Soames: Between January 1994 and 13 March 1995 there were four occasions on which truck cargo heavy duty mark 2 vehicles were obliged to make unscheduled stops to deal with technical problems. The circumstances are set out in the table.

TCHD Mark 2 Operational Convoy unscheduled stops (29 January 1994 to 13 March 1995)

Serial number	Date	Location	Fault	Cause Quality	Cause Design	Rectification	Delay time
1	6 June 1994	M1, Tibshelf near Mansfield	Knocking sound from tractor unit	—	—	Precautionary stop, no fault found	33 minutes
2	7 June 1994	A696, South of Otterburn	Air pressure warning buzzer sounded	—	—	Air pressure found satisfactory	34 minutes
3	2 August 1994	A68, SE of Edinburgh	"Clonking" sound when turning	—	—	Precautionary stop, no fault found	26 minutes
4	21 September 1994	A696, near Ponteland	Discharge from sump oil connecting pipe	X	—	Tractor unit changed	[1] 1 hour 10 minutes

Note:

[1] The fault developed shortly after departure. After replacement of the spare tractor unit the convoy returned to await arrival of a substitute spare unit. Movement therefore suspended for 24 hours.

ENVIRONMENT

Construction Industry

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on expected levels of activity in the construction industry; and what action his Department intends to take.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Construction output increased by 3 per cent. last year and modest yet sustained growth looks set to continue. My Department continues to work with the industry to monitor activity levels in the different sectors, and to promote competitiveness and success in export markets.

Emissions

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the standards for hazardous waste incinerators and for cement kilns of emissions of (a) particulates, (b) oxides of nitrogen and (c) sulphur dioxide.

Mr. Atkins: Under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, existing hazardous waste incinerators and cement kilns are required to meet the following limits for emissions to the atmosphere:

Plant	Sulphur dioxide mg/m^{3}	Oxides of nitrogen mg/m^{3}	Particulates mg/m^{3}
Hazardous waste incinerators	50(1)	350(1)	20(1)
Cement kilns	750(2)	Wet kilns = 1800(2) Dry kilns = 1200	50(3)

(1) To be met by 1 December 1996. (2) To be met by 1 April 1997.

(3) To be met by 1 April 1998.

These limits are set out in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution guidance notes.

So far as cement kilns are concerned, the figures in the table relate to operations where conventional coal/petroleum coke is being used as fuel. If cement kiln operations using substitute liquid fuel to replace a portion of coal/petroleum coke are authorised under the Act, then that part of the emissions that originates from the substitute fuel will be controlled to the above incinerator limits, while that part of the emissions which originates from coal/petroleum coke will be controlled to the above cement kiln limits. Taking sulphur dioxide as an example, if all of the conventional fuel is replaced with substitute fuel, then a limit of 50 mg/m^3 will apply. If however, the replacement is only 30 per cent., then 30 per cent. of the emissions, those generated from the substitute fuel, will be required to meet 50 mg/m^3, while the rest will be required to meet 750 mg/m^3.

Housing Construction, London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each London borough (a) the numbers of applicants currently on the council housing waiting lists, (b) the total central Government funding for new rented housing association homes for 1995–96, excluding TIS, DIYSO and major repairs or sale programmes, (c) the sum which would have been available if original funding intentions as set out in the 1992 Autumn Statement had been maintained, (d) the estimated number of homes that will be built with the money now available and (e) the estimated number of homes that could have been built if funding had been provided at the original proposed funding level as set out in (c); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 16 March 1995]: Allocations made to London boroughs from the Housing Corporations's 1995–96 approved development programme for the provision of new rented housing are listed below together with the Housing Corporation's estimate of what the allocations may have been if funding plans in the 1992 Autumn Statement had been maintained.

The number of households on local authority housing waiting lists in London on 1 April 1994 is given in section B of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Right to Buy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the total value of tenancies sold under the right to buy.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Prior to 1993 figures for receipts resulting from council tenants exercising their right to buy from local authorities were not separately collected by the Department. However, between the introduction of the right to buy in 1980 and the end of September 1994, the total value of council dwelling sales to sitting tenants, net of discounts is estimated to be £19.0 billion.

The number of sales to local authority sitting tenants during this period was almost 1,300,000, and 92 per cent. of such sales resulted from tenants exercising their right to buy.

Information on the value of right-to-buy sales to sitting tenants of new towns and housing associations is not available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority owned houses and flats have been sold, to date, since the introduction of the right to buy in each local authority area in England.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Tables showing the available information on total right-to-buy sales for each English local authority for every financial year since 1980 and a cumulative total to March 1994 are in the Library.

In addition, the tables also give data on total sales and on the number of flats sold.

Council Tax

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 London boroughs with the lowest record on collecting council tax, the cash and percentage owed and the political control of each authority.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is as follows:

	1993–94 council taxes received as a percentage of annual net collectable debit[1]	Uncollected council taxes as at 31 March 1994[2] £000	Political control as at February 1995

[2] Based on information published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) in its Revenue Collection Statistics 1993–94 publication.

[3] No information was published by CIPFA for these two authorities: the figure shown is the Department's estimate based on information supplied in May 1994.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much is owed to the London borough of Lambeth in (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge and (c) council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information on uncollected domestic rates, community charge and council tax for each local authority is not available centrally. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy regularly publish estimates for individual authorities: figures for 31 March 1994 are available in their Revenue Collection Statistics 1993–94 publication, and are as follows:

	Arrears outstanding at 31 March 1994 for Lambeth (£000)
Domestic rates	12,917
Community charge	84,895
Council tax	29,597

Council Tenancies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority housing tenancies were available in (a) England, (b) Yorkshire and Humberside in 1994.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities housing investment programme—HIP1—returns for 1994 show that on 1 April a total of 3,615,504 local authority dwellings were occupied or available for letting in England. Of these, 451,112 were within the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take to implement the recommendations of the panel on sustainable development.

Mr. Atkins: We will shortly issue a response to the recommendations made in the first report of the Government's panel on sustainable development.

Neighbour Noise

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress has been made regarding the working party looking into noise from neighbours; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: The working party has completed its review of the effectiveness of current neighbour noise controls. We hope to consult in the near future on its conclusions and recommendations.

Detergents (Phosphate Content)

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the phosphate content of domestic detergent products. [13715]

Mr. Atkins: There has been a reduction of the order of 40 per cent. in the use of phosphates in detergents since the early 1990s, due to the presence in the market place of phosphate-free detergents. The imminent inclusion of detergents in the EC ecolabelling scheme will give an incentive to manufacturers to reduce the content of phosphates in detergents still further. There are some unresolved questions about replacement of phosphates in detergents and the Government have no plans to require substitution.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members, without prior warning to those hon. Members, for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15018]

Mr. Gummer: My practice is to ensure that hon. Members have prior warning of all departmental visits that I make to their constituencies; so far as I am aware, this has been achieved for all the visits that I have made in the current parliamentary Session.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce decisions on the future structure of the remaining shire counties for which he had final reports from the Local Government Commission. [15646]

Mr. Gummer: I can now announce my decisions on the remaining 12 shire counties as follows. In all cases I have considered the commission's reports and the representations I have received. In the process I have taken into account the transitional and ongoing costs and the viability of the structures—both of unitary authorities and remaining two-tier arrangements—which will result from my decisions. In each case I am satisfied that on balance my decision will best reflect the identities and interests of local communities and will best secure effective and convenient local government.

Derbyshire

I have decided to accept the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for Derbyshire that Derby city be given unitary authority status and that the existing two-tier structure be retained in the rest of the county.

The case for a unitary Derby city is compelling. Derby is a former county borough and was responsible for the broad range of local government services prior to 1974. It has a population of 227,000 and is larger than many metropolitan boroughs and London boroughs. The commission found that about two thirds of local people identified strongly with the city area.

Staffordshire

On Staffordshire, I have accepted the commission's recommendation that there should be a unitary authority for Stoke-on-Trent, with the addition of a small area of Barlaston from the Stafford borough area, and that elsewhere in the county the status quo should be retained.

The case for a unitary Stoke is strong. It is a former county borough with a large and concentrated population in excess of 250,000, and the commission has identified a strong sense of community identity within the city council area. I agree with the commission that the remainder of the county outside Stoke, with a county council and eight districts, will continue to be fully viable.

Wiltshire

In the case of Wiltshire, I have decided to accept the commission's recommendation that there should be a unitary authority for the present borough area of Thamesdown (Swindon) and that there should be no change to the existing two-tier arrangements in the rest of the county of Wiltshire.

The case for a unitary Thamesdown is strong. It is a significant urban area, with a population in excess of 170,000, where the commission identified a strong and distinct sense of community identity and an independent economy. I agree with the commission's conclusion that a unitary authority for Thamesdown would offer the opportunity to improve the co-ordination, effectiveness and delivery of services and facilitate the co-ordination of these services with other public bodies, the business community and the voluntary sector.

East Sussex

For East Sussex I have decided to accept the commission's recommendation that a unitary authority should be created by merging the present borough areas of Brighton and Hove, and that there should be no change to the existing two-tier arrangements in the rest of the county.

While I recognise the feeling in Brighton and Hove of separate identifies, in practical terms they form a continuous conurbation. I agree with the commission's conclusion that the balance of advantage lies with the establishment of a single unitary authority, which would have physical coherence, be of sufficient size and compactness to be self sufficient and accessible, and have a good infrastructure. I am satisfied that such an authority would be well placed to deliver the full range of local services.

Devon

On Devon, I accept the commission's recommendation of unitary authorities for Plymouth and Torbay, with the continuation of the two-tier structure elsewhere in Devon, subject to any review of Exeter which I might ask the commission to conduct.

Both Plymouth and Torbay are former county boroughs which have previously been responsible for the broad range of local government services. Plymouth, with a population of over 250,000, is the fourth most populous non-metropolitan district. It is a significant and well defined urban area which is distinct from the neighbouring rural areas.

For Torbay, while its population is smaller—around 120,000—it is one of the largest resorts in Great Britain. Like Plymouth, it has a distinctive identity from the surrounding rural areas, reflecting its relatively self-sufficient economy and low level of interdependence with the rest of Devon. The commission found strong local support for a unitary authority for Torbay, including from business and other local bodies. I consider that the remainder of the county will retain its viability.

Nottinghamshire

I have decided to accept the commission's proposal that Nottingham city should gain unitary status.

The city has a substantial population of 285,000; it is the third largest non-metropolitan district in England and is larger than most existing metropolitan and London boroughs. It was formerly a county borough. The city is distinct from most of the rest of the county and has specific needs which I believe could be more effectively addressed by a unitary city authority. The commission found that the majority of local people in Nottingham identify strongly with the city.

As I announced on 2 March, some of the arguments the commission put forward in favour of a unitary authority for Nottingham could equally be applied to the neighbouring districts of Broxtowe, Gedling and Rushcliffe. I am considering whether to refer these three districts to the commission for a further review so that the case for unitary authorities in the greater Nottingham area can be thoroughly explored. Subject to this consideration, I accept the case for retaining the existing two-tier structure in the rest of the county.

Essex

For Essex, I have decided to accept the commission's recommendation that Southend-on-Sea should become a unitary authority, with the rest of the county remaining two-tier. The commission also recommended that Southend's boundaries should be extended to include Southend airport. I think this needs further exploration and I may ask the commission in due course to look at the matter again.

There is a strong case for a unitary Southend, given its population size and density, the high level of community identity with the borough council area which the commission found, and its former status as a county borough. I accept the commission's view that a unitary Southend could provide the broad range of local government services within its area in a way which is effective, convenient, accessible and responsive to local needs.

The commission also recommended significant boundary changes between Basildon, Brentwood and Rochford. In my statement to the House on 2 March, I said that I had in mind to include the districts of Thurrock and Basildon among those where I shall be asking the commission to carry out fresh reviews. I have accordingly decided it would not be appropriate to reach a decision on the proposed boundary changes affecting Basildon until the outcome of those reviews is known.

Hereford and Worcester

In the case of Hereford and Worcester, I have decided to accept the commission's recommendation that there should be a unitary authority for the area of the "traditional" Herefordshire, and that the existing two-tier structure should be retained in the "traditional" area of Worcestershire. The "traditional" area of Herefordshire comprises the areas of Hereford city, South Herefordshire, the western part of Malvern hills and Leominster except for the Tenbury area. The "traditional" area of Worcestershire comprises the districts of Wyre Forest, Bromsgrove, Redditch, Worcester city and Wychavon, with a new district to be established covering the eastern part of the Malvern hills and the area of Tenbury.

Prior to the reorganisation of local government in 1974, Herefordshire and Worcestershire were two separate counties for both administrative and ceremonial purposes. The merger in 1974 has proved to be very unpopular and the evidence presented to the commission suggests that the merger have not earned the loyalty of the local people.

I consider that the Worcestershire element of the present county, with approximately 77 per cent. of the existing county's population, would be viable. I also agree with the commission about the viability of a unitary Herefordshire. A number of services such as education and social services are currently run on the basis of the "Herefordshire" boundary and the commission is satisfied that the full range of services can be provided by a unitary Herefordshire.

I also accept the commission's recommendation for new electoral arrangements for the new unitary Herefordshire and the remaining county and districts in Worcestershire.

Leicestershire

I am minded to accept the commission's recommendation that there should be a unitary authority for the city of Leicester. It has a long history of unitary government and there seems to be strong support for a return to that status. Leicester is the second largest of the non-metropolitan districts and I believe that it will be able to fulfil the functions of a unitary authority effectively and conveniently. I also believe that the reduced county council will be viable.

Having weighed all the arguments, I am minded to accept the commission's recommendation that there should be a unitary authority in Rutland. The strength of local identity is very clear and there is definite support for a unitary authority.

There are, however, understandable concerns about whether Rutland could provide effective local government, given its small size, and about the financial implications of reorganisation. Before an order implementing change for Rutland is introduced, I shall want to be satisfied that the authority has been able to make good practical arrangements for local services; that the authority have fully assessed the overall financial implications; that the costs can be paid for within the same financial arrangements and constraints that apply to other reorganised authorities. I expect that at least for some services, some form of joint working may be needed.

Hampshire

Having weighed all the arguments, I have accepted part of the commission's structural recommendations—namely unitary authorities for Portsmouth and Southampton—but rejected the recommendation for the New Forest so that it, and the rest of the county of Hampshire, will remain two-tier.

There is a strong case for unitary authorities for the cities of Portsmouth and Southampton. Both are former county boroughs with a history of unitary local government and are amongst the largest, and most densely populated, non-metropolitan district councils. Portsmouth and Southampton, with populations of around 180,000 and 200,000 respectively are comparable in this respect with the urban unitary authorities in London and the metropolitan counties. There is support for unitary status locally, and the city councils are confident about their ability to deliver services, establishing where necessary joint arrangements with each other and with the county council.

However, the position in New Forest is much less clear. Whilst it is one of the larger non-metropolitan districts in terms of population (around 160,000), it is a largely rural area. It has no tradition of unitary local government and popular opinion is finely balanced. Doubts have been expressed about the fragmentation of services in a strongly rural district which has no large town to give it focus and identity. I have decided, therefore, not to accept the commission's recommendation for a unitary authority for the New Forest.

Dorset

Having weighed all the arguments, I have accepted part of the commission's structural recommendations—namely unitary authorities for Bournemouth and Poole—but rejected its proposal that there should be two unitary authorities in the rest of the county. Outside the two boroughs, the county will remain two—tier.

There is a strong case for unitary authorities in Bournemouth and Poole, which is now also accepted by the county council. The two boroughs are distinct within the largely rural county and each has a strong sense of community identity. The population of each is already large and I have little doubt that they would each be able to provide all local authority services, especially with further growth expected in Poole.

The position outside Bournemouth and Poole is much less clear. Community identity in the area tends to have a very local emphasis and popular opinion is finely balanced. Doubts have also been expressed about the viability of the two largely rural authorities.

Berkshire

On Berkshire, having weighed all the arguments, I have largely accepted the commission's final recommendations for the county's future structure, but with a modification. I accept the recommendation that Reading, Newbury, Slough, and Wokingham should become unitary authorities on the boundaries of the present district areas. However, I propose to modify the recommendation that a unitary authority be created based on a merger of the district areas of Bracknell Forest and Windsor and Maidenhead, and instead create two unitary authorities based on the existing district areas. The present two-tier structure in Berkshire will therefore be replaced by six unitary authorities based on existing district areas.

The commission found a strong and well supported case for an all unitary structure in Berkshire from the outset of the review. The case for unitary status for Reading, Newbury and Slough is particularly strong; Reading is a former county borough with a predominantly urban and district character; Slough is a densely populated urban area which is a significant industrial and retail centre with an infrastructure to reflect this; Newbury is a predominantly rural area quite distinct from the rest of the county, relating more to areas in neighbouring counties. While there was less unanimity about the best structure for the rest of the county area, on balance I consider that unitary status for each of the remaining districts—Wokingham, Bracknell Forest and Windsor and Maidenhead—will on balance best serve the needs of community identity and effective local government, and that unitary authorities based on the existing districts are capable of delivering the full range of services. The county's geography, coupled with the marked diversity across its area, give it a particularly strong case for an all unitary structure.

The county area for Berkshire will be retained, but it will no longer have a county council.

I have now considered my decisions on all the commission's structural recommendations. I am still considering a number of outstanding recommendations on other matters, and will announce my decisions on these in due course.

HEALTH

GP Fundholding

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage of patients currently covered by GP budget fundholders in (a) the Dartford constituency, (b) the Dartford and Gravesham Health Trust area, (c) the county of Kent, (d) the South Thames regional health authority, (e) England and (f) the United Kingdom. [14566]

Mr. Malone: Information available from the enhanced general practitioner census of 1 April 1994 is shown in the table. Information is not collected below family health services authority level.

Area	Population coverage Per cent.
Kent FHSA	53
South Thames RHA	37
England	34

Information relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Secondary Fuels

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence she has collected from other countries of ill health caused by the burning of secondary liquid fuels in cement kilns or incinerators; [14425]

(2) what evidence her Department has of ill health caused by the burning of secondary liquid fuels in (a) the kilns of cement industries and (b) waste incinerators; and if she will make a statement. [14428]

Mr. Sackville: The Department is not aware of any evidence that the burning of secondary fuels has caused ill health.

In England and Wales, cement kilns and waste incinerators are authorised under the integrated pollution control regime of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. Under this Act, the operator of the plant is required to use best available techniques not entailing excessive costs to prevent, minimise or, where that is not practicable by such means, for rendering harmless any releases.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each local health area in England (a) the number of general dental practitioners and (b) the number of general dental practitioners per 1,000 population, for each year since 1986. [14723]

Mr. Malone: This information will be placed in the Library.

Industrial Discharges

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all industries the processes of which discharge dioxin or heavy metals into the atmosphere together with details of illnesses directly or indirectly attributed thereto; and if she will make a statement. [14427]

Mr. Sackville: The main industrial processes which discharge dioxin and/or heavy metals are incineration plants, power stations and other combustion plants, metal industry processes and chemical plants.

The health effects of emissions from the burning of any fuel cannot be determined unless the specific components of the fuel and the method and temperature of its combustion are known. Discharges of dioxins and heavy metals must be kept within levels whereby no harm to health should occur. No illnesses are known to be directly or indirectly caused by such discharges in the United Kingdom.

NHS Complaints Procedures

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will make an announcement on the Government's response to the report of the review committee on NHS complaints procedures, "Being Heard". [15644]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall publish tomorrow a booklet entitled "Acting on Complaints". This will set out our plans for a speedier, simpler and more effective national health service complaints procedure in England. Copies will be placed in the Library. Similar systems are being introduced in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. I will also be responding tomorrow to the recommendations in the First and Sixth Reports of the 1993–94 Session of the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, which relate to NHS complaints procedures in Great Britain.

Family Health Services Appeal Authority

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Eastbourne of 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 88, what arrangements she has made to create a special health authority to undertake the functions of the family health services appeal unit. [15647]

Mr. Malone: Statutory Instruments were laid before this House on 8 March 1995 to come into effect on 1 April 1995 creating the Family Health Services Appeal Authority. The authority is to be located in Harrogate. The chairman of the authority will be Mr. Alan Crute and Mrs. Hilda Harvey, Mr. John Goss and Mrs. Josephine Larbie have been invited to be non-executive members.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number and percentage of emergency ambulance calls in London that took (a) 14 minutes and (b) for each subsequent minute up to 70 minutes in February 1995. [14773]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 25 January at columns 251–52.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the visits she has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members, without prior warning to those hon. Members, for any purpose connected with her departmental responsibilities. [15016]

Mr. Sackville: Ministers always do their best to give prior warning to hon. Members when they visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Ethnic Origin

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people of (a) Turkish origin, (b) Turkish Cypriot origin and (c) other Turkish origin, including Kurdish origin, were resident in (i) each of the London boroughs and (ii) the United Kingdom as a whole at the latest available date. [15104]

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available as these categories were not listed in the 1991 census ethnic group question. However, there was a space for people to enter their ethnic group if they felt that none of the printed, pre-coded, categories, was appropriate. Counts for the London boroughs of these "write-in" answers for the category of "Turkish", without any sub-division, are included in the 1991 Census Report for Ethnic Group and Country of Birth (table a), copies of which are available in the Library. The ethnic origin question was not asked in Northern Ireland and this table relates to Great Britain.

Sarah Varley

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish the report submitted by the city of Bradford metropolitan council concerning the circumstances leading to the death of Sarah Varley, together with the response of her Department's social services inspectorate; and if she will make a statement. [15441]

Mr. Bowis: It is for the Bradford area child protection committee to consider publication of the report. The review, completed in 1993, made a number of recommendations to the area child protection committee. The social services inspectorate has asked the Bradford director of social services to report on action taken to implement the recommendations.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if patients given definite dates for treatment and operations are then removed from the waiting list. [15185]

Mr. Malone: No.

EMPLOYMENT

Remploy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the work of Remploy as clothing suppliers has met his quality control standards.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R.M. Phillips to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 21 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your question about whether the work of Remploy as clothing suppliers has met his quality control standards.

Although Remploy receives substantial financial support from Government (£92.1 million for 1994/95), and operates within an Annual Performance Agreement setting targets in relation to the employment of disabled people, in every other respect it operates as a normal commercial company. As such, any quality control standards are a matter for Remploy and its customers.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many contracts have been awarded to Remploy since the special contracts arrangements were introduced.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Peter Thurnham, dated 21 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how many contracts have been awarded to Remploy since the special contracts arrangements were introduced.

To date Remploy has received orders in excess of £20 million since the introduction of the Special Contracts Arrangements on 29 November, 1994.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of whether the special contracts arrangements are working effectively.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on 15 March, Official Report, column 624.

Industrial Workers' Salaries

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the average change in real terms of industrial workers' salaries since 1979.

Mr. Oppenheim: The average real weekly earnings of an industrial worker rose 32 per cent. between 1979 and 1994.

Disabled People

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 143, if he will identify the six employer associations which, in the consultation process, expressed a view in favour of exempting small firms from the requirement not to discriminate against disabled employees and the three employer associations which were against this.

Miss Widdecombe: No. As I made clear in my answer of 7 March 1995, it is not our policy to publish particular responses to the consultation and this includes identifying the views that particular organisations expressed in those responses.

Forth Railway Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive will make a complete independent assessment of the Forth railway bridge. [15101]

Mr. Oppenheim: I understand the director general of the Health and Safety Executive, Mr. Rimington, has asked Her Majesty's railway inspectorate to undertake an assessment of the Forth bridge.

A time scale for the completion of this work has not yet been confirmed.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15024]

Mr. Portillo: I always do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Unemployed People (Study Courses)

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to reinstate a scheme along the lines of learning for work for unemployed people who would benefit from full-time study. [15336]

Mr. Paice: Learning for work will not be replaced by another scheme. The Department, through training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service, provides a range of programmes and services to help unemployed people prepare for work. Training for work, career development loans, job clubs and restart courses all play an important part of this package of help.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if part-time study by unemployed people will be a positive outcome of restart interviews. [15339]

Miss Widdecombe: It is appreciated that undertaking part-time education can enhance some clients' prospects of finding work in the longer term, so advisers will give advice and guidance on part-time education opportunities available and the implications for benefits. However, a client who starts part-time education following a restart interview is not counted towards the positive outcome targets unless he also leaves the unemployment register.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if a course of study being undertaken by an unemployed person by the Employment Service is not exceeding 16 hours of guided learning will be disregarded in any further tests of availability for work. [15335]

Miss Widdecombe: People claiming jobseeker's allowance will be able to take part-time courses provided that they remain available for, and actively seeking, employment.

Courses of part-time study will not be disregarded by the Employment Service in availability for work tests.

After three months unemployment, the course will not of itself be grounds for finding someone unavailable for work, but it will continue to be the case that a jobseeker may not turn down or refuse to apply for a vacancy notified to him merely because it conflicts with his course of study.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the new rule on hours of study will apply during the first three months of unemployment. [15337]

Miss Widdecombe: People claiming jobseeker's allowance will be able to take part-time courses provided that they remain fully available for, and actively seeking, employment. After three months unemployment, attending a part-time course will not of itself be grounds for finding someone unavailable for work, but it will continue to be the case that a jobseeker may not turn down or refuse to apply for a vacancy notified to him merely because it conflicts with his course of study.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if people who were studying part-time while employed may be required under the rules for jobseeker's allowance to give up their courses on becoming unemployed. [15343]

Miss Widdecombe: People who become unemployed will be able to continue to study part-time within the rules of jobseekers allowance and receive benefit, so long as they remain available for, and actively seeking, employment.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if study for a skill or qualification will be taken into account by the Employment Service under the rules for jobseeker's allowance, in judging the suitability of a job which an unemployed person may be directed to take. [15334]

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Service does not set out to offer claimants unsuitable jobs, and employment officers may take into account a range of factors before notifying claimants of vacancies. However, jobseeker's allowance, like current unemployment benefits, will be for people whose first priority is to find a job. Study must not conflict with claimants' availability for work and active jobsearch and they will be liable to sanction if, without good cause, they refuse or fail to apply for a job that has been notified to them by an employment officer as vacant or about to become vacant. This does not mean that they must necessarily leave their course: it may be possible, because of the increasing flexibility of modern courses, to combine work and study. But it will continue to be the case that claimants may not turn down or refuse to apply for a vacancy notified to them merely because it conflicts with their course of study.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if courses for the long-term unemployed funded from the European social fund and provided at present by training and enterprise councils, further education colleges, local authorities and voluntary organisations will be made exempt from the 16-hour limitation and the actively seeking work requirement brought within the training for work programme or in some other way. [15338]

Miss Widdecombe: Courses part-funded by the European social fund and run under training for work will be subject to the rules of that programme. People undertaking part-time courses part-funded by ESF while claiming jobseeker's allowance will be subject to the rules of JSA, which will include an upper limit of 16 guided learning hours per week in Further Education Funding Council funded courses and a requirement to be available for, and actively seeking, employment.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was paid in grants from any section of the European Union budget to the South Thames TEC for each year since 1992. [14730]

Mr. Paice: Payments to South Thames training and enterprise council under objective 3 of the European social fund for 1993 and 1994 are shown in the following table. The TEC had no applications approved for support in 1992.

Year	ESF grants paid £
1993	308,770
1994	166,100

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15013]

Mr. Howard: On 16 February 1995 when, at short notice, I visited Wormwood Scrubs prison, and my office tried but was unable to contact the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley).

Television Licences

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were prosecuted for not having a television licence in the latest year for which figures are available; what sentences they received; and how many people eventually served a period of imprisonment.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 15 March 1995]: Information held centrally by my Department on the number of court proceedings under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts 1949 to 1967 cannot separately identify the offence of TV licence evasion. I understand from the national television licence records office that the number of prosecutions in the last two years was as is shown in the table. Over 97 per cent. of people found guilty were fined. A total of 845 people in 1993 and 754 in 1994 were imprisoned for default on fines imposed for using a TV without a licence.

Offenders prosecuted and found guilty of television licence evasion England and Wales

Year	Prosecuted	Found guilty
1994	223,985	199,970

Parole

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 375, what is the length of the delay beyond their parole eligibility dates in the cases of each of the 569 prisoners mentioned in his answer. [15194]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bookmakers

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the request from the British Betting Office Association for a seat on the bookmakers' committee to the levy board and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 March 1995]: My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to review the composition of the bookmakers' committee in the light of representations from the British Betting Office Association.

We have written today to the BBOA, the Secretary to the bookmakers' committee and to the levy board to inform them of this decision. Officials will be writing to the BBOA and the associations represented on the committee in order to undertake the necessary consultation.

A decision on whether the BBOA will be granted representation on the committee and the size of any such representation will be taken following the consultation.

Armed Response Units

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police authorities have permanently staffed armed response units; and how many second officers from other duties for short periods. [14841]

Mr. Maclean: On 31 December 1993, 34 police forces in England and Wales had armed response vehicles. A complete breakdown of this figure between forces which maintain a 24-hour armed response vehicle service, and those which do not, is not centrally available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Victim Support

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the level of financial support provided to Victim Support and the total number of victims so supported since 1989. [14396]

Mr. Maclean: Details of Home Office funding of Victim Support since such funding began in 1979 were given in a reply to a question from the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 22 February at column 236.

Victim Support does not record how many victims have actually been helped, but its records show that in the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1994 it made more than 3.9 million offers of support to victims of crime.

Crime Prevention

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those local authorities which have established designated units with a specific responsibility to reduce the fear of crime and improve crime prevention measures, reporting direct to the chief executive, by party of control. [14397]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally.

Police

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of uniformed officers with a commitment to a specific geographical area by police authority, in each year since 1989; and what these figures are as a percentage of uniformed officers in each area. [14299]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department issues to police authorities about the account taken of community liaison work when considering the career progression of individual officers. [14400]

Mr. Maclean: Guidance on best practice in operating career development and staff appraisal system does not specify how particular aspects of police work should be treated. It is for chief constables to take decisions on the career progression of their officers, taking into account the skills and abilities of the officers concerned, the long-term and short-term needs of the individual, and the needs of the force and the police service as a whole.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of medium and high-level community liaison posts by police authority, in place for each year since 1989. [14401]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not held centrally. Each police force in England and Wales has a community liaison department, generally headed by an officer at superintendent or chief inspector rank. Officers at various levels in forces will have community liaison responsibilities, exercised locally as circumstances require.

Retailers (Prosecutions)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions of retailers for the sale of (a) alcohol, (b) tobacco and (c) 18-classified video products to people who are under age were undertaken in the last year for which figures are available; and what advice his Department issues to the police regarding such offences. [14713]

Mr. Maclean: Information held centrally shows that in England and Wales in 1993, 156 defendants were prosecuted for the illegal sale of alcohol on licensed premises to persons under 18. In 1993, 143 defendants were prosecuted for offences related to the illegal sale of tobacco to children under 16.

The Video Recordings Act 1984 does not differentiate the supply of a video recording of classified work for hire from other forms of commercial supply, such as the supply of a classified video for sale. In 1989, there was one prosecution under section 11 of the Act relating to supply of a video recording in breach of the classification awarded. Information collected centrally from 1990 to 1994 does not identify individual offences committed under this specific Act from other summary offences. However, from 1995 onwards the information is being recorded separately. Home Office guidance to the police and local authorities in 1992 on the law relating to the sale of tobacco to children indicated that enforcement action was primarily a matter for the latter.

Metropolitan Police Committee

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations underlay his rejection of nominations for the Metropolitan police committee made by local authority associations. [14442]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 February to a question from the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker), Official Report, column 757-58.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many meetings he has scheduled with the Metropolitan police committee; and how frequent those meetings will be; [14446]

(2) what sanctions the Metropolitan police committee has if he ignores its advice on policing the capital; [14447]

(3) how many times he has so far met the Metropolitan police committee, how many letters he has received from it; and to what extent he has acted on any advice received from it. [14449]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 11 January at column 139-40. The Metropolitan police committee is not yet formally in operation. From 1 April 1995 it is expected to advise the Secretary of State on a range of matters concerning the policing of the Metropolitan police district but it will be for Ministers to decide whether or to what extent they should accept the advice put forward. The question of sanctions does not arise.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he took to establish that members of the Metropolitan police committee demonstrated knowledge of the workings of the Metropolitan police; [14805]

(2) how many people were interviewed for membership of the Metropolitan police committee. [14441]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 20 February, Official Report, column 19.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many full-time and part-time staff will be allocated to the Metropolitan police committee; and what will be the cost of those staff; [14444]

(2) what will be the annual cost of the Metropolitan police committee. [14445]

Mr. Maclean: The estimated cost of the Metropolitan police committee for 1995–96 is £399,000. This includes the cost of eight full-time and two part-time staff who comprise its Secretariat, accommodation costs and other expenses.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many members of the Metropolitan police committee are members of a political party; and if he will list those parties; [14443]

(2) how many of the members of the Metropolitan police committee (a) are and (b) have been, councillors; and which party they represented. [14451]

Mr. Maclean: Information about past or present political affiliations, if any, of members of the Metropolitan police committee is not collected by my Department. However, I understand that of the two serving councillors appointed to the committee, one is a member of the Conservative party and the other is a member of the Labour party.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many overseas domestic workers are currently working in London; [14450]

(2) how many overseas domestic workers there are currently in Britain. [14448]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not available.

Entry Clearance

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage of (a) husbands and (b) wives seeking to join their spouses initially refused by entry clearance officers in India in 1994; what were the reasons for the differences; and if he will make a statement. [14831]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: In India in 1994, 45 per cent. of husbands and 20 per cent. of wives were initially refused entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom. Some of these applications may be subsequently granted on appeal. Immigration rules for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom apply equally to husbands and wives. Differences in the percentage initially refused reflect differences in individual applications.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage of (a) husbands and (b) wives seeking to join their spouses initially refused by entry clearance officers in Pakistan in 1994; what were the reasons for the differences; and if he will make a statement. [14739]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: In Pakistan in 1994, 60 per cent. of husbands and 25 per cent. of wives were initially refused entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom. Some of these applications may be subsequently granted on appeal. Immigration rules for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom apply equally to husbands and wives. Differences in the percentage of applications initially refused reflect differences in individual applications.

Metropolitan Police

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the need for a police authority for London; [14440]

(2) if he will establish mechanisms whereby London council tax-payers can influence expenditure on the Metropolitan police. [14454]

Mr. Maclean: It is the Government's view that the Secretary of State should remain the police authority for the Metropolitan police district. Like other police authorities, the Secretary of State has overall responsibilities for the efficiency and effectiveness of the force. He answers to Parliament for those responsibilities.

Prison and Escort Contracts

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the full names of those private companies which have tendered for, or have been invited to tender for, each individual contract to (a) design, construct, manage or finance any of Her Majesty's prison establishments or (b) manage court or prison escort services, together with the contract involved; [14452]

(2) if he will list the full names of those private companies which have been awarded individual contracts to (a) design, construct, manage or finance any of Her Majesty's prison establishments or (b) manage court or prison escort services, together with the contract involved and its costs. [14453]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters have been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. George Howarth, dated 21 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about the private companies that have tendered for, been invited to tender for or awarded contracts to design, construct, manage and finance prisons or to manage court escorting and custody services. You also asked for details of the companies awarded each contract and the cost of these contracts.

Invitations to tender have been issued to five companies or consortia for two prisons (at Bridgend and Fazakerley) to be designed, constructed, managed and financed by the private sector. They are, Securicor Seifert Atkins Consortium, UK Detention Services Ltd, Premier Prison Services Ltd, Securer Care Services Ltd and Group 4 Tarmac Ltd. The closing date for receipt of tenders is 20 March 1995. No contracts of this kind have been let in the past.

To date, tenders have been invited for court escort and custody services in five areas in England and Wales. The first of these tenders was for the East Midlands and Humberside area (Area 7). Six companies bid: Securicor Custodial Services, Securiguard Services Ltd, Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd, Group 4 Court Services Ltd, Wackenhut (UK) Ltd and Reliance Security Ltd. Group 4 Court Services Ltd were appointed, the estimated cost of the contract is £41 million over five years.

Four companies bid for the contract for the Metropolitan Police District (Area 3); Group 4 Court Services Ltd, Reliance Custodial Services, Securicor Custodial Services Ltd and Pinkerton Court Escort Services Ltd. Securicor Custodial Services Ltd were appointed, the estimated cost of the contract is £96 million over five years.

Five companies bid for the contracts for East Anglia (Area 4); Group 4 Court Services Ltd, Premier Prison Services Ltd, Reliance, Securicor Custodial Services Ltd, United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. Group 4 Court Services Ltd were appointed, the estimated cost of the contract is £47 million over five years.

Four companies bid for the contract for the North West (Area 6); these were Group 4 Court Services Ltd, Premier Prison Services Ltd, Reliance and Securicor Custodial Services Ltd. Group 4 Court Services Ltd were appointed, the estimated cost of the contract is £69 million over five years.

Five companies bid for the contract for the North (Area 8); these were Group 4 Court Services Ltd, Premier Prison Services Ltd, Reliance, Securicor Custodial Services Ltd and United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. A contract was not awarded. It is still our intention to award a contract as soon as possible. We will be considering how best to re-organise the size and scope of the contract so as to ensure it is both operationally effective and good value for money for the taxpayer.

Prison Contracts

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the net operating cost per prisoner place for each contracted-out prison in England and Wales from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995. [14572]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. George Howarth, dated 21 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the net operating cost per prisoner place for each contracted out prison in England and Wales.

The net operating cost per prisoner place for each contracted out prison in England and Wales from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995 will be contained in the Prison Service Annual Report, which for that period will be laid before Parliament later this year.

Fear of Crime

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department has taken to conduct evaluative research into the fear of crime following the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention's report of the working group on the fear of crime, dated 11 December 1989. [14402]

Mr. Maclean: The research and planning unit, crime prevention unit and police research group of the Home Department conduct and sponsor a wide range of research into the problem of criminal behaviour, the effects of which will influence people's fear of crime. More specifically, the Department has conducted a number of pieces of evaluative work on fear of crime, which bear on the recommendations of the fear of crime working group report.

Details are as follows:

(i) "Special constables: Issues for the management and organisation of volunteer police"—research and planning unit paper 88;

(ii) "Lagerland Lost?" An experiment in keeping drinkers off the street in central Coventry and elsewhere—crime prevention unit paper 22;

(iii) "The Influence of Street Lighting on Crime and Fear of Crime"—crime prevention unit paper 28;

(iv) "Closed Circuit Television in Public Places"—crime prevention unit paper 35;

(v) "Fear of Crime Findings" from the 1992 "British Crime Survey"—research findings No. 9;

(vi) "Participation in Neighbourhood Watch": Findings from the 1992 "British Crime Survey"—research finding No. 11.

Further research on special constables, community policing and the safer cities programme is forthcoming.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to combat the fear of crime following the recommendations of the standing conference on crime prevention contained in the report of the working group on the fear of crime, dated 11 December 1989. [14403]

Mr. Maclean: Home Office Ministers welcomed the report of the working group which provided a stimulating contribution to the debate on fear of crime. The Home Office attaches a high priority to tackling crime and the fear of crime, which we recognise can be just as disabling as crime itself.

The Home Office tackles this problem through a number of initiatives, most recently through the partnership campaign "Partners Against Crime" which was launched by my right hon. and learned Friend in September 1994. The campaign encourages individual members of the public to join the police as partners in the fight against crime. Through neighbourhood watch schemes, the special constabulary, neighbourhood constables, street watch, youth action groups and crime prevention panels, individuals can make a difference and gain a sense of empowerment, which in turn helps to reduce the fear of crime.

We also welcome the use of technology such as closed circuit television in the fight against fear of crime. Last October, my right hon. and learned Friend announced a competition to set up more schemes across the country and the winners will be announced shortly.

Partnership is the basis of Home Office crime prevention policy, and we continue to work closely with other organisations—such as the Department of the Environment on the single regeneration budget and the safer cities programme; and the Department of Transport who have commissioned a national review of transport-related crime and perceptions of safety.

The Home Office produces practical advice on the measures which people can take to help keep themselves, their families and their property safe. The advice is always carefully worded to ensure that it is not fear-inducing.

Following a specific recommendation made by the working group, crime statistics are now published half yearly, rather than quarterly.

Most recently, to help forces identify those areas which suffer most from fear of crime, we have circulated to every police force a handbook and computer software package which provides a guide to the process of conducting a fear of crime survey.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding extending existing voluntary identity schemes administered by licensed victuallers associations in respect of the 18-year-old public alcohol drinking limit; and what measures he is preparing to increase the take-up of these schemes. [14711]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We have received no such representations. While we welcome these schemes, it would be for the sponsors of such schemes to consider any proposals for their extension.

My right hon. and learned Friend has announced, however, our intention to publish later in the spring a Green Paper on identity cards. This will set out and canvass views on the options for a national identity card scheme, including the possible benefits of identity cards in helping to combat under-age drinking.

Criminal Cases (Information)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he is considering for legislation to revise requirements for the disclosure of information by the prosecution and the defence in criminal cases.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering the requirements for disclosure by the prosecution and the defence and hope to be able to announce proposals quite soon.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the existing guidelines in Wandsworth prison in respect of an inmate regarded as a possible suicide risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from A.J. Butler to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 21 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to our recent Question about the existing guidelines in Wandsworth prison for coping with a prisoner identified as being at risk of self harm.

The Prison Service has introduced an updated strategy called 'Caring For The Suicidal In Custody' this year. Wandsworth prison was one of the establishments which piloted this scheme. It moves away from treating suicide as a medical responsibility to involve all staff working towards suicide prevention. Personal officer schemes give prisoners a direct link with a member of staff whom they can turn to in times of distress. All prison officers receive suicide awareness training as part of their induction programme.

Every prisoner who arrives at Wandsworth, as in other prisons, is screened on the initial reception and are interviewed by a medical officer. They are also shown the 'Misadvantages Video' which, using a realistic storyline, deals with the issue of custodial suicide.

When a prisoner is identified as being at risk of self harm, a standard form known as a F2052 SH is raised. He is then seen by the Residential Unit Manager and a Health Care Officer who make an initial assessment. If appropriate, the prisoner may be transferred to a shared cell where increased contact is used as a preventative measure, or he may be transferred to the Health Care Centre where he will be seen by a doctor. When necessary the prisoner is placed under observation. The desirability of continuous observation must be weighed against any possible psychological damage this may inflict.

When the standard form is raised a case review is held and a support plan devised. Further case reviews are held as needed. There are regular discussions with the prisoner as part of his daily supervision and to enable him to feel more in control of his situation. The standard form is only closed when the prisoner appears to be coping.

Wandsworth has established a 'Suicide Awareness Group' which co-ordinates the dissemination of information about best practice, reviews the incidents of self harm and death in custody, and inputs this information into the training programme for staff. This is a multi-disciplinary group which includes a representative of the Board of Visitors. Samaritans visit the prison weekly and have trained prisoners to be listeners. There are also strong contact with the visiting consultant psychiatrists.

Firearms Licensing

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 840, for what reasons he has made only the executive summary of the Association of Chief Police Officers report on firearms licensing available in the Library; and if he has had access to the full report as prepared by Superintendent Campbell Beattie, including the costings.

Mr. Maclean: Superintendent Campbell Beattie prepared his report for the Association of Chief Police Officers and the release of that report is a matter for it. The Home Office has had a copy of it.

Crime Statistics (Assault)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if all offences of common assault are always recorded as crimes for the purposes of compiling crime statistics; [14472]

(2) how many crimes of actual bodily harm and how many crimes of common assault were recorded in (a) the six months since 1 September 1994 and (b) the six months preceding 1 September 1994; [14473]

(3) what proportion of total crimes committed consist of common assault and what proportion actual bodily harm (a) in the last year for which recorded crime figures are available and (b) in the previous two years. [14480]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 March 1995]: Common assault is a summary offence and is therefore not included in the recorded crime statistics.

The available information relates to recorded offences of "other wounding" of which offences of assault occasioning actual bodily harm form part. However, such offences cannot be separately identified and it is not possible to identify what proportion offences of assault occasioning actual bodily harm form of the total number of recorded offences.

The latest available information shows that there were 99,482 recorded offences of "other wounding" in the six months to June 1994. Information after this date is not yet available.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to monitor the recording of crime by separate police forces and to asssess whether guidelines issued on this matter by the Home Department are followed. [14474]

Mr Maclean [holding answer 17 March 1995]: Statistics of recorded crime are based on rules for classification and counting which are standard for all police forces in England and Wales. A comprehensive set of counting rules is used by police forces in order to maintain the consistency of recording multiple, continuous and repeated offences. Whilst these detailed rules are issued centrally, many decisions still have to be taken locally about the recording and counting of criminal incidents.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary regularly looks into recording practices during force inspections. the Home Office also has a police statistics liaison officer who regularly visits statistics officers in the forces to discuss current issues and to monitor current procedures.

TRANSPORT

London Heliport

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the report of the London heliport study will be published. [15755]

Mr. Norris: I am placing a copy of the London heliport study report in the Library of the House today. The report sets out appraisal methodology and applies this to a number of sites, but makes no site recommendation. It is available for purchase by the public from the Department of Transport.

Transport Council

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 13 and 14 March. [15758]

Dr. Mawhinney: The Transport Council met in Brussels on 13 and 14 March. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council took votes on two proposals. The first was on a mandate for the Commission to negotiate on an air transport agreement with Switzerland. The mandate proposed was more restrictive than the Government would have wished, and accordingly I voted against it, as did my Italian colleague. Other member states voted in favour, constituting a qualified majority. The Council approved a mandate for land transport without a vote. Negotiations under these mandates will begin shortly.

The Council also voted on a draft directive requiring undertakings involved in the transport of dangerous goods by road, rail or inland waterway to appoint a dangerous goods adviser. The United Kingdom alone voted against the measure, on the grounds that it would not add significantly to existing safety legislation and that no proper cost/benefit analysis had been carried out. Other member states supported the measure. The Council was thus deemed to have reached a common position, by qualified majority.

The Council reached a common position on a proposed directive aimed at harmonising the certification of inland waterway boatmasters.

The Council adopted resolutions on the promotion of rail and combined transport within the Community; on working hours and training of goods vehicle drives, calling on the Commission to report as soon as possible on its study of these issues; and on the use of non-EC aircraft and crew within the Community, on which the Commission is also carrying out a study. Council conclusions on relations in air transport between member states and the US were agreed.

The Council discussed European Community shipping policy, but came to no agreed conclusions. I set out the UK's policy objectives of ensuring open and competitive markets worldwide for shipowners and traders.

Encouraging progress was made on a proposed regulation to apply the international safety management code for roll-on/roll-off passenger ships to all such ships using Community ports. The measure was referred back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for further discussion.

Other issues considered at the Council included trans-European networks, interoperability of the high speed rail network, transport research, airport ground handling facilities, the collection of maritime statistics, and relations with central and eastern European countries in regard to road and air transport.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable for the consideration of bids for the contract to build the channel tunnel rail link; when he hopes to announce the name of the winning consortium; and if he will make a statement. [14880]

Mr. Watts: The four bidding consortiums submitted their tenders on 14 March. The Department and its advisers have begun the process of evaluating the bids. It is our intention to announce a winner in the latter half of this year.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the explanatory documents, other than those that are commercially confidential, submitted by the four consortiums bidding for the channel tunnel rail link; if he will endorse requests for exhibitions in the Upper Waiting Hall to permit those consortiums to display their plans; and if he will seek to ensure that hon. Members with constituency interests in the project may receive briefings from each of the companies that have bid for the contract. [14888]

Mr. Watts: When we have announced the winner of the channel tunnel rail link competition, I am sure that the successful promoter will wish to give briefings and presentations, and I shall be happy to support that. In the meantime, however, the four bidders are competing for a Government contract in which very large amounts of public funds are at stake. In those circumstances, it would be improper for Ministers, Members of Parliament, officials or others to be subject to lobbying by any of the bidders. I appreciate that many hon. Members and their constituents have interests and concerns about the rail link; the proper forum in which to advance those is in the proceedings of this House on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill. We shall, of course, ensure that all undertakings given by the Government as the Bill progresses are binding upon the successful promoter.

Channel Tunnel Inspections

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the required inspection levels of channel tunnel vehicles referred to at paragraph 10.2.4 of his Transport report 1995. [14882]

Mr. Watts: All vehicles using the channel tunnel are liable to be searched. It would not be appropriate to detail the measures applied on security grounds.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when pulsed fast neutron analysis will be operational in respect of screening freight vehicles using the channel tunnel to the required inspection levels. [14886]

Mr. Watts: Pulsed fast neutron analysis technology is currently undergoing further developing work and it is not therefore possible to give a firm operational date at this stage. However, at the satisfactory conclusion of this work, Eurotunnel will be required to put PFNA in place at both UK and French terminals.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how Transec monitors and inspects the channel tunnel system; and if he will make a statement. [14887]

Mr. Watts: Under the terms of the Channel Tunnel (Security) Order 1994, the channel tunnel security inspectors give instructions, offer advice and make both announced and unannounced inspections to ensure that the required security standards are, and continue to be, met. It would not be appropriate to detail their operational methods or their findings on security grounds.

Pulsed Fast Neutron Analysis

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how pulsed fast neutron analysis, referred to in his Transport report 1995 facilitates screening of freight vehicles. [14883]

Mr. Watts: Pulsed fast neutron analysis can provide precise information about the composition and location of materials within freight containers. The technique can detect the presence of explosives, for example, by measuring characteristics specific to their composition.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the amount of the contribution from the United Kingdom towards the cost of pulsed fast neutron analysis [14885]

Mr. Watts: The British and French Governments have agreed to contribute to the cost of further development work by Science Applications International Corporation on PFNA technology. The total UK contribution is £4.2 million.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15029]

Dr. Mawhinney: I always do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Twyford Down Protests

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the total costs incurred to date by his Department in the legal action against Twyford Down protesters. [15118]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Denham, dated 21 March 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, what are the total costs to date by his Department in the legal action against Twyford Down protestors.

The total cost of legal fees to date in connection with action against trespassers on the M3 construction site is approximately £276,000 inclusive of VAT.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations underlie the necessity for road schemes which have been given detailed approval by his Department to be subjected to the same detailed appraisal and approval following their inclusion in the Merseyside objective 1 bid; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

Applications for European regional development fund grant under the Merseyside objective 1 programme, including road schemes, are appraised against project selection criteria agreed by the programme monitoring committee. The purpose of these criteria, which include value for money, job creation and economic benefit, is to ensure that only those projects best able to meet the aims and objectives of the Merseyside objective 1 programme receive approval. This assessment for ERDF purposes is necessarily a separate assessment from that carried out by the Department of Transport when evaluating local authority road schemes.

In any event most of the road schemes seeking funding under the Merseyside objective 1 programme are access roads to proposed development sites which do not fall within the Department of Transport assessment.

Civil Servants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of civil servants employed (a) his Department, (b) the agencies under his Department's responsibility and (c) public and other bodies under his Department's responsibility, for each year since 1979, divided into (1) full-time equivalents, (2) overtime, (3) casuals and (4) other; and whether he will also provide for each year his estimates of (A) civil service job reductions due to privatisations, (B) civil service job reductions due to contracting out, (C) civil service job reductions resulting from other transfer of responsibilities, (D) the total of all other staff undertaking work for the Department or its agencies without being categorised as civil servants, including external consultants, researchers, agencies secretarial staff and substitution and (E) total manpower expenditures, in 1994 prices. [15098]

Mr. Norris: The civil service covers the permanent staff of central Government Departments and next steps agencies. The staff of other bodies are outside the civil service.

The annual publication "Civil Service Statistics" gives details of the number of civil servants employed by my Department and its agencies, including full time equivalent staff and casuals, from 1993 onwards, and of staff leaving the civil service.

"Public Bodies", published annually since 1982, contains the staffing information for those bodies not covered by "Civil Service Statistics".

Details of running costs and civil service pay bill for my Department can be found in table 6 of my Department's annual report (CM 2806). Table 7 gives details of overtime from 1989–90 onwards.

Copies of all of these publications are available in the Members's Library.

The remaining information sought could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[1] The gross figures are net of any VAT refunds on contracted out services.

[2] This covers the pay costs, including employers earnings related national insurance contributions, of civil servants in running costs, as given in Table 7 on Department staffing.

[3] DVOIT was privatised on 17 December 1993.

[4] It is planned to privatise TRL during 1995–96.

[5] The Vehicle Inspectorate became a training fund on 1 April 1991. It previously operated under net running costs control.

[6] Outturn figures for 1993–94 have been amended since the publication of the Statistical Supplement to the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96, Cm2821.

[1] DVOIT was privatised on 17 December 1993.

[2] The Driving Standards Agency is non-statutory on-Vote trading body whose current expenses are not classified as public expenditure.

[3] The Vehicle Inspectorate became a trading on 1 April 1991.

[4] Figures for the Transport Research Laboratory and DVOIT are included within the Department of Transport (Gross Control Area) for the years 1989–90 to 1991–92.

[5] The Transport Research Laboratory is expected to be privatised early in 1995–96.

[6] OPRAF and ORR were set up after Royal Assent to the Railway Act 1993 on 5 November 1993.

Fares, London

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the fares a resident of Hornsey and Wood Green would pay for (a) a one-mile single bus journey, (b) a three-mile single bus journey, (c) a three-mile single London Underground fare, (d) a six-mile single London Underground fare and (e) a five-mile British Rail fare giving the percentage increase or decrease for each change compared with the change in the retail price index and index of average earnings on 1 March and 1 September for each year since 1965. [14439]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 15 March 1995, Official Report, columns 559–63.

Transport Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of gross domestic product was spent on (a) buses, (b) trains and (c) all public transport in (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994. [14816]

Mr. Norris: Gross domestic product is a measure of output and for public transport only contains expenditure on personal, non-business travel. However, a separate exercise has estimated users expenditure on various transport modes. For 1993–94, these are as follows:

Mode of transport	Users' expenditure £ billion	Percentage of GDP
Buses and coaches	3.2	0.6
Railways[1]	2.9	0.5
All public transport [2]	7.6	1.4
All GDP	554.8	100

[1] Excludes Tyne and Wear Metro.

[2] Buses, coaches, railways and taxis. The estimate for taxis excludes business use.

Lobbying Companies (British Rail)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department has issued to the British Rail Board relating to employment by the shadow rail franchise companies of lobbying firms in the run-up to rail privatisation. [14534]

Mr. Watts: None. The employment of lobbying firms is a matter for the British Railways Board.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what lobbying companies are currently employed by the British Railways Board and the six shadow rail franchise companies; and what is the value and duration of these contracts. [14535]

Mr. Watts: British Rail currently retains Westminster Communications Group Limited as consultants for strategic advice on political and parliamentary issues but not for the general purpose of lobbying Parliament. Union Railways, currently a BR subsidiary, employs the Public Policy Unit in a similar capacity.

Contract duration and costs are a matter for the British Railways Board.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon Stocks

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what access his Department has had to the findings of the Bushmills salmon research station on the impact of cormorant predation on salmon stocks. [13716]

Mrs. Browning: Ministry scientists are fully aware of the Bushmills Salmon research station studies on the impact of cormorant predation on salmon stocks. Results of these studies have been published in the international press and discussed at meetings of the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas north Atlantic salmon working group.

Fishery Contamination

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the areas around the United Kingdom where the Government have advised restrictions or prohibitions of the catch of fish or shellfish, including issuing advice against consumption.

Mr. Jack: For the protection of public health, shellfish growing areas are classified under EU legislation according to levels of microbiological contamination. There are 12 areas under the coast of England and Wales from which harvesting is currently prohibited; the Truro river is one of them.

A full classification list for England and Wales is in the Library of the House. One area in Scotland, the Eden estuary near St. Andrews, cannot be harvested. There are no prohibited areas in Northern Ireland.

Advice against consumption, where necessary, would be a matter for the Government's chief medical officer. Local Food authorities have powers under the Food Safety Act 1990 to take immediate action should any local problem be identified.

Veal Crates

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which year he expects veal crates to be banned throughout the EC.

Mrs. Browning: An EC ban on veal crates would necessitate amendment of EC directive 91/629 laying down minimum standards for the protection of calves. It would be unrealistic to expect those member states where veal crates are currently used to agree to any change overnight, but we will be pressing for any transitional period to be kept to a minimum.

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Spanish vessels which were British or Spanish registered have been prosecuted in each of the last two years for illegal fishing in British waters.

Mr. Jack: The numbers of Spanish registered fishing vessels and the UK-registered fishing vessels landing in Spain that were successfully prosecuted in the UK in 1993 and 1994 for fishing offences were:

	1993	1994
UK registered vessels	11	10
Spanish registered vessels	4	5

Animal Exports

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) who is responsible for enforcing the 15-hour maximum journey time for animals in transit; [14583]

(2) what assessment the Government have made of the effectiveness of enforcement of the 15-hour maximum journey time for animals in transit. [14584]

Mrs. Browning: The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1994 which, among other things, sets the maximum interval between the provision of food and water, is enforced by local authorities at county council level, assisted by the state veterinary service. Powers also exist in the order for the Ministry to enforce its requirements in certain cases. The welfare of animals during transport in another member state is enforced by the authorities in the country concerned, and procedures for co-operation between the Governments of member states have been established by the Community. We maintain regular contact on enforcement matters with the enforcement authorities in Britain, and with certain other members states of the EU in relation to exports.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants are available for the building, conversion or refitting of fishing vessels in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other EC countries. [14797]

Mr. Jack: In the United Kingdom, aid for the modernisation of the fleet is currently available only under the safety grant scheme operated by my Department for certain works necessary to obtain a safety certificate under the Fishing Vessel Safety Rules 1975. I have made it clear before that there is no sense in the Government financing grants to increase fishing capacity and efficiency when we are paying large sums of money to decommission fishing vessels.

The position in other member states is that they are free to operate aids for fishing vessels provided they comply with the conditions of article 92 of the treaty of Rome and the guidelines on the examination of state aids in the fisheries and aquaculture sectors. Under article 93 of the treaty, the European Commission has responsibility for keeping all such aids under constant review. They compile a full list annually but it is not published because it contains information supplied by member states on a confidential basis. The UK has pressed for this restriction to be lifted. Some summary information is available in the Commission's periodic surveys of state aids in the European Community. The latest of these covers 1986 to 1990 and is available in the Library of the House. Details of individual measures are, however, published from time to time in the Official Journal of the European Communities following Commission approval, as are details of unauthorised aids which the Commission is examining under the procedure set out in article 93(2).

Bovine Offal

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the proposals concerning the collection and disposal of specified bovine offals are being considered. [14415]

Mrs. Browning: The Government are currently considering proposals concerning the collection and disposal of specified bovine offal.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his Department commenced its consideration of the need to introduce a requirement for a specific dye to be used to identify specified bovine offal. [14416]

Mrs. Browning: Staining SBO has been required since regulations were introduced in 1989. Until now, the same dye has been used to stain all material unfit for human consumption, whether SBO or not. The Government began considering the need to introduce a requirement for a different dye to be used to distinguish specified bovine offal from other unfit material in the spring of 1994.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he received prior to establishing an inquiry into the need to introduce (a) a requirement for a specific dye to be used to identify specified bovine offal and (b) changes concerning the collection and disposal of specified bovine offal. [14417]

Mrs. Browning: The Government received representations from a variety of industry organisations and individuals regarding the collection and disposal of specified bovine offal prior to their considering the need (a) to require SBO to be stained with a specified dye and (b) for changes concerning their collection and disposal.

Polling and Public Survey Organisations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the employment of polling or public survey organisations by his Department during the current and previous financial years, on the organisations employed by his Department, on the values of individual contracts for these services, on the total amounts of money spent and on the purposes of the research undertaken by these organisations. [14505]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The Ministry employs, under contract, a number of survey organisations to undertake research into a variety of areas in pursuance of Ministry business. Before any survey organisation is used, the Department takes full account of the need for economy, efficiency and whether the organisation represents value for money.

In 1993–94, 27 organisations were employed at a total cost of £4.4 million. In 1994 1,995, 22 organisations were employed at a total cost of £3.9 million. It is not possible, for commercial reasons, to give the cost of each individual survey.

Details of the research proposals agreed by the survey control unit are published quarterly in statistical news.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15021]

Mr. Waldegrave: I always do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to reply to the letter of 18 February from the hon. Member for South Hams about John Sanders, a fisherman, of 91 Drew street, Brixham, south Devon; and what assessment he has made of the situation facing Mr. Sanders. [15416]

Mr. Jack: I replied to my hon. Friend's letter on 20 March.

Fertiliser Imports

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to prevent the breaking of fertiliser import quotas. [14925]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

Following an anti-dumping investigation by the European Commission, the Russian and Lithuanian authorities gave undertakings to restrict exports of ammonium nitrate fertiliser to the UK. It is the responsibility of the Commission to ensure compliance with these undertakings. We have asked it to take immediate action to remedy an alleged breach of the Russian undertaking.

EDUCATION

Schools (Expenditure)

14. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines her Department issues to head teachers regarding school expenditure on capital projects and the maintenance of capital reserves. [13255]

Mr. Forth: It is for local education authorities to decide on the progress of capital projects at county schools. As far as expenditure within the schools' own discretion is concerned, the Department's circular on local management of schools, circular 2/94, makes it clear that they may use their budget shares for capital projects. The circular also makes it clear that such schools may carry forward savings in order to create balances which may be used for capital projects in subsequent years.

Teachers' Pay Awards

20. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment concerning the funding of teachers' pay awards. [13261]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend is now completing consultations on her proposal to accept the School Teachers' Review Body's recommendations on teachers' pay for 1995–96. She has held discussions with many people, including my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she proposes to fund future teachers' pay awards.

Mr. Robin Squire: It will be for local education authorities and schools to fund future teachers' pay awards within available future funding levels.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received in respect of low morale among teachers arising from Government funding of the pay award.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about aspects of the funding of the teachers' pay award during the course of the consultation period following her acceptance of the recommendations of the School Teachers' Review Body.

School Budgets

21. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the proportion of an annual school budget that is a reasonable minimum to be kept in reserve. [13262]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment.

Exam Results

15. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will initiate inquiries into the reasons for the variation in the levels of success in GCSE and A-level exams between (a) Southend-on-Sea, (b) the rest of the county of Essex and (c) England as a whole; and if she will make a statement. [13256]

Mr. Boswell: The Government's policies are raising achievement at national level. At school level it is for the headteacher, staff and governors to take appropriate action.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of passes at each grade of GCSE, including ungraded, were achieved by pupils of 15 years for all GCSE subjects in 1993–94 and what was the total number of entries. [15105]

Mr. Forth: The percentages of passes at each grade of GCSE, including ungraded, achieved by 15-year-old pupils for all GCSE subject entries in England in 1993–94 were as follows:-

	Percentage
Grade A*	3
Grade A	10
Grade B	18
Grade C	20
Grade D	18
Grade E	14
Grade F	9
Grade G	4

Total entries 4,266,900.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the GCSE average point score of pupils aged 15 years and over, as defined in the DFE performance tables, who (a) achieved and (b) failed to achieve at least five GCSEs at each grade of GCSE from grades (i) A to G and (ii) A to F, giving the numbers of each group and its percentage of the whole for all secondary schools in 1993 and 1994. [15107]

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

Higher Education

16. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of young people are now entering higher education; and what was the figure 10 years ago. [13257]

Mr. Boswell: The Government's policies have led to record participation in higher education. Some 30 per cent. of young people now enter full-time higher education compared with around 14 per cent. 10 years ago.

Grant-maintained Schools

17. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools in Kent have been given grant-maintained status. [13258]

Mr. Robin Squire: There are currently 87 grant-maintained schools in Kent, the second highest total for any LEA area in England. A further five schools have applications approved or in the pipeline.

23. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much she expects to be paid to grant-maintained schools in special purposes—VAT—grant in this financial year. [13265]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is primarily a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. However, I understand that the agency's latest projected outturn expenditure on special purposes—VAT—grant this financial year is £16.4 million.

29. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children are currently educated in grant-maintained schools in Kent; and if she will make a statement. [13271]

Mr. Robin Squire: We estimate that over 60,000 pupils in Kent are currently being educated in grant-maintained schools—the second highest total for any LEA area in England. That is clear evidence of the extent to which Kent parents have appreciated the benefits of grant-maintained status for their children's schools.

Nursery Education

18. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what further assessment she has made of the demand for nursery education. [13259]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has set a target to provide, over time, a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish them to take it up. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the official task force have been consulting widely with a view to drawing up detailed proposals on the expansion.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is her policy in respect of the use of a voucher system for under-five nursery provision; [15189]

(2) what plans she has for the funding of nursery education for four-year-olds; and what consideration she is giving to a model based on a split between purchasers and providers. [15190]

Mr. Forth: In drawing up proposals to implement my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's commitment to provide, over time, a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish to take it up, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is examining all the options for funding, including voucher systems and a purchaser-provider split.

Truancy

19. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent representations she has received about truancy. [13260]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend receives representations about truancy from a variety of quarters. To provide practical help to schools, the Department is currently supporting locally-devised projects to a value of some £14 million in over 80 English local education authorities under the truancy and disaffected pupils programme of the grants for education support and training scheme 1994–95. In December we announced further support for some 90 projects in 1995–96, to a value of £15.6 million.

Literacy and Numeracy

22. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on progress in promoting the acquisition by school children of basic literacy and numeracy skills. [13264]

Mr. Forth: The Government's reforms—notably the national curriculum and testing—are already helping to raise overall educational standards, as recently confirmed by the chief inspector of schools. But the results of the national tests for seven and 14-year-olds in English and mathematics underline the need to continue to raise standards, which is why we have put more emphasis on basic literacy and numeracy in the revised national curriculum.

Ministerial Visits

24. Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she next expects to pay an official visit to Bedfordshire to discuss funding of local education authority schools. [13266]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to visit Bedfordshire.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list all the visits she has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members, without prior warning to those hon. Members, for any purpose connected with her departmental responsibilities. [15015]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I always do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official manner.

Education Funding, Sheffield

25. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions are taking between herself and the Sheffield education authority regarding education funding. [13267]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend and I routinely have discussions about a range of matters with a large number of local education authorities and with the bodies which represent them.

Schools and Local Industry Links

26. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to develop closer links between schools and local industry. [13268]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is promoting a wide range of initiatives, both departmentally and with outside organisations, aimed at developing closer links between schools and local industry.

Government of Schools

27. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the future government of schools. [13269]

Mr. Robin Squire: We have no plans to change the government of schools.

Education Funding, Northumberland

28. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement about education funding in Northumberland following the visit to schools in Northumberland by the Minister of State on 9 March. [13270]

Mr. Robin Squire: The education standard spending assessment for Northumberland is based on its spending needs and costs relative to those of other local education authorities.

Capital Projects

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, what guidelines her Department has issued regarding local education authority expenditure on capital projects. [13176]

Mr. Robin Squire: None. It is up to local education authorities to determine local capital expenditure priorities, and to make the best use of the resources available to them in the light of local needs. But LEAs will be aware of the national priority criteria, agreed with them 10 years ago, which the Department uses to calculate credit approvals.

Engineering

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her response to the representations that have been made to her by engineering bodies and others about the shortcomings of some mathematics teaching in primary and secondary schools, in relation to the education and training of engineers in Britain. [13379]

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 10 February, Official Report, column 438, which stressed the Government's commitment to higher standards in mathematics. The national curriculum will improve standards by establishing demanding expectations for both teachers and pupils. The full beneficial effects will only be seen in the medium term, however, as pupils progress through the curriculum: the first pupils to embark on the mathematics national curriculum as five year-olds in 1989 will not complete the curriculum as 16-year-olds until the year 2000, before moving on to further and higher education.

Meanwhile, the findings of the Engineering Council's review of the changing mathematical background of undergraduate engineers, which was published at the beginning of March, will helpfully inform current discussion about the teaching of mathematics.

School Funding

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will make a statement on the future responsibilities of local authorities in respect of the funding of schools which have not opted out; [15186]

(2) if she is considering removing the responsibility for funding all schools from local education authorities. [15191]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the present responsibilities of local education authorities for funding the compulsory years of education in the schools which they maintain. The official task force which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State established to draw up proposals to implement my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's commitment on the provision of pre-school places for four-year-olds in considering funding mechanisms as part of its work. The 1994 competitiveness White Paper announced that the Government would be looking at the practical implications of learning credits for all 16 to 19-year-olds. The Government have commissioned consultants to consider the costs and benefits of various options, and will be considering the next steps in due course.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her policy in respect of transferring the responsibility for funding all state schools to the Funding Agency for Schools. [15187]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice or guidelines she has issued to schools unable to meet the Government funding limits.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for governing bodies to deploy schools' budgets in the light of their own priorities and within the resources available to them.

Education Funding (Vouchers)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her policy in respect of the use of vouchers in the funding arrangements for the education of five to 16-year-olds. [15188]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce vouchers for the funding of education for five to 16-year-olds.

College Staff Pay

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) whether the Further Education Funding Council, England, collects data on the remuneration of principals and chief executives of colleges for which it has funding responsibility; [15271]

(2) what is the average salary increase of principals and chief executives of institutions funded by the Further Education Funding Council, England, in the years for which figures are available. [15272]

Mr. Boswell: FEFC guidelines on accounting policies recommend that colleges should disclose the emoluments of senior postholders in their accounts, which are publicly available. Information on average salaries for senior postholders is not collected by the Department. However, the FEFC has some data which might be helpful and has undertaken to write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Student Loans

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plan the Student Loans Company has to provide compensation to students who have suffered extensive delays in the processing of their loan applications. [15273]

Mr. Boswell: It is for the independent assessor to decide, in line with his terms of reference, whether compensation is appropriate in any case which may be referred to him for consideration. A copy of the assessor's terms of reference was placed in the Library on 19 July 1990.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate she has made of the number of schools unable to find extra funds by redeeming surplus places. [15047]

Mr. Robin Squire: None. We encourage local education authorities to remove surplus places, where that is practicable, thereby redeploying funds to be spent for the benefit of pupils rather than wasted on unnecessary capacity.

University and Industry Partnerships

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the total spend of her Department on encouraging research partnerships between industry and universities in each of the last 20 years. [14838]

Mr. Boswell: Public funds for English universities are distributed by the Higher Education Funding Council for England in the form of block grant for each university to spend at its discretion. Since its establishment in April 1993, the funding council has allocated some £20 million a year to reward institutions for income earned from work with external sponsors of research, including industry. Comparable figures for earlier years are not readily available.

University Contracts

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, how many university academic and research staff are now on permanent contracts and how many on short-term contracts; and what were the figures in 1990 and 1985. [14839]

Mr. Boswell: This information is not held centrally.

Responsibility for employment conditions of academic and research staff, however funded, rests with the universities as employers.

The Higher Education Statistical Agency, which has now assumed responsibility for collection of statistics on staff, students and finance in all United Kingdom higher education institutions, will identify, in its 1994–95 academic staff record, data on staff numbers in institutions on permanent or other form of contract.

The Universities Statistical Record has collected staff data on behalf of former UFC-funded universities, but does not distinguish by type of staff contract.

Small Schools

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to review the legislation preventing educational centres from being classed as independent schools if they have fewer than five children.

Mr. Robin Squire: The provisions of the Education Act 1944 governing the registration and monitoring of independent schools apply only to those educating five or more full-time pupils of compulsory school age. We have no present plans for legislation to extend those provisions to other independent institutions which are generally subject to separate monitoring arrangements.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what circumstances Her Majesty's inspectorate is able to inspect schools with fewer than five children.

Mr. Forth: All maintained schools, whatever the number of pupils, are required to be regularly inspected under the Ofsted inspection arrangements.

Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools also has the power to inspect independent schools. Independent schools are defined as institutions which provide full-time education for five or more pupils of compulsory school age. Independent institutions caring for children under compulsory school age are generally subject to separate monitoring arrangements.

Major Discretionary Awards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total expenditure, in each local authority, for major discretionary awards in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested for the academic year 1992–93, the latest for which data are available, is shown in the table. Financial year information is not available.

SCOTLAND

Lanark Blue Cheese

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is known to his Department about the actual health impact of Lanark blue cheese.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any reported cases of human illness which have been shown by laboratory investigation to be associated with the consumption of Lanark blue cheese, although not all cases of food poisoning are reported.

Pharmacies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on non-contract pharmacies in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 March 1995]: Any registered pharmacy in Scotland can provide pharmaceutical services outwith the national health service. Only pharmacies contracting with a health board and included in that health board's pharmaceutical list can provide NHS pharmaceutical services.

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement indicating what guidance the Scottish Office has issued to Scottish health boards in relation to the operation of mixed-sex wards in Scottish hospitals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The Scottish hospital planning notes draw together the best current knowledge of appropriate space, performance and cost criteria for health care needs. This guidance also provides advice on the grouping of beds in wards. It emphasises that careful consideration is needed when planning for accommodation within a range of single and multi-bed rooms. The position is being further reviewed.

The patients charter, published in September 1991, makes clear that patients have a right to be treated with dignity and respect and, in particular, with respect for their privacy.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional funding has been made available by the Scottish Office to Scottish health boards to phase out the operation of mixed-sex wards.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The allocation of resources to accommodation within hospitals falls within the financial freedoms available to NHS trusts.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many mixed-sex wards have operated in each health board in Scotland for each of the last five financial years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish health boards relating to the suitability of mixed-sex wards.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: None.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what rights exist under the patients charter for patients to object to being placed in a mixed-sex ward.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: While there are no specific rights at present under the patients charter in Scotland in respect of mixed-sex wards, the charter does state that patients have a right to expect that they will be treated with dignity and respect and, in particular, with respect for their privacy.

Health Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much each health board has spent on capital investment on GP practices in each health board area in Scotland for each of the last five years; and how much of this expenditure went on GP fundholding practices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The information requested is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Ayrshire and Arran Health Board

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what discussions the Scottish Office has had with Ayrshire and Arran health board relating to the concluding of its proposed contract with Irvine Care Ltd;

(2) what delays have occurred in concluding the contract between Ayrshire and Arran health board and Irvine Care Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: Contract negotiations between Ayrshire and Arran health board and its providers are a matter for the health board. The board has kept the Scottish Office informed of progress in this matter.

Delays arose as the board entered detailed discussions with the provider and the Community Health Care Trust on a range of issues including the application of the transfer of undertaking and protection of employment regulations.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when Ayrshire and Arran health board expects to conclude the contract for the replacement of Ravenspark hospital with Irvine Care Ltd;

(2) when Ayrshire and Arran health board now plans Ravenspark hospital to close; and when it plans the replacement facility for its patients to be opened.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The contract between Ayrshire and Arran health board and the provider is currently with Irvine Care Ltd for signature.

Ravenspark hospital will remain open until such time as replacement provision is available for present residents. Any formal proposal for the closure of Ravenspark hospital must be subject to a public consultation exercise and the final approval of my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what staffing requirement has been agreed by Ayrshire and Arran health board and Irvine Care Ltd for the replacement facility for Ravenspark hospital; and if he will indicate how this compares with current arrangements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: This is a matter for Ayrshire and Arran health board. Staff levels and skill mix form an integral part of the contract between the health board and Irvine Care Limited. The levels agreed are broadly comparable with existing provision.

Patients Charter

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on preparing, publishing and circulating the patients charter.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: Expenditure to date on the patients charter, including printing and distribution costs, is £41,729.

Civil Servants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of civil servants employed by (a) his Department, (b) the agencies under his Department's responsibility and (c) public and other bodies under his Department's responsibility, for each year since 1992, divided into (1) full-time equivalents, (2) overtime, (3) casuals and (4) other; and whether he will also provide for each year his estimates of (A) civil service job reductions due to privatisations, (B) civil service job reductions due to contracting out, (C) civil service job reductions resulting from other transfer of responsibilities, (D) the total of all other staff undertaking work for the Department or its agencies without being categorised as civil servants, including external consultants, researchers, agency secretarial staff and staff substitution and (E) total manpower expenditures, in 1994 prices. [15092]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The civil service covers the permanent staff of central Government Departments and next steps agencies. The staff of other bodies are outside the civil service.

Appendix 4 of the Scottish Office departmental report for 1995, CM 2814, gives details of the number of civil servants employed by the Scottish Office, its associated departments and agencies, including full-time equivalent staff and casuals—from 1993 onwards—while appendix 3 of the report gives details of civil service paybill. Equivalent information in respect of the Forestry Commission, for which I am also responsible, is given in table 13.3. of the report.

"Public Bodies", published annually since 1982, contains staffing information for those bodies not covered by civil service statistics.

The annual publication "Civil Service Statistics" gives details of the number of staff leaving the civil service. Copies of all of these publications are available in the Members' Library.

The remaining information sought could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Maternity Hospitals

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many maternity hospitals in Scotland are located on sites where acute hospital services are also located. [15100]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Wednesday 15 March, Official Report, column 633.

[13543]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Figures for the number of investigations carried out under section 79 of the Debtors (Scotland) from 1990 to 1994 are set out by Sheriffdom in the table. No sheriff officer has been deprived of his commission as a result of such an investigation.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department has taken to encourage the recruitment of more speech therapists by Scottish health boards. [14537]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My Department has asked those higher education institutes where speech therapists train to increase their intake of students.

It is worthy of note that the number of whole-time equivalent speech therapists employed in the NHS in Scotland grew from 255.1 to 550.6 between 1979 and 1994, an increase of 116 per cent.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish education authorities in relation to the numbers of speech therapists employed within the NHS. [14539]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many speech therapists have been employed by each health board in Scotland in each of the last five financial years. [14536]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for 1994 is shown in the table. Date for 1990–93 are published in "Scottish Health Statistics", copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines have been issued to the staff of Scottish Homes to prevent conflicts of interest in the establishment of housing associations by employees of Scottish Homes; and what safeguards have been established in order to protect the public interest when transfers of housing stock take place to housing associations involving the staff of Scottish Homes. [14576]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend issued guidance to Scottish Homes on the sale of assets and the letting of contracts, including those circumstances where groups of former staff are involved, which covered issues of propriety, value for money and quality of service. Scottish Homes took this guidance into account in determining its procedures for the disposal of its houses which includes a code of conduct for staff.

Transfer of Scottish Homes stock is subject to my right hon. Friend's approval and he will be concerned to ensure that such transfers will not take place unless he is satisfied that tenants are in favour and that their interests have been fully considered.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidance Scottish Homes has given to its staff in order to promote their involvement in the establishment of housing associations; [14546]

(2) what measures Scottish Homes have implemented to support their employees in establishing housing associations; [14547]

(3) how much revenue Scottish Homes has raised from the transfer of its housing stock to other landlords; [14550]

(4) how much revenue has been received by Scottish Homes for each transfer of housing stock by Scottish Homes; [14551]

(5) which housing associations have been established by staff employed by Scottish Homes. [14552]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

NHS Descriptions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS prescriptions have been issued (a) paid for by patients and (b) in respect of which the patients were exempt from payment in each health board area in Scotland in each year since 1968. [14540]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the information requested, which is only available from the financial year 1979–80, is rather lengthy, I have arranged for copies of the tables to be placed in the Library of the House. The number of prescriptions for which no charge was made at the point of dispensing includes items dispensed on presentation of pre-payment certificates.

Scanner

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his Department had with Ayrshire and Arran health board and the South Ayrshire hospitals trust prior to its reaching an agreement with Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. for the provision of a scanner; and whether the Scottish Office acceded to this agreement. [14542]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is aware of the proposal for the provision of a fixed magnetic resonance imager at Ayr hospital by Ayrshire Medical Support Limited. This is a matter for the South Ayrshire NHS trust and the company. However, officials are in contact with Ayrshire and Arran health board and the trust with a view to continuing to be fully informed about the project.

Dental Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been deregistered by their dentist since 1992 in each health board area in Scotland. [14819]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information supplied by health boards about patient de-registrations since financial year 1991–92 is contained in the table.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of staff within the NHS in Scotland is currently covered by performance-related pay. [14548]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of employees within the NHS in Scotland he estimates will be covered by performance-related pay at the end of (a) the current and (b) the next financial year. [14549]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The taking forward of local pay arrangements whereby pay is related to performance, whether individual or team-based or otherwise, is a matter for the individual employing authorities.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance the Scottish Office has issued to Scottish health boards relating to the closure of staffed beds for the treatment of mental health and psycho-geriatric patients. [14526]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has issued no such guidance. Guidance has been issued on the role and responsibilities of the NHS in continuing care and on the arrangements to apply for the transfer of resources to local authorities where patients have transferred from the NHS to more appropriate forms of care. The organisation and provision of all mental health services is determined by clinical assessment and local need. It is for the individual health boards to assess the needs for their population and to purchase mental health services accordingly. In so doing they are expected to have due regard for the Government's community care objectives and what is best for individuals.

Ballochmyle Hospital

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Ayrshire and Arran health board and the South Ayrshire hospitals trust spent on upgrading Ballochmyle hospital during the last five years. [14527]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of £2.1 million.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many wards are currently lying empty within Ballochmyle hospital; and if he will give a reason for these closures. [14528]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Five wards are currently vacant. The organisation of health provision is a matter for the health board and NHS trust to agree in accordance with their shared assessment health needs for the area.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much it cost the Scottish Office to prepare, publish and distribute its recent information leaflet on the impact of local government reform. [14529]

Mr. Kynoch: The total cost for the printing and distribution of the explanatory leaflet "Local Government in Scotland: The New Councils" was £138,660. This works out at less than 7p per household.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce and develop a code of conduct for civil servants.

Mr. David Hunt: In "The Civil Service—Taking Forward Continuity and Change", CM 2748, published on 26 January, the Government accepted the recommendation of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee for a new civil service code, to set out with greater clarity and brevity than existing documents the constitutional framework within which all civil servants work and the values which they are expected to uphold. The Government have published a draft code based on the Select Committee's proposal and aims to settle the text of the code after consultation with the Select Committee, civil servants, the civil service unions, and others.

Ms Hodge: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many vacancies in the civil service or its agencies have occurred since the publication of the civil service White Paper in July 1994; and how many of these vacancies have been (a) filled by internal candidates, (b) not been filled and (c) filled by external candidates. [14690]

Mr. Horam: Since the publication of the civil service White Paper in July 1994 there have been 36 vacancies in the civil service and its agencies at grade 3 level and above:

(a) 22 were filled by internal candidates

(b) 4 have not yet been filled (competitions are in train)

(c) 7 were filled by external candidates

(d) 3 were filled by candidates holding fixed term appointments to which they were recruited from outside the Service.

Information is not held centrally about all appointments to vacancies in Departments and agencies below grade 3 level.

Publicity

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000. [14597]

Mr. Horam: Total expenditure information on publicity, publications and pamphlets and details of individual publicity campaigns is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15019]

Mr. David Hunt: I always do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much each Government Department has spent on the employment of polling or public survey organisations during the current and previous financial years in connection with the citizens charter. [15192]

Mr. Horam: The table shows a breakdown of the charter unit's expenditure on the employment of polling or public survey organisations since its creation in 1991. Information on similar expenditure by other Government departments is not held centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the level of social fund expenditure; and how much will be spent administering the social fund in the 1994–95 financial year. [14685]

Mr. Roger Evans: Details on the estimated outturn on the social fund for the current financial year are in figure 25 of the departmental report: "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1995/96 to 1997/98 (Cm 2813)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on the administration costs of the social fund for 1994–95 is not yet available.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he intends to make to the discretionary social fund; and if he will make a statement. [15580]

Mr. Roger Evans: As in previous years, we have identified from our routine monitoring of the social fund scope for some minor improvements to the Secretary of State's directions and guidance. Details of the amendments and a revised copy of the Secretary of State's directions and guidance to take effect from April 1995 will be placed in the Library. A revised print of the social fund guide will be available from 27 March.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the application for severe disability premium by Miss J. Ellis of Willenhall will be decided by the social security commissioner local ref. ASB/9209: and if he will make a statement on the reason for the delay involved in this case. [14412]

Mr. Roger Evans: Miss Ellis's application is not yet with the social security commissioners. The adjudication officer has sought leave to appeal to the social security commissioners against the decision of the Wolverhampton tribunal dated 13 December 1994. The application is being considered by the tribunal chairman. I understand that if the application is refused the adjudication officer will seek leave directly from the commissioners.

The delays in hearing appeals in this case, and others like it, have been caused by various court decisions on the interpretation of the regulations.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of unemployment benefit are excluded from national insurance credits. [14921]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. National insurance credits are generally available to all recipients of unemployment benefit except for those people who work in excess of eight hours in a week. The Government announced in the White Paper on the jobseeker's allowance their intention to extend national insurance credits to those people who are unemployed but work for more than eight but fewer than 16 hours a week.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15020]

Mr. Lilley: I make every effort to inform hon. Members when I visit their constituencies on departmental business. Unfortunately, this courtesy was overlooked on the occasions of my recent visits to the Benefits Agency offices in Tottenham and Woolwich.

Family Credit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have (a) applied for and (b) been granted the child care allowance; of those granted the allowance, how many were already in work and receiving family credit before they applied for or received the allowance how many (ii) applied for and received family and child care allowance on moving from unemployment into a job; and when he expects take-up of the child care allowance to reach 150,000 families. [14884]

Mr. Roger Evans: In the five-month period to 28 February 1995, the latest date for which information is available, there were 24,600 claims for help with child care charges. Of these, 12,900 families are now receiving higher family credit awards as a result of the new help. Of those families receiving the extra help, 8,800 families were previously receiving family credit and 4,100 are new recipients of the benefit. It will take some time before the new help takes full effect as existing family credit recipients can claim the child care help only when their current 26-week award expires, while many potential beneficiaries need to find work of 16 hours or more and to make appropriate child care arrangements. We therefore expect that it will be several years before the help reaches its full potential.

Source: Five per cent. sample of Family Credit awards made between 1 October 1994 and 28 February 1995. These figures do not include claims made by 28 February but decided after that date.

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible, for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000. [14603]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 17 March 1995]: This Department was established in 1988. The information for years prior to April 1993 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 15 February 1994, Official Report, columns 692-96 and on 1 March 1994, Official Report, column 694, which lists the budget and costs of each of these campaigns in excess of £10,000 conducted by this Department.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the cold weather payments scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 20 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Cold Weather Payments.

The new Cold Weather Payments Scheme was introduced in December 1986. Prior to that, payments for cold weather were made at local discretion under Regulation 26 of the Single Payments Regulations and records pertaining to payments made on that basis are not available.

Statistics are currently collated on the basis of Cold Weather Payments made in the areas covered by each Benefits Agency District Office. Information is not held for Cold Weather payments made in Parliamentary constituencies.

Details of the total number of Cold Weather Payments made on a national basis since 1986–87, together with the total number of payments made in Scotland during the period 1 November 1993 to 31 March 1994 are held by the Statistical Holdings Section in the Library.

The Library also holds information on Cold Weather Payments made on the basis of Regional Areas in the years 1988/89, 1989/90, and by Benefit/District Office for the years 1986/87 and 1990/91 to 1993/94.

The totals for the current year will not be available until after 31 March 1995.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Correspondence

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library copies of his correspondence with the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) concerning the Al Fayeds. [14424]

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 9 March 1995, Official Report, column 286.

Arms Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 152, regarding public subsidy to the sale of armaments, in what form information on the breakdown of support is collected. [14906]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Information on the support provided is maintained on a basis which enables the annual totals to be broken down by the currency of finance and, since the terms of support are periodically revised, by reference to the amount paid or received under each of the several extant support schemes.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Darling: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of insider dealing cases for each year since 1980 that have been (a) reported, and (b) prosecuted; and how many resulted in convictions. [14879]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information on cases referred to my Department by the London stock exchange and prosecutions for insider dealing are included in the Companies Annual Reports—Companies in 1993–94—and those for previous years. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members, without prior warning to those hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15012]

Mr. Heseltine: I always try to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Guidance to Insurers

Sir John Stanley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) of 13 March, Official Report, column 395, if he will place in the Library the guidance issued to all United Kingdom insurers in December 1994. [15415]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of this guidance note together with others which my Department issued in 1994 to insurers on unrelated topics.

Small Firms, Northern Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small businesses have received assistance in Northern Ireland under his Department's small firms loan guarantee scheme in each of the last 12 months [14835]

Mr. Ian Taylor: No figures are yet available for February 1995 but the number of loans guaranteed in Northern Ireland under the Department's loan guarantee scheme in the previous 12 months are:

March 1994	2

WALES

Planning and the Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what powers for environmental planning he has transferred from local authorities to non-departmental public bodies since May 1979; and if he will make a statement on the ways in which this has benefited the environment in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No alterations to the arrangements for responsibilities have been made. It is the policy of my right hon. Friend that environmental planning and other planning matters should normally be dealt with locally and that other action would be taken only on the most exceptional basis.

Learning and Behavioural Difficulties

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how it is planned that emergency and respite care, previously provided at long-stay hospitals for those with learning difficulties and seriously challenging behavioural problems, is to be made available in each county in Wales following the closure of such hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Local and health authorities are responsible for planning and delivering these services.

Welsh Office circular 7/95, "Mental Handicap Strategy: Planning Alternative Care and Support for Individuals Living Unnecessarily and Inappropriately in Long Stay Mental Handicap Hospitals", stresses the need for authorities to consider how services currently provided on hospital sites will be provided in future years as resources are withdrawn from hospitals. We have made it clear that no long stay hospitals will close until appropriate arrangements for alternative care and support are in place.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will make it his policy that each individual with learning or behavioural difficulties, who has been a long-term resident at a long stay hospital in Wales, will have an individual assessment made of his or her personal, social and economic needs, by an appropriate multi-disciplinary team prior to being re-integrated into the community and that the individual, or an advocate on behalf of that individual, will have an opportunity to comment upon and agree to that plan before it is implemented.

Mr. Richards: It has always been the policy, under the Welsh mental handicap strategy, that individuals' needs should be assessed by a multi-disciplinary team. This is reinforced by the requirement to carry out assessments under section 47 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Full involvement of the individual concerned has always been a key element of these assessments. This is reinforced in Welsh Office circular 7/95 "Mental Handicap Strategy: Planning Alternative Care and Support for Individuals Living Unnecessarily and Inappropriately in Long Stay Mental Handicap Hospitals", which also urges authorities to consider how to resolve disagreements about plans for alternative care where these differ significantly from the wishes and preferences of individuals and their families.

Crematoria

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department will provide assistance in establishment a crematorium at Newtown to serve Mid Wales; and if he will make a statement. [15109]

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office funds local authorities through the annual local government revenue and capital settlements and, generally speaking, it is for individual authorities to decide how to apportion those resources between and within services in accordance with their statutory obligations and their own priorities. However, my Department's strategic development scheme could be considered as a potential funding source for a project of this kind provided it fulfilled criteria I have set for the scheme. Indeed my Department contributed £200,000 in 1993–94 to the development of a crematorium near Aberystwyth.

Regional Industrial Assistance

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the reason for the reduction of £29 million for regional industrial assistance in Wales between the 1994–95 planned allocation of £76.9 million and the 1995–96 plans totalling £47.9 million, as set out at figure 3.01 on page 18 of Cm 2815.

Mr. Redwood: As explained in paragraphs 3.06, 3.09 and 3.10 of the Welsh Office Departmental Report, Cm 2815, provision for 1995–96 is based on estimates of demand. Paragraph 3.06 also makes it clear that if the requirement exceeds forecasts than extra money will be made available.

Child Care

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to support the newly-organised kids' clubs network body in Wales, Clybiau Plant Cymru, from April; [14516]

(2) what funding the kids' clubs network in Wales received over the past five years from the children and families section of the Welsh Office. [14519]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 20 March 1995]: Under the Department's support for child and family services scheme, grants were awarded to kids' clubs network to promote out-of-school care provision in Wales as follows:

1991–92	24,022
1992–93	40,873

An announcement will be made shortly on their application for grant in 1995–96.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in each county council area are receiving financial support from Government funding, at local or Welsh Office level, in obtaining national vocational qualifications to improve the quality of provision in child minding in Wales. [14520]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 20 march 1995]: This information is not currently held.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered child minders there are in each county council area in Wales; and what changes there have been in the numbers over the last 10 years. [14524]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The latest information on the numbers of registered child minders relates to 31 March 1993. Information for 1984 to 1993 is given in the following table:

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further plans he has to support new out of school clubs which have been developed in the past two years by the training and enterprise councils in Wales out of their funding for school child care initiatives. [14518]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 20 March 1995]: This pump-priming initiative supports the setting-up and early operation of schemes which are expected to become self-sufficient within 12 months of commencement. Development workers will be in place until the end of the Initiative in 1996 and will continue to offer general guidance. A child care scheme, like any other business, can also seek TEC help with business skills training. All schemes have been aware from the outset that they would need to become self-sufficient.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what support he has given towards the funding of the National Childminding Association in Wales; [14522]

(2) what plans he has to provide further support for county child minding services managers in the light of the impending changes in local government. [14521]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The National Childminding Association has received grant towards the costs of its work in Wales and is shown in the following table:

	Core costs £	County child minding service managers £
1986–87	15,000	—

An announcement will be made shortly on their applicants for further funding in 1995–96 for both these purposes.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much money has been made available for TECs in Wales to provide out of school clubs under the schools' child care initiative in the last two years; and how much has been spent on each project supported under this programme; and [14515]

(2) if he will list all of the out of schools clubs being funded by TECs from the schools' child care initiative budget and the number of children benefiting in each scheme. [14517]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 20 March 1995]: A total of £153,000 was made available in 1993–94 and £800,000 in 1994–95. A list of the schemes, amounts allocated and child care places available will be placed in the Library of the House. The numbers of children using the schemes vary from day to day.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in each county council area are currently cared for by child minders; and what changes there have been over the last 10 years. [14523]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 20 March 1995]: Information on the total numbers of children cared for by child minders is not held centrally. The latest information on the number of places for children with registered child minders relates to 31 March 1993. Information for 1984 to 1993 is given in the following table.

Mr. Richards: From information supplied by the Gwynedd Family Health Services Authority, 6,864 adult patients have been deregistered since the beginning of September 1993; during that period no children have been deregistered.

This is a cumulative total and does not indicate how many of those patients subsequently registered with another dentist.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the numbers of dental patients de-registered from the NHS by their dentist during each of 1992, 1993 and 1994 for each family health service authority area in Wales. [15435]

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Summary Financial Statements

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to seek views on the proposed changes to the regulations governing summary financial statements. [16083]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My Department has today published a consultative document seeking views on a number of recommendations for changes to the regulations governing summary financial statements. The document recommends changes to the procedures for consulting shareholders, the content of the SFS and the drafting of the regulations. The proposals have been developed with the help of business and the accountancy profession. They aim to make the SFS regime simpler and a more attractive option for companies and encourage their more widespread use.

The Department believes that greater use of SFS would benefit both business and shareholders. For business, they offer opportunities for cost savings and improved shareholder communications. Shareholders—in particular, private investors—benefit by receiving company information in a form which is easier to understand and more relevant to their needs, while still retaining the right to receive full reports if they choose.

The Department is also seeking views on changes to the content of SFS issued by insurance companies, which are necessary to align with new EU rules.

Copies of the consultative document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Comments should reach my Department by 19 May 1995.

Regional Development Organisations

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has yet considered the business plans of the English regional development organisations; and what level of financial support he proposes to offer for 1995–96. [16084]

Mr. Eggar: I am pleased to announce a 53 per cent. increase in funding next year to attract inward investment to the English regions.

Grants for the eight regional development organisations will be £8.551 million in 1995–96, compared with £5.605 million for the previous year. The increase reflects the real importance that the Government attach to maintaining and developing Britain's place as the preferred location for investment in the EU. It is apparent from their performance that they continue to play an important and successful role in attracting inward investment to Britain.

I am also pleased to welcome the setting up of a new regional development organisation for the west of England which is planned to begin operation in the autumn.

RDOs have been working closely with my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau. The increase in funding will allow them to continue and step up their activity to attract further investment over the next year, in the face of European and global competition. I have allocated the grant aid as follows:

RDO	1995–96 grant £000	Percentage share of total grant
Northern Development Company (NDC)	1,650	19.3
INWARD Ltd. (in the North West)	1,378	16
Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association (YHDA)	1,400	16.4
West Midlands Development Agency (WMDA)	1,118.2	13.1
Devon and Cornwall Development International (DCDI)	895	10.5
East Midlands	800	9.4
London First Centre	1,000	11.7

Regional Supply Network

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about progress on the establishment of a regional supply network. [16085]

Mr. Heseltine: I am pleased to report that the regional supply network, which forms part of my Department's Business Links services, will become operational in April 1995. The network has, with funding from my Department, been established in fulfilment of a commitment in last year's competitiveness White Paper, Cm 2563. It will consist of 10 regional supply offices covering England and will complement similar existing operations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The network will:

help purchasers to find the most competitive sources of supply;

provide new business opportunities for competitive suppliers;

encourage the spread of best practice, supplier development and local chains;

highlight current deficiencies in local supplier capabilities, signpost firms to Business Links and other relevant business support organisations which will help to rectify such deficiencies.

Further information is contained in a leaflet on the regional supply network. I am placing copies in Library of the House.

Philippines

Mr. Amess: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the value to British companies of contracts signed following the visit of the Philippines President. [14419]

Mr. Ian Taylor: During President Ramos's visit, agreements to the value of approximately £700 million were signed with United Kingdom companies, including British Gas, Balfour Beatty, GKN, Stramit and GEC Alsthom. UK companies are pursuing a number of other projects in the Philippines and I am confident that following the President's successful visit, UK commercial interests in the Philippines will develop further.

Privatisation

Ms Armstrong: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in respect of each privatisation since 1979, including industries previously located at the Department of Energy, (a) the net equity proceeds to Government as a result of privatisation, (b) the market value at the end of the first day of trading and (c) the current market value. [15349]

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 31 October 1994, Official Report, columns 989–90. Information on market values at the end of the first day of trading is not held centrally by my Department. In a number of cases, information on market capitalisation at flotation and movement in share values at the end of the first day's trading is contained in the National Audit Office report on the relevant sale, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from the budget of his Department in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The detailed information cannot be provided except at disproportionate costs. However, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 10 February 1995, Official Report, column 429.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 567, if he will set out the targets for the different size bands of projects applying for assisted area grants. [14937]

Mr. Eggar: Target times for processing applications for regional selective assistance are as follows:

Application size band	Per cent.
Up to £25,000	80 within 35 working days
£25,000 to £100,000	75 within 45 working days
£100,000 to £1 million	75 within 60 working days
£1 million or more	65 within 100 working days

These targets are currently under review.

Channel 5 Television

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress made to date in obtaining international clearances for the revised Channel 5 frequency plan; which frequencies have now achieved clearances from which foreign jurisdictions; which are outstanding; and if he expects any impediments to final clearances being achieved by October. [15394]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am pleased to report that most of the revised Channel 5 transmitter plan has been cleared. The coverage of the service is now around 67 per cent. of the population compared with the base figure of around 50 per cent. which had been cleared as part of the original Channel 5 plan.

The Radiocommunications Agency has cleared internationally 20 out of 26 proposals put forward by the Independent Television Commission, including major transmitters such as Winter Hill, which will ensure that a major part of the north-west of England, including Manchester and Liverpool, will be able to receive the service. Achievement of the outstanding clearances will increase coverage of Channel 5 to around 70 per cent. of the population.

The following transmitters which have been fully cleared by all foreign Administrations:

Location
Winter Hill	Channel 48/Horizontal Polarisation
Croydon	Channel 37/Horizontal Polarisation
Sutton Coldfield	Channel 37/Horizontal Polarisation
Black Hill	Channel 37/Horizontal Polarisation
Burnhope	Channel 68/Horizontal Polarisation
Belmont	Channel 56/Horizontal Polarisation
Fawley	Channel 34/Horizontal Polarisation
Fenham	Channel 56/Vertical Polarisation
Tacolneston	Channel 52/Horizontal Polarisation
Durris	Channel 67/Horizontal Polarisation
Chelmsford	Channel 63/Horizontal Polarisation
Perth	Channel 55/Vertical Polarisation
Tay Bridge	Channel 34/Vertical Polarisation
Plympton	Channel 30/Vertical Polarisation
Huntshaw Cross	Channel 67/Horizontal Polarisation
Craigkelly	Channel 48/Horizonal Polarisation
Mounteagle	Channel 67/Horizontal Polarisation
Selkirk	Channel 52/Horizontal Polarisation
Cambret Hill	Channel 37/Horizontal Polarisation
Oxford	Channel 49/Horizontal Polarisation

The following are still under discussion between the Radiocommunications Agency and neighbouring administrations: the transmitters at Black mountain, Londonderry, Presely and Blaen Plwyf are under consideration by the Irish Administration; the Radiocommunications Agency is currently examining a response from the French Administration concerning the proposals for the Mendip and Redruth transmitters.

It is not possible to predict the outcomes or timing of the outstanding negotiations, although the discussions are taking place in a positive and constructive way.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the period of time by the European Union institutions to pay bills to British companies, with particular reference to small and medium enterprises. [15144]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The United Kingdom Government have not undertaken any assessment of payments by European Commission institutions to British businesses. However, I understand that the European Commission has established a maximum payment period of 60 days and has taken steps to improve compliance with this.

In addition, the Commission has said that it undertakes regular checks on the payment periods applied by its own departments.

Electricity Prices

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has that Northern Electricity plc misled the Director-General of Electricity Supply as to its true financial position during discussions last year about the appropriate level of electricity pricing; and what consideration is being given to appropriate action by his Department or other authorities to investigate the matters. [15164]

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the amount of money spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14620]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Details of my Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in the tables on pages 94 and 97 of my Department's annual report, Cm 2804, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what activities or discussion were forbidden under UN sanctions to the Iraqi-British Interests Group on its recent visit to Iraq.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Any prohibitions under UN sanctions apply to anyone from the United Kingdom visiting Iraq for trade purposes.

PRIME MINISTER

Objectives

Mr. Forman: To ask the Prime Minister how many of their objectives of April 1992 the Government have now achieved; and how many remain. [15354]

The Prime Minister: Since April 1992, the Government's policies have laid the foundations for sustained economic growth. Underlying inflation is down to its lowest for a generation, interest rates are among the lowest in the EC, unemployment is down by over 600,000 since its peak, exports are at record levels, and we are attracting more investment from Japan and America than Germany and France combined.

We have also pressed ahead with our reforms to raise standards in our schools, fight crime, improve the quality of care in the national health service and, with the citizens charter, make the public services more accountable to the taxpayers they serve. Our commitment to continuing improvement in standards in education has been achieved by the national curriculum, extension of objective testing of pupils, inspection of primary as well as secondary schools, continuation of publication of school results, and launch of the Teacher Training Agency. Parental choice has been enhanced by the further expansion of the grant-maintained schools and specialist colleges. The national health service is now treating 1 million more patients a year than since before our reforms began; our determination to ensure it is properly funded is borne out by the fact that, for every £1 spent on the service in 1979, over £5 will be spent in 1995–96. Against the backdrop of the largest fall in recorded crime for 40 years, we have introduced a range of measures designed to tilt the balance back in favour of the victims of crime, and ensure that crime does not pay, but criminals do.

The Government have made significant progress towards achieving a lasting peace in Northern Ireland. The ceasefire has now lasted for almost seven months, giving a new basis on which we can take the peace process forward. There has also been considerable success in winning the argument in Europe—especially in our attempts to make the community more open, outward-looking and decentralised.

The Government's objectives for the future remain as stated in the Gracious Speech on 16 November 1994, Official Report, columns 4-6.

Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minster what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science on 21 March.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total annual expenditure by the Prime Minister's Office on press and public relations for each year since 1987–88, including the estimated expenditure for 1994–95 and the budgeted expenditure for 1995–96. [14588]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 March 1995]: Expenditure on the No. 10 press office for each year since 1987 is as follows. There is no separate expenditure on public relations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Administration and Policy Formation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14250]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details of the Home Office's running costs and central services spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–298 are contained, respectively, in the tables in annexe 3 and annexe 1 of the Home Office Annual Report, Cm 2808, copies of which are available in the Library.

Nottingham Probation Service

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Sherwood may expect a reply to his letter dated 22 December 1994 about the Nottingham probation service. [14705]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: A reply was sent on 17 March.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the main conclusions of the joint inquiry by the football associations of England and Ireland into the violence at the England v. Ireland football match in Dublin on 15 February; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [15436]

Mr. Maclean: I understand that a report has been prepared by the Football Association and that the Football Association of Ireland will be producing a separate report. It is for the FA to decide whether to make its findings public.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that a national database is maintained in regard to those who commit sexual offences against children and young people.

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the introduction of a permanent register of convicted paedophiles and sex offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 February 1995]: A comprehensive database, known as Phoenix, which will cover all reportable offences including paedophile and other sex offences, is currently being developed by the Government on behalf of the police service. It will come into service for new offences in the late spring of this year, and the transfer of existing records to the new database will be complete by mid–1996. Phoenix is a development of exceptional importance to the police service, and I believe that it will meet many of the concerns which have led to suggestions for a separate register of certain convicted sex offenders.

Access to Police Records

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to grant Government Departments and agencies direct access to criminal records held on the police national computer for security vetting purposes. [16058]

Mr. Maclean: I have agreed with the Association of Chief Police Officers that limited direct access to the criminal record information held on the police national computer will be allowed to six Departments and agencies. The checks performed under this arrangement will be carried out strictly in accordance with the existing statement of security vetting policy announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 15 December, Official Report, columns 764-66. The Departments and agencies, which will be taking up the new service at differing times, are the Ministry of Defence, the Secret Intelligence Service, the Security Service, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority—acting also on behalf of BNFL plc, URENCO, URENCO (Capenhurst) Ltd. and the UK NIREX—the Home Office, and the Department of Trade and Industry.

The new arrangements will allow these bodies to improve the efficiency of their procedures through direct preliminary checks which would establish whether or not a subject has a criminal record, but would not give them access to the record itself. In the minority of cases where the preliminary search indicates that the subject has a criminal record, the Departments or agencies would continue to ask the national identification service—formerly the national identification bureau—to supply the record itself.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clive Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in relation to Ethiopians seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom. [15331]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: All asylum applications from Ethiopian nationals are considered individually in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, to the hon. Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill), Official Report, columns 755-56, how many of those port asylum applicants, refused both asylum and exceptional leave to remain in each year since 1992 but who have not yet departed voluntarily or been removed (a) are currently detained pending the outcome of an appeal or awaiting removal, (b) have been placed on restriction orders or granted temporary admission and (c) are known to have absconded. [14799]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information available is given in the table:

Number of applicants

	Position at 16 March 1995
Year of refusal	Detained pending outcome of an appeal or awaiting removal	Granted temporary admission	Absconded
1992	0	65	10

1994	78	3,950	280
Total	91	4,830	580

M11 Link Road Protests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of arrests made to date in connection with protests against the M11 link road; how many were made under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994; what were the reasons for the arrests; and what have been the outcomes of these cases. [15336]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Wildlife Sales Offences

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police forces monitor relevant trade journals to identify potential wildlife sales offences. [15048]

Mr. Maclean: This is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police and is not recorded centrally.

Road Death Inquests

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many inquests into road deaths have been held in the presence of a jury, in each year from 1978 to 1994; [14856]

(2) what statistical records his office holds for the length of time elapsing between death on the road and an inquest taking place for each year from 1984 to 1994; [14858]

(3) how many inquests into road deaths have been held after summary charges, in each year, by county, from 1978 to 1994; [14857]

(4) how many inquests have been reconvened after a guilty plea in respect of road deaths in the Crown court for each year from 1984 to 1994. [14859]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information collected on deaths reported to coroners is published in an annual Home Office Statistical Bulletin. The latest bulletin, "Statistics of Death reported by Coroners: England and Wales, 1993", issue 7/94, was published on 21 April 1994 and is available in the Library. Specific information on road deaths is not collected separately.

Fear of Crime

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what recent representations he has received from women's organisations on the subject of crime and the fear of crime; [14860]

(2) if he will give details of meetings he has had with representatives of women's organisations to discuss crime and the fear of crime. [14863]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is as follows.

On 11 March 1994, the Women's National Commission, an advisory committee to the Government, forwarded a copy of its 1991 recommendations on women in prison, the operation of the criminal justice system and the management of prisons as they affect women in particular, to find out how far current practice reflected what was recommended.

On 15 March 1994, the Conservative Women's National Committee forwarded recommendations on law and order issues. Matters raised included juvenile crime, media portrayal of crime, drug abuse, police-community partnerships and sentencing and prisons.

On 14 November 1994, Mothers against Teenage Criminal Hooligans—MATCH—forwarded for comments a survey of the views of some 500 people about youth crime.

A number of representations have also been received from individuals and organisations working, or experiencing, the problems associated with domestic violence.

On 15 November 1994 the Minister of State met Mothers Against Murder and Aggression—MAMAA—which was formed in the wake of the Jamie Bulger murder to address issues of abuse and violence against and by children and young people.

On 7 December 1994 the Home Secretary addressed a plenary meeting of the Women's National Commission. His speech covered juvenile crime, domestic violence and victims and witnesses of crime.

Police Service Employees

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will give details of the number of (a) women and (b) men employed at each grade within the police service, for each police authority for every year since 1989 with details of their responsibilities. [14862]

Mr. Maclean: Information on the duties to which officers are assigned could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Tables giving the information requested on police ranks have been placed in the Library.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of Asian and Afro-Caribbean officers, both male and female in each police authority, in each year since 1989; and what are the figures as a percentage of officers employed in each area. [14398]

Mr. Maclean: The information for 1992 and 1993 is provided in the table. Figures for earlier years are not held centrally.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14239]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Details of my Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in table 4 of my Department's annual report, Cm 2809, copies of which are available in the Members' Library.

HEALTH

Birth Defects

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what studies her Department has made of the side-effects of chorion villus sampling for Down's syndrome; and if she will take steps to ensure that all prospective parents are provided with information on the possibility of abnormalities resulting from the tests; [14455]

(2) how many CVS tests were provided under the NHS in each of the past five years and at what cost; and if she will list the manufacturers of these tests. [14457]

Mr. Sackville: The results of a major Government-funded Medical Research Council clinical trial conducted in a number of international centres and examining the use of chorion villus sampling were published in 1991 and the findings published in The Lancet[1], copies of which are available in the Library. This also highlighted the possibility of a risk of limb reduction deformities associated with the procedure. Health professionals involved in conducting CVS would be aware of these findings and therefore in a position to advise parents of the potential risks involved, including that of miscarriage.

Information is not available centrally about the number or cost of the tests. The procedure involves tests undertaken usually in national health service laboratories, on placental tissue taken from the woman by CVS. There are therefore no manufacturers of these tests.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children with Down's syndrome were born in each of the past 10 years. [14456]

Mr. Sackville: This information is shown in the table.

Notification of babies born with Downs Syndrome in England and Wales, 1984–1993

1990	415
1991	440
1993	311

Data were obtained from the national congenital malformation notification scheme. For the years given, the data were collected for live and stillbirths where the malformation was identified at or within 10 days of birth.

Independent Living

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Government will continue to identify an element for support of independent living within the revenue support grant for local authorities from 1996–97; and if she will make a statement. [15053]

Mr. Bowis: Currently, an element of the special transitional grant for community care is identified as relating to the former independent living fund. It is not separately ring-fenced and local authorities are free to use it for any community care service. Whether former independent living fund resources will continue to be separately identified after the special transitional grant ends has not yet been determined.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will encourage and fund research into the therapeutic use of cannabis with double blind trials designed to established the efficacy or otherwise of this form of treatment. [15069]

[1] Medical Research Council European Trial of Chorion Villus Sampling, The Lancet, vol 337: 1491–1499, 22 June 1991.

Mr. Bowis: The main agency through which the Government support medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. It is always willing to consider scientifically sound proposals. As for any other unlicensed product, a sponsor seeking a product licence for cannabis would need to present supporting data to the Medicines Control Agency, which would evaluate any application made to it in the normal way.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the adequacy of the provision of nursing homes for poor elderly people; and what information she has on the equivalent provision in each of the other European Union states. [14914]

Mr. Bowis: Matters of quality and quantity of local nursing homes, irrespective of the income levels of residents, are for local commissioning authorities. We do not hold information on nursing homes in other European countries centrally.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for granting prescription charge exemptions to people with splenectomies who require prophylactic doses of penicillin. [15372]

Mr. Malone: None.

General Practitioner Trainees

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applicants there were per GP trainee post (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) broken down by each FHSA in the current year and for each of the last 10 years. [15364]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Smoking

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is taking to reduce levels of cigarette smoking among people on low incomes. [15380]

Mr. Sackville: The White Paper "The Health of the Nation" sets a target of 20 per cent. for adults smoking by the year 2000. In view of their higher smoking rates, it is clearly essential to reach people on low incomes if this is to be achieved.

This will be done through the comprehensive programme set out in the White Paper and the action plan "Smoke Free for Health" including health education, action on price, advice from general practitioners and other health professionals and proper controls on advertising and promotion.

Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Consultation on Changes to Health Services

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to reduce the requirement on health boards for formal consultation when major changes to health services are planned. [15362]

Mr. Malone: None.

Sight Tests

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects consultations with representatives of the Association of Optometrists on the GOS sight test fee for 1995–96 to begin. [15873]

Mr. Malone: Consultations on the 1995–96 national health service sight test fee will begin shortly with the Optometric Fees Review Committee, which represents the optometric profession.

Births, Marriages and Deaths

Mr. John Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she intends to make to the representations to her from the London borough of Lambeth in relation to the reform of the system for registering births, marriages and deaths. [15137]

Mr. Sackville: The London borough of Lambeth has been advised that the Government intend to introduce legislation to implement the proposals in the White Paper entitled "Registration: proposals for change", Cm 939, when parliamentary time allows.

Emergency Services, Carshalton and Wallington

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the provision of accident and emergency services at hospitals serving the constituency of Carshalton and Wallington. [15268]

Mr. Sackville: Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority is responsible for purchasing accident and emergency services for Carshalton and Wallington residents. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Harry Cowd, chairman of the health authority, for details.

Complaints Procedures

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish her response of the Wilson report on patients' complaints. [15829]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health published today the Department of Health's response to the report of the review committee on the national health service complaints procedures, chaired by Professor Wilson, vice-chancellor of Leeds university, in a document "Acting on Complaints". Copies of this document will be placed in the Library.

Measles Rubella Immunisation Campaign

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of immunisation coverage has been achieved by the measles rubella campaign; and what impact this has had on the number of cases of measles. [15853]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Very high immunisation coverage has been achieved by the campaign so far, and efforts are still being made to reach those children who have not yet been immunised. Coverage in England is 92 per cent. overall; 77 per cent. of districts have immunised at least 90 per cent. of children, with 22 per cent. achieving coverage of 95 per cent. or more; 94 per cent. of school children in Northern Ireland have been immunised and 88 per cent. in Scotland and Wales.

The campaign has led to a fall in measles notifications and in confirmed measles cases. There were 1,774 measles notifications in England and Wales in January and February 1995 compared with 2,476 in the previous two months. In Scotland, where the campaign is not yet complete, there were 283 cases in January and February compared with 437 in the previous two months. About half of the suspected measles cases in England and Wales have been investigated with laboratory tests. There were only nine confirmed measles cases in January and one in February; one further case, a contact of the February case, is being investigated and may be confirmed. This compares with 101 confirmed cases in the previous two months. There have been no confirmed cases in Northern Ireland this year.

Psychiatric Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the yearly cost of a psychiatric bed in the national health service for each of the last five years. [14820]

Mr. Bowis: The information is as follows:

Average yearly cost per patient for Psychiatric specialities

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Directly managed units and national health service trusts—England	37,755.60	41,960.40	43,924.10

Source:

Notes:

1. Figures for 1993–94 are provisional.

2. Figures prior to 1991–92 are not comparable with later years because there were changes in accounting practice and included only direct costs whereas figures from 1991–92 include overheads and capital charges.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role is currently played by the social services inspectorate in terms of establishing whether there are in any particular area reasons for the continued direct provision of local authority part III accommodation. [14707]

Mr. Bowis: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of people employed in care homes provided under the National Assistance Act 1948 in each year since 1979. [14706]

Mr. Bowis: The information available centrally relates to whole-time equivalent numbers of staff directly employed by local authority social services departments in residential care homes. Figures for 1979 to 1993 are published in the 1992 and 1993 editions of the "Local Authority Social Services Statistics: Staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions during each year since 1984 it has been necessary to place residents in local authority part III accommodation as a direct result of the closure for whatever reason of a private voluntary care home. [14775]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Out-Patient Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients failed to attend out-patient appointments in England in each year since 1992; and if she will make a statement. [15110]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is given in the table. Guidance on reducing non-attendance has already been issued to the national health service. This will be supported by further guidance on reducing waiting times. We expect the introduction of the new patients charter standard for out-patient appointments will further encourage purchasers and providers to tackle the problem of non-attenders.

Non-attenders	5,068,256	5,105,459	5,188,838
Total appointments	42,009,254	42,632,497	43,421,464
Proportion of patients who did not attend	12.1 per cent.	12.0 per cent.	11.9 per cent.

Notes:

1. Includes patients referred by a general practitioner or another consultant.

2. Excludes patients who gave advance warning of their non-attendance.

Hostels

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State of Health (1) what account has been taken in drawing up her proposals for amending regulations concerning hostels accommodating people aged 16 to 25 years of the conclusions of investigations into where young people leaving care have been subject to abuse. [14789]

(2) what mechanisms will exist under the amended regulations governing hostels for people aged 16 to 24 years for (a) checking the suitability of those running hostels and (b) checking the suitability of the premises. [14790]

Mr. Bowis: The proposals, currently being consulted on, take account of other provisions of the Children Act and regulations which will adequately safeguard the welfare of the young people.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give a breakdown by member of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority of the sums identified in its account for 1993–94 as (a) £55,546 for remuneration of authority members and fees paid to members including the chairman and (b) £30,385 paid to members in travel and subsistence. [15438]

Mr. Sackville: Payments made to members of the authority in 1993–94 are as shown in the table:

	Fees £
Prof. Sir C. Campbell (Chairman)	8,214.00
Lady Diana Brittan (Deputy Chairman)	5,304.00

Lady Julia Tugendhat	1,408.00
Christine Walby	250.00
Prof. D. Whittingham	2,003.00
Total members fees	55,546.00

Note:

1. Expenses for travelling cost, on average were £1,446.90 per member per year.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the consistency of the impartiality of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority with her Department's target that in the current financial year 70 per cent. of its income should be derived from licence fees. [15440]

Mr. Sackville: Parliament decided that a proportion of the cost of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's licensing function should be recovered by charging fees to licensed centres. The principle under which the costs of regulation are met by bodies such as the authority is well established. Unlike other similar organisations, the authority does not recover all of its costs through fees; the taxpayer currently meets 30 per cent. of its costs. The licence fees charged are determined by the authority with the approval of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Treasury.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the background to the circumstances identified in the foreword to the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority account for 1993–94 and which led to (a) the proposal not to renew the licence of one centre and (b) revoke the licence of a linked centre; what was the outcome of those proposals; and what was the legal cost. [15437]

Mr. Sackville: Licensing decisions under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act are matters for the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. The authority decided in June 1994 not to renew the licence of one centre and to revoke the licence of a linked centre. The circumstances of this case cannot be disclosed because the authority's decisions are at present the subject of an appeal. The legal costs of this case are on-going.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give a breakdown of the different professional fees which gave rise to the total expenditure of £89,763 on such fees identified in the annual account 1993–94 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. [15439]

Mr. Sackville: Professional and administrative fees set out in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's accounts for 1993–94 comprise:

Legal costs re licensing problems	72,663.50
Payroll costs	913.18
Accountants	6,979.93
Miscellaneous (computer consultants, surveyors fees for rates appeal, legal fees for new lease, personnel consultants, refund on audit fees)	9,206.63
	89,763.24

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Staff (Job Offers)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney General how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1st February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

The Attorney-General: Owing to a clerical error in my answer of 14 June 1994, Official Report, column 368, an incorrect date was given for the reported approach at the Serious Fraud Office at grade 6 level under section 14 of the rules. The date should have been 1992 not 1993.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the amount of money spent on central administration and policy formulations by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14621]

Mr. Newton: Details of my Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years in question are contained in the relevant report of expenditure plans, Cm. 2820, page 102 a copy of which is available in the Members' Library.

DEFENCE

Weapons Establishments Sites

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the licensing of atomic weapons establishments sites; and if he will make a statement. [15649]

Mr. Freeman: Agreement has been reached between the Government, the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate and Hunting-BRAE Ltd., the operating contractor of AWE, that the AWE sites at Aldermaston and Burghfield should be licensed during 1997 under the provisions of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965. Work has already started on achieving this.

Pilot Training

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many multi-engine pilots are trained each year by the RAF to operational conversion unit input standards; for what reason a contract for training six such pilots is being placed within the commercial sector, as set out in "Future Purchase LC1/0012"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The current RAF requirement is to train 61 multi-engine pilots to operational conversion unit input standards each year.

The defence costs study identified a number of ways in which flying training could be carried out more cost-effectively; for example, by the increased use of civilian instructors and contractors. The study concluded that multi-engine pilot training was an area where commonality of syllabus existed between the military and civil sector, and proposed that consideration should be given to transferring this part of RAF flying training to a civilian flying training school. My Department therefore intends to place a contract to train six RAF multi-engine pilots with the civil sector to assess the viability of this strategy.

Fraud

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department's police fraud squad has examined the placing of shipping contracts in the period 1980 to 1990; and if he will make a statement. [14409]

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence police fraud squad investigated between 1988 and 1990 allegations relating to the placement of Ministry of Defence shipping contracts. The investigation was inconclusive, however; no criminal charges were brought, and the case is now closed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department's police fraud squad is currently taking in investigating claims of fraud during the chartering of shipping in the Gulf War; and what actions are being taken.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence police fraud squad is investigating a number of matters arising from the chartering of shipping during the Gulf war. As my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces said in his written answers on 9 March, Official Report, column 349, some of these remain the subject of civil or criminal action.

Gordon Foxley

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate his Department has made of the total value of procurement orders which were not given to British defence manufacturers as a result of the activities of Gordon Foxley. [14411]

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to say with any certainty what impact Foxley's corrupt activities in the field of fuse manufacture had on British defence manufacturing industry.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department is still investigating the extent of the fraud carried out by Gordon Foxley; and if he will make a statement. [14410]

Mr. Freeman: Investigations into Gordon Foxley's activities are continuing. Part 5 of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General into the risk of fraud in defence procurement—HC 258 Session 1994–95—published on 10 March 1995, contains a full account of my Department's investigations to date.

Biological Weapons

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the continued existence of biological weapons in the sea surrounding the British Isles following the end of the second world war; how many biological weapons remain deposited in the sea; what types of weapons are involved; in what locations they are; when the weapons deposited were last inspected; what evidence there is of leakage; and what steps he is taking to ascertain the circumstances of their disposal. [14406]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no knowledge of any biological weapons being dumped in the sea surrounding the British Isles.

Troop Exchange Programme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his Australian counterpart concerning the troop exchange programme between the United Kingdom and Australia; and if he will make a statement. [14405]

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had no such discussions.

Housing Stock (Privatisation)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the role of NatWest Markets in the development of proposals for the privatisation of his Department's housing stock; [15486]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23, regarding his Department's housing stock, whether he will state the possibilities under consideration by his Department for transferring the married quarters estate to the private sector; and if he will make a statement; [15487]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23, regarding his Department's housing stock, what proposals he has considered for the duration of leasehold to be held by his Department following the privatisation of his Department's housing stock; [15474]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23, regarding his Department's housing stock, what provision he has made for the protection of (a) the welfare and (b) the rights of tenancy of service men and women in developing proposals for the privatisation of his Department's housing stock; [15477]

(5) if all moneys accrued from the privatisation of his Department's housing stock will remain within the Department's budget; [15478]

(6) pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23, regarding his Department's housing stock, what is his estimate for consultancy and legal fees for the completion of proposals for the privatisation of his Department's housing stock; [15480]

(7) when he expects to announce proposals for the privatisation of his Department's housing stock; [15481]

(8) pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23, regarding his Department's housing stock, if proposals for the privatisation of his Department's housing stock will be open to consultation by members of the armed services and other interested parties; [15482]

(9) pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23, regarding his Department's housing stock, what assessment he has made of potential security risks in considering proposals for the privatisation of his Department's housing stock. [15483]

Mr. Soames: As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) on 8 December 1994, Official Report, column 303, we intend to develop proposals for the possible transfer of the married quarters estate to the private sector, on the basis of initial work undertaken for us last autumn by NatWest Markets. We are close to completing the competitive selection of financial advisers to assist us in this process. Our consideration of the possibilities for such a transfer is still at an early stage, and a good deal of further development and evaluation is needed. It would therefore be premature at this stage to speculate as to what proposals may emerge from this work, what their details might be, what further independent professional advice might be required to assist the development of these proposals, and what the financial and other implications of such proposals may prove to be. We envisage that we will be in a position to make a further statement on these issues in the second half of the year, and any proposals which we may bring forward in due course will be the subject of appropriate consultation. In the course of our on-going consideration of the possibilities, we shall continue to pay particular attention to the operational and security requirements of the services, and to the welfare and interests of service personnel and their families.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the cost of urgent and unavoidable repairs to be made to his Department's housing stock; and how much has been spent on urgent and unavoidable repairs in each of the last 10 years. [15475]

Mr. Soames: No central record is kept of this information, but the defence housing executive will take on responsibility for the management and maintenance of the married quarters estate from 1 April, and the cost of urgent and unavoidable repairs will be met from within its overall budget. We expect that the improved housing management for which the executive is being established will in due course reduce the incidence of requirements for such repairs.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23, regarding his Department's housing stock, what estimate he has made of the financial value of his Department's housing stock; and if he will make a statement. [15476]

Mr. Soames: The value which might be realised in any transfer of the married quarters estate to the private sector will depend on a range of factors, which we will be able to determine only as detailed proposals are developed.

David Hart

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of Mr. David Hart in the development and execution of proposals for the privatisation of his Department's housing stock. [15485]

Mr. Soames: Mr. David Hart is one of several independent advisers who have contributed to the development of proposals for the married quarters estate. His involvement has been, and continues to be, very valuable.

Budget Reductions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of future reductions in his Department's budget. [15479]

Mr. Soames: The latest plans for the defence budget ensure that British forces will continue to be able to fulfil their wide range of tasks with improved capability. In addition they provide sufficient resources to meet the costs defence will face in moving to the new smaller and more efficient support structures arising from the defence costs study.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 609, in which cities the memoranda of understanding with Indonesia were signed, of September 1983, March 1984, April 1986 and November 1991, and in each case who were the signatories.

Mr. Freeman: All of the memoranda of understanding referred to were signed in Jakarta by representatives of the Government of the Republic of Indonesia and Her Majesty's Government.

Gulf War

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain and evaluate the report to the Chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs of the United States Senate by the United States General Accounting Office on outstanding questions on possible exposure to reproductive toxicants of the allied forces during the Gulf war, in the report coded GAO/PTMD 93.30, dated August 1994. [14582]

Mr. Soames: A copy of this report was obtained shortly after its publication in the United States and was reviewed by scientific and medical specialists within my Department, as is all material relating to the alleged Gulf war syndrome.

Pensions

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what he estimates would be the cost to the Exchequer if the widow of a service man, whom she married after he had left the service, was paid a pension relating to his years of service for marriages before 1978. [14395]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no record of the number of marriages which were contracted before 1978 by former service men after their retirement, and it is not possible, therefore, to provide an estimate of the cost of awarding pensions to their widows in such cases.

Female Crews

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many sea-going vessels of the Royal Navy have undergone internal refitting to accommodate female crew members; and how many berths were provided and at what total cost in the last five years. [14910]

(2) how many sea-going vessels of the Royal Navy have had internal alterations made to remove accommodation designed for female members of crews; and what is the number of berths removed and at what total cost in the last five years. [14908]

Mr. Soames: Over the last five years, 36 Royal Navy ships and five Royal Fleet Auxiliaries have been converted to accommodate female personnel. This has resulted in 1,313 berths becoming available for female personnel. All conversion work has been carried out as part of major refit programmes and costs of this specific work are not separately identified. In the same period, none has undergone any reversion work.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14247]

Mr. Soames: Details of defence operating costs for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in table 4 of my Department's annual report, Cm 2801, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of (a) service personnel and (b) civilians employed at each Ministry of Defence establishment in Cornwall for the last year for which figures are available. [15031]

Mr. Soames: While it is not my Department's policy to give the number of employees at individual establishments, at 1 July last year there were 3,904 service and 611.5 full-time equivalent civilian personnel employed in the county of Cornwall.

Service Housing, Cornwall, South-East

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of Ministry of Defence housing units of accommodation for each location in the Cornwall, South-East parliamentary constituency; and how many are currently unoccupied, giving the reasons for their non-occupation. [15032]

Mr. Soames: As at 31 December last year, my Department owned 199 houses in the Cornwall, south-east constituency, of which 10 were vacant. Of the vacant properties, six were allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly and four were undergoing works. All are located at Torpoint.

Naval Training

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the detailed arrangements for the transfer of Royal Navy sea training from Portland to Plymouth in September. [15033]

Mr. Soames: Operational sea training will end at Portland on 19 July 1995. Flag officer sea training will then move his organisation to Plymouth, where his headquarters will be located in HMS Drake. Full operations should start on 11 September 1995.

TRANSPORT

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14251]

Mr. Norris: Details of my Department's expenditure on central administration for the years 1989–90 to 1997-298 are contained in figure 2 of my Department's annual report, column 2806, copies of which are available in the Members' Library. We cannot separately identify the costs of policy formulation.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received urging the inclusion in the driving test of a test of the ability to use a mobile telephone safely while the vehicle is moving as a condition of being allowed to do this; and if he will make a statement. [15345]

Mr. Norris: We have received no such representations.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in how many road accidents in the past year the driver of a vehicle involved was using a mobile telephone at the time of the accident. [15344]

Mr. Norris: This information could not be obtained other than at disproportionate cost.

Olympic Airways

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 30 January, Official Report, column 484, regarding Olympic Airways flight DA265 of 7 January, if it is intended to prosecute or penalise Olympic Airways and the pilot. [15209]

Mr. Norris: Regulatory responsibility for Olympic Airways rests with the Greek Civil Aviation Authority, to which the UK Civil Aviation Authority passed an information copy of the UK air traffic control occurrence report.

Highlands and Islands Airports

Sir Russel Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many take-offs and landings there have been at Highlands and Islands airports in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: The figures for annual aircraft transport movements at the Highlands and Islands airports for the past three years are as follows:

	1992		1993		1994[1]
	Arrival	Departure	Arrival	Departure	Arrival	Departure

[1] Provisional figures

Private Security Guards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to date and what is the current cost per month, of his Department's and the Highways Agency's use of private security guards; and if he will give a breakdown of those costs per road scheme or project.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 22 March 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, what has been the total cost to date, and what is the current cost per month, of his Department's and the Highways Agency's use of private security guards; and if he will give a breakdown of those costs per road scheme or project.

The following table gives the information; the figures have been rounded. The ongoing spend is, of course, dependent on the level of future protest action.

Road scheme	Estimated expenditure to date	Estimated ongoing monthly spend
A12 Hackney Wick to M11 Link Road	10,000,000	300,000
A4/A6 Batheaston-Swainswick Bypass	2,000,000	50,000
A30 Honiton-Exeter	175,000	25,000
M3 Bar End-Compton	4,000,000	Scheme completed
M65 Blackburn Southern Bypass	2,000,000	200,000
Total of all above	18,175,000	575,000

I hope this is helpful.

Royal Train

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the average cost of a journey on the royal train in 1993–94. [14727]

Mr. Watts: In 1993–94 the royal train was used on 95 days. On this basis, the average cost per journey was £19,101. In addition, related British Transport police security costs totalled £634,988.

Ro-ro Ferries

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list full details of all inspections undertaken by the Marine Safety Agency of roll-on roll-off ferries using United Kingdom ports in the last 12 months, including the date of inspection, name of the ship, details of defects and remedial action. [15117]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member. Copies of the tables referred to will be placed in the Library.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Ms Joan Walley, dated 22 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the inspections undertaken on roll-on roll-off (ro-ro) ferries.

A list showing the name of the ship and the date and place of inspection of foreign flagged ro-ro cargo ships and ro-ro passenger ferries inspected by the Marine Safety Agency in the last twelve months is attached (Table 1). A separate list containing the same information on Red Ensign ro-ro passenger ships is also provided (Table 2). The Marine Safety Agency conducted an inspection campaign on ro-ro ships calling at UK ports following the sinking of the Estonia and the details of the inspections are shown in Table 3 and Table 4 attached.

Provision of the details of defects found during these inspections would, we estimate, result in a document of 400–500 pages, and could not be provided other than at disproportionate cost. A list of any deficiencies found during an inspection is left on board the ship and it is the responsibility of the Master to ensure that appropriate remedial action is taken. Serious deficiencies resulting in the detention of a ro-ro passenger ferry were found in only one case in the past twelve months. Details of any ro-ro cargo ships detained can be found in the lists of ships under detention in UK ports which have been published each month by the Marine Safety Agency since June 1994.

A253

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when it is now intended that construction of (a) the dual carriageway of the A253 from the end of the Thanet Way-Monkton roundabout—to the Prospect roundabout and (b) the dual carriageway of the A253 between the Prospect roundabout and the Lord of the Manor roundabouts will commence. [14864]

Mr. Norris: These projects are part of the Kent county council's Thanet Way improvement scheme designed to improve access to and through north Kent, with particular benefits for Thanet. My Department is supporting the Thanet Way scheme, which will cost well over £100 million, through transport supplementary grant. I understand that Kent expects to begin work on the first of the sections referred to early next financial year. The second of the sections referred to is less far advanced: the county council expects to be promoting the scheme at the Thanet local plan inquiry during this year.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the recent circumstances in which an airliner approaching Heathrow suffered a malfunctioning of its computer system which gives guidance of the flight path, route of approach, correct speed and angle of descent; and if he will make a statement. [15123]

Mr. Norris: The circumstances surrounding this incident are set out in the air accident investigation branch's bulletin No. 3/95, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library. The AAIB bulletin makes a safety recommendation relating to the Airbus A340 flight management guidance system and the fuel management system. While the safety recommendation is addressed initially to the joint aviation authorities, it is also being considered by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Rail Investment

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much publicly financed investment in the railways has increased since 1987; and what effect this has had on the quantity of new rolling stock, track and signalling. [15269]

Mr. Watts: In 1987–88, publicly financed rail investment totalled £693 million, equivalent to £993 million in 1994–95 prices. In 1994–95, publicly financed rail investment is expected to total around £900 million. In addition we expect some £100 million of privately financed investment to be undertaken this year.

The table compares the level of investment in 1987–88 with the level in each subsequent year.

	Investment £ million 1994–95 prices	Per cent. change on 1987–88
1987–88	993	—
1988–89	977	−1.6
1989–90	1,119	+12.7
1990–91	1,216	+22.5
1991–92	1,442	+45.2
1992–93	1,552	+56.3
1994–95	c 1,000	+0.7

Over this period, at today's prices, £2,765 million has been invested in new rolling stock. Since the mid-1980s nearly 4,000 coaches, locomotives and other passenger vehicles have been delivered—over a quarter of the whole fleet. Some £1,448 million has been invested in track renewals and £1,401 million in signalling and related track projects.

Privatisation

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in respect of each privatisation since 1979 (a) the net equity proceeds to Government as a result of privatisation, (b) the market value at the end of the first day of trading and (c) the current market value. [15350]

Mr. Norris: For those privatisations where the Department acted as vendor, the proceeds to Government were as follows:

Company	Net equity proceeds to Government (£ million)
Associated British Ports	96.4
British Airways	853.0
British Airports Authority	1,181.6
DVOIT (the former IT arm of DVLA)	3.7
National Freight Consortium	5.0

Information on the current and past values of private companies is not held by this Department.

Crime (International Air Space and Waters)

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of national and international law dealing with crimes on board aircraft flying through international air space; [15061]

(2) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of national and international law dealing with crimes on board ships in international waters. [15060]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Concern has recently been expressed that in some circumstances aircrew and passengers may be left without effective legal protection where offences are committed on board foreign-registered aircraft outside United Kingdom air space which subsequently land in this country. We are currently considering whether the problems which have been identified can be overcome, and we expect to discuss the matter shortly with the Board of Airline Representatives of the UK.

Similar concern has not, however, been raised in relation to offences committed on board ships in international waters, and the Government have not been given reason to believe that the law in this area is inadequate. UK courts have jurisdiction over offences committed on board all British ships in international waters, and also over offences committed by British passengers on foreign ships.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage increase in council tax bills for each band of property under each authority for 1995.

Mr. Curry: The average council tax for band C, two adult dwellings in England in 1995–96 is £543. This is before any reductions for council tax benefit and transitional relief, and represents an increase of 5.3 per cent. on 1994–95 levels.

Shire areas are showing the lowest increases, with an average 4.5 per cent. rise on last year.

In London, the average council tax for band C is £512, an increase of 7.8 per cent. on last year. Metropolitan areas have set band C council taxes at £605, 5.8 per cent. higher than in 1994–95.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the band C council tax for each authority in England for 1995–96, and the percentage increase from 1994–95.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the band D council tax for 1995–96 for each local authority in England. [14612]

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 17 March 1995]: I have arranged for this information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families were placed in bed and breakfast accommodation, in each year since 1992 in (a) England and (b) each English housing authority. [14712]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Estimates of the average number of households that had been placed temporarily in bed-and-breakfast accommodation by local authorities in England through administering the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 are given below:

The number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation had fallen to 4,330 households at 31 December 1994, some 12 per cent. fewer than a year earlier and 68 per cent. below the peak level at the end of September 1991. This confirms that local authorities are heeding the Government's advice to use other forms of temporary accommodation wherever possible.

I have today placed in the Library a table giving the information as reported by each local authority in England for each year from 1992 to 1994.

Protected Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, columns 757–58, which national journals are checked by his Department for any potential offences relating to the sale of birds listed in (a) appendix I of CITES and (b) annexe CI of EC regulation 3626/82; [15052]

(2) how many potential offences his Department has identified in the national trade journals in each of the last three years involving birds listed in appendix I of CITES and (b) annexe CI of EC regulation 3626/82; and how many of these have been passed to the police to investigate; [15038]

(3) in respect of the sale of Livingstone's Turacos, how many specimens of this have been advertised for sale in the trade journals his Department monitors during the last four years; and how many cases were passed to the police to investigate. [15038]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department monitors four trade journals for potential offences relating to the sale of birds. These are two weekly titles—Cage and Aviary Birds and Exchange and Mart—and two monthly journals—Bird Keeper and the magazine of the Parrot Society.

Prior to November 1994, my Department kept no detailed records of cases resulting from monitoring journals. However, a substantial number of potential offences were identified and pursued, and eight cases were passed to the police between January 1992 and October 1994. Since November 1994, 26 potential sales offences have been identified and nine cases have been passed to the police to investigate, including one relating to the sale of a Livingstone's Turaco.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, columns 757–58, how his Department ensures that an exemption issued to sell a bird listed in appendix I of CITES or annexe C1 of EC regulation 3626/82 relates to the individual specimen in question; and what proportion of bird species listed in appendix I of CITES or annexe C1 of EC regulation 3626/82 his Department requires to be statutorily ringed or marked in order to be sold; [15050]

(2) what steps his Department takes to verify the origin and date of acquisition of the specimens and if the birds have been captive bred when considering applications for individual sales exemptions to sell birds listed in appendix I of CITES or annexe C1 of EC regulation 3626/82; [15051]

(3) how his Department establishes whether a vendor has any convictions under wildlife legislation when considering an application for an individual sales exemption to sell birds listed in appendix I of CITES or annexe C1 of EC regulation 3626/82. [15049]

Sir Paul Beresford: Statutory provisions to register with the Department and ring birds kept in captivity apply to some 5 per cent. of the species listed in appendix I of CITES or annexe C1 of EC regulation 3626/82.

While there is no statutory requirement to ring appendix I or annexe C1 species specifically for the purpose of sale, any sales exemption for a species subject to the registration and ringing requirements would normally require the bird to be ringed in accordance with the statutory provisions. Individual sales exemptions for species not subject to the ringing requirements also contain information that enables the specimen to be identified, including any ring number.

When submitting applications for sales exemptions, applicants must provide full details of the specimen, including origin and details of acquisition. Where appropriate, they have to supply details of any convictions under wildlife legislation. They are also required to sign a declaration that the information provided is correct and complete to the best of their knowledge and belief.

Any areas of doubt about the information provided would be followed up by the Department. The Department's wildlife inspectorate also has powers to inspect premises to ensure that conditions attached to sales exemptions have been met.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which statutory agencies have authorised persons as defined by the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulation 1985. [15040]

Sir Paul Beresford: Under the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1985, the Secretary of State for the Environment has authorised all members of my Department's wildlife inspectorate and certain named police officers. In addition, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has the power, under paragraph 2 of the regulations, to authorise persons.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals have been heard in each of the last five years by his Department; and how many have succeeded. [14870]

Sir Paul Beresford: The provision of information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. Shepley to Mr. Alan Williams, dated 21 March 1995:

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14249]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of my Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in table 7 of my Department's annual report for 1995, copies of which are available in the Library.

Short-term Prisoners (Housing)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance he is issuing to local authorities following cuts in housing benefit for short-term prisoners; [14823]

(2) what financial provision is being made to local authorities to provide for funding homes for released short-term prisoners and their children following housing benefit reductions. [14824]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Where a person released from prison is homeless and in priority need a local authority has a duty, under part III of the Housing Act 1985, to ensure that accommodation is available for his occupation. My Department is discussing with the Department of Social Security the possible financial effects of the changes in housing benefit for prisoners serving longer than 13 weeks.

Income Support

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has made to the Secretary of State for Social Security since his proposals to reduce income support for mortgage interest about the policy of insurance companies with respect to the payment of mortgage interest in respect of unemployment due to illness caused by exposure to radiation; [14822]

(2) what discussions he has had with the nuclear industry regarding the policy of insurance companies with respect to the payment of mortgage interest if a person is unemployed because of illness due to radioactivity. [14821]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None.

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his response to the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for Staffordshire. [14555]

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in a statement to Parliament on Tuesday 21 March, Official Report, column 145, that we have accepted the Local Government Commission's recommendation of a unitary authority for Stoke-on-Trent with the two-tier system of local government remaining in the rest of Staffordshire.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the tender documents issued by the Government Office for London for research projects, the contractors to whom research work has been awarded, the budget for each research project and the anticipated completion and publication date of each research project. [15034]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government office for London does not have its own research budget but draws upon the resources available to the research programmes of the Departments of Environment and Transport. Councillors' Declarations

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the application of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 to local authority resolutions to require councillors to declare memberships of clubs, unions and societies as well as directorships and shareholdings in companies. [15193]

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 21 March 1995]: Regulation 3 and the schedule to the Local Authority (Members' Interests) Regulations 1992, made under section 19 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, detail the prescribed direct or indirect pecuniary interests which each elected member is required to declare. DOE circular 9/92 provides further advice on the information which members are required to give, and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Protection Staff

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fisheries protection staff speak more than one of the officially recognised European Union languages.

Mr. Jack: Twenty-eight fisheries inspectors employed by the UK fisheries department have a working knowledge of more than one European Union language and a further 20 have basic communication skills. Similar information in relation to British sea-fishery officers of the Royal Navy's fishery protection squadron is not readily available. All UK fishery protection vessels engaged in inspecting foreign vessels carry language cards for boarding purposes.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14255]

Mr. Jack: Details of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's running costs for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in the table at annexe 5 of the Ministry–intervention board departmental report, CM 2803, copies of which are available in the House.

Organic Fluorides

Mr. Barnes : To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the herbicides, insecticides and fungicides approved by his Department which are organic fluorides, together with their contents of chloride. [14557]

Mrs. Browning: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Ministers approve the marketing or use of a pesticide only if thorough evaluation establishes that it is effective, humane and poses no unacceptable risk to human beings, non-target species or the wider environment.

Wareing Bros.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors he will take into account in assessing the current application for an increased milk quota by Wareing Bros., the Breck, Barrow hill, Chesterfield, Derbyshire. [14559]

Mr. Jack: The Ministry has no record of an application by Wareing Bros. for an increased milk quota.

Agricultural Tenancies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to develop the monitoring of agricultural tenancies by area and ownership. [14922]

Mr. Jack: My Department regularly reviews its requirements for statistics, and is considering how best to monitor the new farm business tenancies which will be available from 1 September this year.

Food and Drink Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the United Kingdom food and drink deficit or surplus (a) in total and (b) with the other countries of the EU for each year from 1990 to 1994. [14929]

Mr. Jack: Imports and exports of food and drink, as recorded in the overseas trade statistics in the years 1990 to 1994, are shown in the table.

	Exports	6,352	6,827	7,521	8,053	6,435
	Crude trade gap	5,946	5,435	5,886	5,789	4,433
EU:	Imports	8,030	8,019	8,862	8,381	6,510
	Exports	3,632	4,293	4,736	4,730	3,885
	Crude trade gap	4,398	3,726	4,127	3,651	2,625

Central Statistical Office.
Note:
Because of differences in valuation principles, the crude trade gap overstates the contribution of food, feed and drink to the deficit on visible trade in the balance of payment statistics by about 15 per cent.

EDUCATION

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by her Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if she will make a statement. [14246]

Mr. Robin Squire: Details of the Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in table 1, annexe A and table 22, chapter 8 of the Department's annual report, Cm 2810, copies of which are available in the Library.

Education, Bedfordshire

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent in total on education in Bedfordshire in each of the last 10 years at constant prices. [14893]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows total expenditure by Bedfordshire local education authority from 1974–75 to 1993–94, the latest year for which provisional outturn figures are available. These figures have not be adjusted for any changes of function.

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the pupil-teacher ratio in Bedfordshire (a) in lower schools, (b) in middle schools and (c) in upper schools in each of the last 20 years. [14894]

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is shown in the table.

Pupil Rolls

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make it her policy to apply the same educational standards to schools with fewer than five children as apply to those with higher numbers. [14986]

Mr. Robin Squire: The educational standards required by the national curriculum and the statutory national curriculum assessment and testing arrangements apply to all five to 16–year–olds in every maintained school, regardless of the numbers of pupils on roll. The national curriculum and testing are already raising standards in these schools.

Independent schools, and independent establishments catering for fewer than five children aged five to 16 are not required to follow the national curriculum, although many independent schools choose to do so. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to alter the existing statutory requirements.

Education Standard Spending Assessment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what account is taken of the needs of schools as assessed by Her Majesty's inspectorate prior to decisions on the education standard spending assessment being taken; and what account was taken on the results of Her Majesty's inspectorate's work in determining standard spending assessment limits for Coventry; [15045]

(2) what assessment she has made of (a) the unpaid efforts of teachers and parents and (b) the financial contribution of parents, on the level of education standard spending assessment awards. [15041]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government take account of a wide range of factors affecting local authorities and schools when deciding the appropriate level of education standard spending. My right hon. Friend welcomes the commitment which teachers and parents bring to the education service.

University Students

Mr. Sherman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many university students dropped out of courses before completion in each of the last 10 years. [14837]

Mr. Boswell: The wastage rates of full-time and sandwich students from first degree courses in former University Funding Council funded United Kingdom universities and former English and Welsh polytechnics are shown below:

Academic year:

1983–84: 14 per cent.
1984–85: 15 per cent.
1985–86: 14 per cent.
1986–87: 16 per cent.
1987–88: 17 per cent.
1988–89: 14 per cent.
1989–90: 16 per cent.
1990–91: 15 per cent.
1991–92: 17 per cent.
1992–93: 17 per cent.

Drop-out covers all those leaving degree courses because of exam failure, ill health, personal and other reasons. It includes those switching to a lower level course but it excludes students transferring between degree courses or subjects. The rate for each academic year reflects the progression of students through the whole length of the course. The calculation for the polytechnic drop-out rate is necessarily approximate because of significant limitations in the underlying data.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Portaferry-Strangford Bridge

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what plans he has to commission a viability report into a bridge linking the villages of Portaferry and Strangford. [14836]

Mr. Moss: None.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14245]

Sir John Wheeler: Details of the Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in table 11.1 of the Department's annual report, Cm 2816, copies of which are available in the Library.

Out-patients

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients failed to attend out-patient appointments in Northern Ireland in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [15112]

Mr. Moss: The number of patients who did not attend out-patient appointments and failed to give advance warning to the hospital is as follows:

1991–92: 246,924
1992–93: 243,181
1993–94: 228,092

The number of non-attenders in 1993–94 represents 14 per cent. approximately of those who had appointments in that year. The Department of Health and Social Services is taking steps to ensure that the number of non-attenders is reduced considerably in future. Health and social services boards have been asked to review critically all aspects of out-patients waiting list management and later this year the Department will be launching a major publicity campaign aimed specifically at reducing non-attendances.

Braidside Integrated Primary School

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, on what basis the post of a religious education teacher for Braidside integrated primary school was advertised to include the ability to teach Roman Catholic religious education; and if he will make a statement. [14939]

Mr. Ancram: The advertisement is entirely a matter for the school authorities and reflects the school's aim of providing equitably for both religious traditions among its enrolment.

Chief Electoral Officer

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the report of the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland for 1993–94. [16057]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Chief Electoral Officer's report has been laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library.

Construction Industry

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to implement the Latham report on the construction industry. [14433]

Mr. Moss: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is taking the lead in the implementation of the Latham report, which contained a number of recommendations aimed at improving contractual relationships within the construction industry and between the industry and its clients. He has established the Construction Industry Board which oversees and co-ordinates the various working groups and will carry forward the implementation process, including the provision of advice on any legislation which might be necessary.

My officials maintain close contact with colleagues in the Department of the Environment on all aspects of implementation. Any consultations on proposals for legislation will include interested parties in Northern Ireland. Should legislation be proposed for Great Britain, I will give consideration to how such proposals could be given effect to in Northern Ireland.

Civil Servants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of civil servants employed by (a) his Department, (b) the agencies under his Department's responsibility and (c) public and other bodies under his Department's responsibility, for each year since 1979, divided into (1) full-time equivalents, (2) overtime, (3) casuals and (4) other; and whether he will also provide for each year his estimates of (A) civil service job reductions due to privatisations, (B) civil service job reductions due to contracting out, (C) civil service job reductions resulting from other transfer of responsibilities, (D) the total of all other staff undertaking work for the Department or its agencies without being categorised as civil servants, including external consultants, researchers, agency secretarial staff and staff substitution and (E) total manpower expenditures, in 1994 prices. [15093]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The civil service covers the permanent staff of central Government Departments and next steps agencies. The staff of other bodies are outside the civil service.

Details of staff numbers within the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments from 1989–90 onwards, divided into full-time equivalents, overtime and casuals are given in table 12.7 of the Northern Ireland departmental report, Cm 2816. Table 11.1 gives details of the running costs of the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments from 1989–1990 onwards.

"Public Bodies", published annually since 1982, contains staffing information for those bodies not covered by the Northern Ireland departmental report.

Copies of both of these publications are available in the Library.

The remaining information sought could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UNESCO

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from organisations and individuals regarding rejoining the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation. [15163]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received 38 letters from Members of Parliament, organisations and members of the public in the last six months about the United Kingdom rejoining UNESCO. In addition, there have been 11 parliamentary questions in the same period.

We are continuing to keep this issue under review, but no decisión has been taken.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the decision on the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation and rejoin this organisation. [15162]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The prospects for a United Kingdom return to UNESCO remain under review, but no decisions have been taken. In considering the question, we have to take into account existing financial pressures and other priority demands for resources as well as progress UNESCO has made on reform.

Spain

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position of the United Kingdom's relationship with Spain. [15357]

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom and Spain are allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and fellow members of the European Union and the Western European Union. We have frequent and close contacts on a wide range of issues. Our relations are generally very good.

Turkey

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Turkey about the arrest of members of the Turkish Parliament and defence lawyers. [15340]

Mr. David Davis: We take every opportunity, at ministerial and official level, bilaterally and with our EU partners, to express our concerns to the Turkish Government about their overall human rights record. We did so most recently during the European Union's Association Council with Turkey on 6 March. Our representations have included specific references to the trial and sentencing of deputies from the Democracy party. Our views on this were reflected in an EU statement of 9 December 1994 expressing concern and seeking an explanation from the Turkish Government. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs subsequently raised the issue with the Turkish Foreign Minister on 19 December 1994 and on 2 February.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14253]

Mr. Goodlad: Details of the FCO's running costs and administrative expenditure for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in tables 1 and 2 of the FCO's 1995 departmental report, a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House.

High Commissions and Embassies

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost of maintaining UK high commissions in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14252]

Mr. Goodlad: Details of the actual and projected costs of maintaining UK high commissions are provided in the following table:

Year	Cost
1993–94	81.3
1995–96	86.7

The figures include the costs of deputy high commissions. Further information can be found in the FCO's 1995 departmental report, a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what was the total cost of maintaining United Kingdom embassies in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14683]

Mr. Goodlad: Details of the actual and projected costs of maintaining United Kingdom embassies are provided in the following table:

£ million

Year	Cost
1993–94	264.7
1994–95	272.7
1995–96	282.2

Further information can be found in the FCO's departmental report, a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House.

Armament Sales

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will list those countries to which the United Kingdom Government refuse to sanction the sale of armaments on humanitarian grounds. [15441]

Mr. David Davis: We do not issue licences for the export to any country of equipment likely to be used for internal repression. In addition, we observe arms embargos on China and Burma which were imposed because of repressive internal policies.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what troops, other than those of the Sierra Leone Government, are present in Sierra Leone; and what role they are playing. [14848]

Mr. Baldry: We understand that units of the armed forces of Guinea, Nigeria and Ghana are present in Sierra Leone by agreement between the Governments concerned. We also understand that the Government of Sierra Leone have themselves contracted some former Ghurkas to assist in training the Sierra Leone armed forces.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role has been played by the Commonwealth Secretariat in attempting to ameliorate the situation in Sierra Leone: and what reports he has received from the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth about the need for international preventative diplomacy or other action in Sierra Leone; and how he is going to respond. [14851.]

Mr. Baldry: Staff of the Commonwealth Secretariat have visited the region and sought to establish contact with the various parties to the dispute. We have given our strong support to international efforts to bring about a peaceful solution.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the estimates of the number of people in Sierra Leone who have been killed since the war started in 1991. [14853.]

Mr. Baldry: I refer to my written reply of 16 February to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman), column 731.

TREASURY

Government Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a detailed breakdown of the expenditure described as non-identified in table 7.7 of Command Paper 2821; and if he will make a statement. [14623]

Mr. Aitken: Non-identifiable general Government expenditure is that which cannot be recognised as having been incurred for the benefit of the population of a specific country. It also includes all other general Government expenditure which individual Departments are unable to identify by country from their records. A breakdown is given in the table.

Breakdown of 1993–94 non-identifiable expenditure

	£ billion
Defence	22.9
Overseas Services	3.5
Current transfers abroad (excluding above)	1.8
Nationalised Industries' EFLs	4.4

Other unidentifiable expenditure	11.2
of which:
Agriculture market regulation and production support	1.1
Scientific and technological assistance	0.4
Functioning of the labour market	0.2
Arts	0.2
Higher and further education	0.3
Non-contributory pension benefits	0.7
Unemployment, incapacity and other benefits	0.7
Contributory family benefits	0.4
Parliamentary and Privy Council	0.3
Economic and financial administration	3.3

	44.8

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast for money gross domestic product in the financial year 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14682]

Mr. Aitken: Last November's "Financial Statement and Budget Report" forecast growth in money GDP of 6 ¼ per cent. in 1995–96.

Customs and Excise Computer Centre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff employed in the private contractors' operation at the Customs and Excise computer centre at Southend have criminal records. [15319]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None of the staff working for private contractors is known to have a criminal record.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what security arrangements appertain to the private contractors' operation of the Customs and Excise computer centre at Southend; what inquiries are made to ascertain whether any staff employed have criminal records; and if he will make a statement. [15318]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The vetting procedures for private contract staff working at the Customs and Excise computer centre are identical to those for Customs and Excise staff working there. These procedures are in accordance with the statement made to the House by the Prime Minister on 15 December 1994, Official Report, columns 764-66, and further amplified by the press notice which accompanied it.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration is being given to offering relief on VAT on fuel for advice centres. [14907]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on which products other than fuel VAT is charged both on the product and the standing charges. [14981]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Any product which is the subject of a two-part tariff is liable to VAT at the rate applying to the product. A payment as such does not have a VAT liability. A standing charge is the consideration for a past or future supply of the product.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of removing VAT on fuel in respect of standing charges. [14983]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. Standing charges are part payment for the one service—the supply of domestic gas and electricity—and as such are liable to VAT at the reduced rate of 8 per cent.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received against the imposition of VAT on both supply and standing charges. [14982]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have received a number of such representations from both Members and direct from the public.

Lloyd's Underwriters

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Inland Revenue's estimate of tax repaid to Lloyd's underwriters during the fiscal year 1994–95. [14431]

Sir George Young: A provisional estimate, based on data to the first week in March, is that £347 million of income tax and capital gains tax will be repaid to Lloyd's underwriters by the underwriters unit of Inland Revenue in the financial year 1994–95. This cover refunds of tax paid over a range of earlier years, and includes any repayment supplement attracted by the tax refunded.

Fraud

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the full annual report summarising frauds committed against Government Departments. [15056]

Sir George Young: The report is a restricted document and it would not be appropriate to place it in the Library as this could prejudice current fraud investigations. However, the report is made available to the National Audit Office.

Profit-related Pay Schemes

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many participants in profit-related pay schemes were taxed at marginal rates of (a) 20 per cent., (b) 25 per cent. and (c) 40 per cent. in each year since 1988–89;

(2) what information he has on the distribution of salaries among participants in profit-related pay schemes in each year since 1988–89;

(3) what information he has on the distribution of payments among the participants in profit-related pay schemes in each year since 1988–89; how many of the participants failed to obtain a payment under the scheme; how many of the participants received a maximum payment under the scheme; and how many of the participants obtained a payment yielding the maximum tax relief under the scheme.

Sir George Young [holding answer 2 March 1995]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has of the effect of profit-related pay schemes on (a) the companies concerned and (b) the economy.

Sir George Young [holding answer 2 March 1995]: Studies on profit-sharing schemes generally suggest that they are associated with increased employee involvement and increases in productivity.

EU Finances

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, columns 459–62, regarding sums paid and received by each member state of the EU, if he will publish a table to indicate the net sums received, or paid, by each state in each year since 1984. [14576]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 21 March 1995]: This information can readily be derived from the tables in my earlier reply. However, as the Court of Auditors' report does not attribute all budget expenditure to individual member states, the difference between payments made to member states and actual own resources paid by member states should not be regarded as indicating definitive net contributions for each member state.

Bank of England

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking under article 109(i) of the Maastricht treaty to bring forward proposals to make the Bank of England independent; and if he will make a statement. [14525]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 20 March 1995]: None.

Private Finance Initiative

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 February to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar), Official Report, column 9, if he will give details of the 29 projects relating to the private finance initiative. [15414]

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14241]

Mr. Horman: Details of running costs and administrative spending by the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's Office, and the Office of Public Service and Science for the years 1989–90 through to 1997–98 are contained in tables 7.5 and 7.6 of my Department's annual report, Cm 2820, copies of which are available at the Members' Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress Staffordshire and Somerset training and enterprise councils and Milton Keynes and North Buckinghamshire chamber of commerce training and enterprise are making in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [15855]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce that Staffordshire and Somerset training and enterprise councils and Milton Keynes and North Buckinghamshire chamber of commerce training and enterprise have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standard we set for the award of the new three-year licences. Their licences will be effective from April 1995.

Temporary Contracts

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees in the United Kingdom are currently employed on temporary contracts of (a) under three months, (b) under six months, (c) under one year and (d) over one year in duration. [15064]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested can be obtained from the labour force survey for spring 1994 and is shown in the following table:

Employees with a fixed term contract[1] by length of contract United Kingdom: Spring 1994

	Number
Less than 1 year	492,000
of which:
less than 3 months	135,000
less than 6 months	270,000
More than 1 year	308,000
Total	800,000

[1] Excludes those temporary employees for whom the length of employment had not yet been fixed.

Jobcentres (Signing Times)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances (a) the Employment Service can vary a claimant's signing on time to enable that person to attend a training and education course, and (b) a claimant who has been participating in a part-time education or training course can continue in that course and have it included in a training for work action plan; and if he will make a statement. [15249]

Miss Widdecombe: The allocation of signing days and times is the responsibility of Employment Service office managers who are best placed to take account of local circumstances which affect clients' access to jobcentres. Local office managers are encouraged to vary signing times and/or days to facilitate clients undertaking a course of study or training, provided they are satisfied attendance does not prevent an individual from fulfilling the conditions for receipt of benefit.

With regard to the training for work programme, clients are assessed in order to establish the most appropriate mix of training and work experience to meet their needs and to formulate a TFW action plan. This may include continuation of a course they are already following.

Training (Appeals)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what formal and informal rights of appeal exist for a participant in a Government training scheme if he or she has a grievance or feels that he or she has not received the quality of service promised; and if he will make a statement. [15173]

Mr. Paice: Formal arrangements for individuals dissatisfied with their programme of training are written into the contract the Department has with training and enterprise councils which are responsible for the delivery of Government–funded training programmes. These arrangements require TECs to offer alternative training to those persons who have reasonable grounds for dissatisfaction with their training programme.

Training for Work

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are involved in delivering training for work through adult training credits; what plans he has to encourage further development of such credits; and if he will make a statement. [15177]

Mr. Paice: The following training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are understood to be using a form of adult training credit within their training for work provision:

South and East Cheshire TEC;
Hertfordshire TEC;
Bedfordshire TEC;
Bradford TEC;
Barnsley/Doncaster TEC;
North East Wales TEC;
Grampian Enterprise;
Orkney Enterprise.

Responsibility for development projects in Scotland and Wales rests with the appropriate Secretary of State. There are currently no plans for the Employment Department to support further development in this area as TECs have the freedom to deliver TFW through a credit mechanism if they wish.

Training (EU Nationals)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if European Community nationals are allowed to count any period of unemployment in which they were in receipt of benefit in another EC country towards the qualifying period of unemployment for eligibility for (a) training for work, (b) community action and (c) other Employment Service programmes; and if he will make a statement. [15180]

Miss Widdecombe: At present, people who qualify for training for work on the grounds of unemployment need to have been unemployed for six months in the United Kingdom to be eligible, regardless of nationality. Periods of unemployment in other European Union—European economic area countries count towards eligibility for community action and all other Employment Service programmes. We are currently in the process of reviewing all eligibility criteria for Employment Department programmes to ensure they are consistent, simple and clear.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances citizens from other European Community countries can participate in youth training, training for work or community action, or in other employment schemes financed by the Employment Department; once having entered a programme, if they are entitled to complete it; and if he will make a statement. [15181]

Mr. Paice: Citizens of other European Community countries can participate in training and other schemes financed by the Employment Department, provided they otherwise satisfy the eligibility conditions for the individual scheme concerned. Eligible people entering a particular scheme are entitled to complete it provided they continue to satisfy the conditions of the scheme concerned.

Part-time Education and Training

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances participation in a part-time education or training course count as one of the job-seeking steps necessary to satisfy the actively seeking work condition; and if participation in a part-time education or training course is regarded as a positive outcome from a restart interview. [15247]

Miss Widdecombe: The steps an individual is required to take in any week are those which are reasonable in his or her case and which offer him or her the best prospects of receiving offers of employment. Participation in a part-time education or training course cannot count as a step towards satisfying the actively seeking employment condition, because it does not lead directly to offers of employment. However, it is recognised that people undertaking part-time courses will not have as much time to seek work as other clients and this is taken into account in considering the steps taken by a client in any week.

Part-time education can enhance some clients' prospects of finding work in the longer term and so Employment Service advisers will give advice and guidance on part-time education opportunities available and the implications as far as benefits are concerned. However, clients who start part-time education following a restart interview are not counted towards our positive outcome targets unless they also leave the unemployment register.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances an unemployed person participating in a part-time education or training course will not be required to attend a compulsory restart or workwise course or jobplan workshop; and what arrangements are made to ensure that those who are required to attend the course or workshop do not have their part-time study disrupted. [15248]

Miss Widdecombe: It has been a long-standing principle of the social security system that unemployment benefits are not paid unconditionally but involve reciprocal obligations on the part of the claimant. These include fulfilling the requirements of both being available for and actively seeking work for the days on which benefit is claimed. This requirement applies to all unemployed people, including people who may be studying on a part-time basis.

Equally, the requirement to attend jobplan, 1–2–1/workwise—worklink in Scotland—or restart courses includes those who are undertaking part-time study. However, wherever possible arrangements will be made for attendance to fall at a time outside normal study hours or exam times.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances people can participate on a part-time basis in training for work and community action; to what participation allowance they would be entitled; and if he will make a statement. [15172]

Mr. Paice: Under the arrangements that will apply to training for work in 1995–96, non-employed trainees can participate part time as long as their planned training averages at least 15 hours in a seven day period. There are no minimum hours for employed status trainees. Non-employed trainees receive an allowance based on their benefit entitlement when they joined the programme, plus a supplement of £10 per week.

Community action is a part-time programme. Participation lasts for a minimum of 21 hours a week. People participating in this programme receive an allowance equivalent to their normal benefit rate plus £10 per week.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Ms Short: to ask the Secretary of State for Employment what adjudication decisions will be taken by front-line Employment Service officers when the jobseeker's allowance is introduced; what training they will receive to enable them to discharge their new responsibilities; and if he will make a statement. [15265]

Miss Widdecombe: The introduction of the new jobseeker's allowance to replace unemployment benefit and income support, and its joint delivery by the Employment Service and the Benefits Agency will mean a number of changes to adjudication work in both agencies. We are currently considering the impact of those changes, and looking at ways of improving the speed and effectiveness of adjudication. If locating some labour market adjudication decisions closer to the front line in jobcentres would speed up the process of decision making and give claimants better service, it is right that such ideas should be considered and piloted if appropriate.

A full programme of training for ES officers is being developed to equip them to deliver JSA effectively. This will include training on the entitlement conditions for JSA and the adjudication process.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the current 21-hour rule enabling unemployed people to participate in independent European social fund courses will be subject to reduction to 16 guided learning hours when the jobseeker's allowance is introduced; and if he will make a statement. [15258]

Miss Widdecombe: People undertaking part-time courses part-funded by the European social fund while claiming jobseeker's allowance will be subject to the rules of JSA. These will include an upper limit of 16 guided learning hours per week for people undertaking Further Education Funding Council-funded courses and a requirement to be available for and actively seeking employment.

Where ESF part-funds Government programmes, such as training for work, trainees will be subject to the rules of those programmes.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the current 21-hour rule enabling unemployed people to study while receiving benefit will be reduced to 16 guided learning hours when the jobseeker's allowance is introduced in Northern Ireland; what difference there will be in the treatment of unemployed people who take up places in either further or higher education courses; and if he will make a statement. [15159]

Miss Widdecombe: People claiming jobseeker's allowance will be able to undertake part-time courses provided that they remain available for, and actively seeking, employment. We have decided to update the rules to reflect changes in the way certain courses are organised. These changes will ensure that the rules can be applied fairly and consistently and allow the same number of unemployed people to study part time while receiving benefits. In the case of courses funded by the Further Education Funding Council in England, unemployed people will be able to study for up to 16 guided learning hours per week. We intend to introduce similar arrangements in Northern Ireland. The rules will be based on definitions used in further education in Northern Ireland, where the concept of guided learning hours is not used. There will be no change in higher education where a part-time definition still exists.

Child Care Costs

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help he provides for parents and other people with caring responsibilities who want to take up places in training for work and other Employment Department programmes; and if he will make a statement. [15175]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are able to support parents entering training with the cost of child care. In particular, TECs are required to provide child care support for those in the youth training guarantee group. Support with child care most often takes the form of an allowance paid to a childminder, but it is for TECs to determine how the support is given. Career development loans, which help individuals pay for their own vocational training, can be used to pay for part-time and distance learning courses and child care costs.

Gateways to Learning Initiative

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are involved in the gateways to learning initiative; what achievements have been made under the programme; how many TECs and LECs will receive gateways funding in 1995–96; what are his future plans for the initiative; and if he will make a statement. [15179]

Mr. Paice: In 1994–95, 43 training and enterprise councils have had contracts from the Employment Department under the gateways to learning initiative. The majority of these TECs will continue to receive funding in 1995–96. By the time the initiative has ended, a total of 58 TECs will have participated. No local enterprise companies have been involved. The initiative has contributed to the development of quality assured adult careers guidance and information networks in England. Over 70,000 people will have been helped to produce personal action plans relating to their education, training and career opportunities. There are no plans to continue the initiative once current contracts have ended.

Open Learning Credits

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are involved in the open learning credits initiative; what achievements have been made under the programme; how participation in open learning credits affects an unemployed person's eligibility for other Employment Department programmes; how many TECs and LECs will receive open learning credit funding in 1995–96; what are his future plans for the initiative; and if he will make a statement. [15178]

Mr. Paice: The open learning credits pilots were run in 1993–94 to trial the use of open learning for unemployed people. There were 14 pilots involving 17 training and enterprise councils and two local enterprise companies. The pilots were fully evaluated and a copy of the evaluation report has been place in the Library. The findings showed that open learning has a number of potential benefits to offer. Information from the pilots will be disseminated to TECs and LECs to help them decide on what use they want to make of open learning as a training method within their training provision. There are no plans to fund open learning credits as a separate initiative, so the question of participants' eligibility for other Government programmes will not arise.

Skill Choice

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are involved in the skill choice initiative; what achievements have been made under the programme; how many TECs and LECs will receive skill choice funding in 1995–96; what are his future plans for the initiative and if he will make a statement. [15176]

Mr. Paice: Thirteen English training and enterprise councils and four local enterprise companies are involved in the two-year skill choice initiative.

Skill choice will complete its two-year programme on 31 March 1995, but existing TECs and LECs will receive funding in 1995–96 to cover residual commitments from 1994–95.

Since 1 April 1993, 170,000 individuals have been helped to obtain careers information, vocational guidance and assessment services which can lead to recognised vocational qualifications.

There are no plans to continue the initiative once current contracts have ended.

Gardening Training

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Government have to encourage training in gardening so that those who are unemployed can learn the skills to manage allotments and grow their own vegetables. [15263]

Mr. Paice: Training for work offers training to help unemployed people get back to work. If training in gardening skills is likely to help individuals find jobs, training and enterprise councils may support it. In 1995–96, we aim to help some 104,000 people into jobs through TFW.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14254]

Miss Widdecombe: Details of the Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in annexe A, table iv of the Department's annual report, Cm 2805, copies of which are available in the Library.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many senior inspectors and medical advisers retired from the Health and Safety Executive on 17 March; and for how many years in total they had worked for the executive. [15210]

Mr. Oppenheim: Fifty-eight senior inspectors and nine medical advisers retired from the Health and Safety Executive on 17 March 1995 under the voluntary early retirement scheme. In total, they had 1,180 years service with HSE.

VERS is part of a long-term restructuring exercise designed to ensure that HSE has the talent and experience it needs for challenges now and in the future. No inspectors have been made redundant. A campaign to recruit 60 front-line inspectors is under way.

There will be no diminution of enforcement activity.

Asbestos

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimate of the likely number of deaths due to asbestos which will occur in 10, 20 and 30 years' time; and what changes those estimates represent relative to those made 10 years ago. [14367]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The estimated number of males dying from the asbestos-related cancer mesothelioma in 10 years' time could range between 1,300 and 2,100; in 20 years' time between 1,300 and 3,000 and in 30 years' time between 1,000 and 3,200. Projected figures for females are not available.

Currently, there are estimated to be one or two deaths from asbestos-related lung cancer for each death from mesothelioma. The falling prevalence of smoking is likely to reduce this ratio in the future.

No comparative estimates were produced 10 years ago. This is the first time that projections have been estimated using the Health and Safety Executive's mesothelioma register.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reduce the caseload of the Belfast Child Support Agency centre as a consequence of that centre's performance against targets.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is the responsibility of the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 22 March 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the caseload of the Child Support Agency Centres at Belfast.

The caseload, performance and targets of all six Child Support Agency Centre (CSACs) are regularly reviewed by senior operations managers. There are currently no plans to adjust the caseload holdings of Belfast or any other CSAC.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the Child Support Agency's staff was recruited from (a) the civil service and (b) outside the civil service.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is the responsibility of the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 22 March 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the recruitment of staff by the Child Support Agency.

The precise information that you request is not collated by the Agency for statistical purposes. Full information on the background of staff who formed the Agency at its launch in April 1993 is not readily available, but I expect to be able to provide it within two weeks, and shall write to your further.

Information on recruitment is, however, available for the 12 month period ending 30 September 1994. During that period the Agency recruited a total of 1,847 people. Of these, 323 (17 per cent.) came from the within the Civil Service and 1,524 (83 per cent.) were recruited from outside the Civil Service.

Residential Care

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from nursing and residential home associations regarding proposed social security benefits rates. [14840]

Mr. Roger Evans: We have received a few representations recently from the representative bodies, including the Yorkshire branch of the Registered Nursing Homes Association and the Hereford and Worcester branch of the Residential Care Homes Association, about the income support limits for people in residential care and nursing homes.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proposals he has to protect those people on Government training schemes in respect of cuts in income support for mortgage interest payments; [14776]

(2) if he will take into account in his final plans for reduction in income support for mortgage interest the position of women who are unemployed due to pregnancy; [14782]

(3) what proposals he has to protect those people on Government training schemes in respect of cuts in income support for mortgage interest payments. [14882]

Mr. Roger Evans: We are considering the position of all groups during the consultation period and officials are discussing with the Association of British Insurers how best to ensure that the interaction between state and private provision works well.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has given to insurance firms in respect of mortgage protection in respect of unemployment due to pregnancy. [14778]

Mr. Roger Evans: None, but officials are talking to the Association of British Insurers to ensure that the interaction between state and private provisions work well.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assurances he has received from the Association of British Insurers in respect of the availability of mortgage protection policies following cuts in income support. [14777]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Association of British Insurers has said that very few people who are accepted for a mortgage will not also satisfy the conditions for insurance and that even where insurance may not currently be available it expects cover to develop quite quickly.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to examine the Social Security Advisory Committee report of 1993 in regard to the extent of coverage by insurance companies of the whole range of workers for mortgage interest. [14779]

Mr. Roger Evans: I have read the 1993 report by the Social Security Advisory Committee on the regulations introducing an upper limit on the amount of help with income support mortgage interest and responded to it. I also read the committee's 1994 report on state benefit and private provision, which accepted that there was scope for the expansion of private mortgage protection insurance, at the time of publication. The Government's proposals for change in relation to income support mortgage interest payments announced in the last Budget have also been referred to the committee, which is consulting widely on them. I will study in detail the report that it produces on these proposals.

Housing Benefit (Prisoners)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received regarding his plans for reductions in housing benefit for short-sentence prisoners; [14780]

(2) what safeguards he plans to impose to prevent released short-term prisoners from becoming homeless. [14781]

Mr. Roger Evans: This Department has consulted the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations about proposals for restricting the payment of housing benefit to convicted prisoners to 13 weeks. We have also received a number of representations from other organisations, including the Probation Services, the Scottish Council for Single Mothers, Shelter, citizens' advice bureaux, Bury Accommodation Forum and the North West Landlords Association and from some members of the public. The amendment regulations were laid before Parliament on 10 March and come into effect from 1 April 1995.

Housing benefit will be available to prisoners serving up to 13 weeks, after allowance for any remission, and to all ex-prisoners following their release from prison who have a liability to pay rent. Where a partner remains in the home, housing benefit will continue to be available during the period of absence without restriction.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the amount of money spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14622]

Mr. Hague: Details of this Department's administrative spending for the years 1989-90 to 1997-98 are contained in table 1 of the Department's annual report, Cm 2813, copies of which are available in the Library.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, how many people are currently receiving invalidity benefit in each of the benefit districts in Wales; and what percentage these figures represent, by district, of the total population of working age. [14892]

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

Notes:

[1] Figures obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the Benefits Agency offices. The figure will include some people who have claimed but are not actually receiving invalidity benefit because they are in receipt of a higher overlapping benefit.

[2] The working population has been taken to be 16 to 64 for men and 16 to 59 for women. Estimated mid-year in 1993 population figures supplied by the population estimates unit, Office of Population Censuses and Survey. Figures have been given only where the Benefits Agency district has the same boundaries as the Welsh county districts.

WALES

Water Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to ensure clean bathing beaches and pollution-free rivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1994, 76 per cent. of the Welsh bathing waters identified under the European bathing waters directive met its mandatory bacteriological standards. The most recent survey for inland waters is for 1991–93 and shows that 86.2 per cent. of river and canal lengths in the National Rivers Authority's Welsh region are of good quality, with 11 per cent. as fair quality, 2.5 per cent. poor quality and 0.3 per cent. bad quality.

Dwr Cymru Welsh Water's investment programme for 1995–2000 involving expenditure of nearly £1 billion includes provision for further significant improvements to inland and coastal discharges. The National Rivers authority is also acting to bring about improvements to many industrial and agricultural pollution sources.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment has been made of the current level of industrial pollution in Welsh rivers and waterways;

(2) if he will list the 10 most polluted rivers in Wales in rank order, indicating the main pollutants contaminating the water and riverbank.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Rivers Authority monitors the quality of watercourses in Wales and sources of pollution. It has published "The Quality of Rivers, Canals and Estuaries in England and Wales—Report of the 1990 Survey" and "The Quality of Rivers and Canals in England and Wales (1990–92)" copies of which are in the Library of the House. Last December, the authority published interim results for 1991–93 which showed that, in its Welsh Region, 86. 2 per cent. of river and canal lengths were classed as good quality, 11 per cent. were fair quality, 2.5 per cent were poor quality and 0.3 per cent. were bad quality.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the reason for the planned reduction in expenditure between the 1994–95 allocation of £6.9 million on environmentally sensitive areas and the 1995–96 plans to spend £5.5 million on environmentally sensitive areas, as set out at figure 2.01 on page 8 of Cm 2815.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Planned domestic expenditure on environmentally sensitive areas is £5.5 million which together with planned EC expenditure of £1.4 million, gives a total of £6.9 million, the same as planned for 1994–95. the EC expenditure on this scheme is included under "Other" in the section headed "Commodity Support Measures" in figure 2.01—footnote 3 to the table refers.

Toxic Waste Imports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what factors underlay the omission from the section on waste in his Environmental Agenda for Wales of any discussion or guidance on his policy on the import of toxic waste into Wales for treatment or incineration.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Environmental Agenda for Wales sets out my right hon. Friend's main objectives and priorities for the Welsh environment. It promotes practical greenery, such as energy efficiency and recycling at home and in the workplace, using reclaimed land for development, and other measures aimed at protecting the environment without stifling essential economic development. The import of waste is an international issue, which is fully covered in other Government statements, for example, a draft UK plan on imports and exports of waste was issued for consultation on 3 February.

Housing Renovation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made in regard to the benefit that would accrue to poorer communities in Wales from an increase in the upper grant limit available to households for house renovation. [14581]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh house condition survey 1993 estimated that 96 per cent. of unfit homes could be made fit at a cost of £15,000 or less. The upper grant limit is £24,000 and the present arrangements ensure that grants are targeted to poorer households, Local authorities and also make discretionary awards.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from local authorities in Wales regarding the implications for house renovation of the present cap on the total resources available for improving the housing stock. [14580]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Generally there has been a welcome for the £1 billion which the Government have allocated for renovation since the start of the present grant system, while some councils have indicated that they have substantial inquiries about grants.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the posts to which he has made appointments in Wales in the last three years that have been (a) advertised and (b) not advertised. [14404]

Local Authority House Building

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council houses have been built in Wales in each year since 1979. [14873]

In 1994, the number of new dwellings completed by local authorities in Wales was 227.

Local Authority Zoos

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the Welsh percentage of the United Kingdom's forecast money GDP in 1995; and if he will make a statement. [14248]

Mr. Redwood: There are no official forecasts of Welsh GDP.

Fish-eating Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what advice he has received from the Countryside Commission for Wales and the National Rivers Authority about the impact of fish stocks in Wales of piscivorous birds; [14553]

(2) how many licences to take piscivorous birds he has issued in each of the last two years; how many birds, by species, were taken under each of those licences; what criteria he used in determining whether to grant such licences; what conditions he attached to such licences; and what arrangements he made to monitor them. [14554]

Mr. Redwood: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Welsh Language

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to sign letters prepared by his Department in Welsh to constituents and other organisations in Wales which write to him in Welsh. [14889]

Mr. Redwood: All correspondents who write to me in Welsh receive a reply in Welsh as well as English. My policy is only to sign letters in a language that I understand.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients failed to attend out-patient appointments in Wales in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [15113]

Public Bodies (Expenditure)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of his guidance to non-departmental public bodies on making reductions in their expenditure on consultants fees. [15489]

Mr. Redwood: I have issued no general guidance to non-departmental public bodies.

My strategic guidance letters to the Welsh Development Agency and to the Development Board for Rural Wales set targets for reductions in spending on consultants and my letter to the Cardiff Bay development corporation asked it to reduce its reliance on consultants. Copies of those letters are in the Library of the House.

All public bodies must obtain value for money from consultants and ensure that they are the most cost-effective means of achieving results.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the consultancy fees paid to Mr. Meirion Thomas of the Cardiff business school and Mr. Stewart Rubin of KLR Consulting and if he will make a statement. Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what advice he has sought about the effects which financial and staff reductions will have on the Countryside Council for Wales' ability to implement recovery programmes or action plans for endangered specifies in Wales; and what was the result of such advice; [15453]

(2) if he will list the representations he has received from the board of the Countryside Council for Wales expressing concern at the level of funding available for the monitoring of endangered species and statutory designated sites in Wales in 1995–96. [15454]

Mr. Redwood: In meetings held on 10 January 1995 with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales and on 24 January 1995 with the full council, discussions took place on a variety of issues, such as how the Countryside Council for Wales can continue effectively to carry out its range of duties, including those in respect of the EC habitats and special directive, other designated sites and endangered species in Wales, in the light of its settlement for 1995–96. These discussions and all other advice received have formed the basis of the action plan that I intend to publish shortly, setting out the issues on which I want the council to concentrate in the next two years.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will list those posts within the Countryside Council for Wales which will become vacant following the budgetary cuts for 1995–96; and which will be re-filled and which made redundant. [15455]

Mr. Redwood: Decisions on staffing are the responsibility of the Countryside Council for Wales. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member with the information requested. I will arrange for copies of that letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14240]

SCOTLAND

Water Services

17. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet representatives of COSLA to discuss water services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [13462]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend and I will be meeting representatives of COSLA on 12 June as part of the normal consultation on local government finance matters. It is too early to say if water services will be discussed at that meeting.

Joint Programmes

18. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the joint programmes between the Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices. [13643]

Mr. Lang: There are no joint programmes as such between the Scottish Office and the Northern Ireland Office, but there are various cases of close working relationships between the two Departments.

Independent Review Commission

19. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for introducing an independent review commission to examine alleged miscarriages of justice along the lines of that being introduced for England, Wales and Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [13644]

Mr. Lang: I have no plans at present to introduce an independent review commission to examine alleged miscarriage of justice along the lines of that being introduced for England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

I have appointed a committee under the chairmanship of Sir Stewart Sutherland, principal of Edinburgh university, to consider options for change to the procedure in Scotland. I shall decide what action to take on these matters once I have the committee's report.

Road Bridge, Kelso

20. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further discussions he has had with Borders regional council on the proposal to build a new road bridge at Kelso. [13645]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no recent discussions with Borders regional council about the proposed new bridge at Kelso. The bridge would form part of a local road and is thus a matter for the regional council as local roads authority to consider.

Scottish Homes

21. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the contract of Scottish Homes chairman expires. [13646]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current appointment of the chairman of Scottish Homes expires on 31 March 1996.

Scottish Nuclear

22. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will determine the section 36 planning consent for Scottish Nuclear dry fuel stores; and if he will make a statement. [13647]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend expects to reach a decision shortly about section 36 planning consent for Scottish Nuclear dry fuel stores.

Voluntary Sector (Funding)

23. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet representatives of the voluntary sector to discuss their on-going funding needs. [13648]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to meet with representatives of the voluntary sector. Officials from the Scottish office meet regularly with representatives of the voluntary sector in the Scottish Office voluntary sector forum. The next formal meeting of the forum will take place on Wednesday 24 May.

Woodlands Hospital, Aberdeen

24. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had on the future of Woodlands hospital, Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement. [13649]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about Grampian health board's proposals for the Woodlands hospital, Aberdeen.

My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State for Health has recently had separate meetings with relatives of some of the Woodlands residents and with Grampian Members of Parliament to discuss the future of the hospital and the health board's plans.

In reaching a decision we shall take very careful account of all the views which have been put forward.

Strathclyde Regional Council

25. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Strathclyde regional council will be allowed to transfer capital expenditure into revenue expenditure as a means of reaching his financial targets. [13650]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend announced his provisional capping principles on 29 November. He will assess all Scottish local authorities' budgets against these principles once they have been received and in the light of any representations made to him.

Youth Employment

26. Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the prospects for youth employment in Scotland. [13651]

Mr. Kynoch: The Government's economic policies are designed to create a climate in which employers can both maintain existing jobs and create new ones. The skillseekers programme in Scotland, backed up by our youth training guarantee, gives young people the opportunity to receive high quality training, often while in employment, in the occupational area of their choice, with the prospect of a qualification and thus improved employment prospects.

Strathclyde Passenger Transport Authority

27. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in his consultation on the boundary of the new Strathclyde passenger transport authority; and how many of those favoured the existing boundary of Strathclyde region. [13652]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received 147 representations on his consultative exercise on the boundary and constitution of the proposed Strathclyde passenger transport authority. We will announce the outcome of the consultation after detailed and thorough consideration of the responses received.

Council of Ministers

28. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last led the United Kingdom delegation to the European Union Council of Ministers; and what matters were discussed. [13653]

Mr. Kynoch: The last occasion when a Scottish Minister led for the United Kingdom at the European Council of Ministers was on 3 June 1994. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart), then Minister for Industry in Scotland, led the UK delegation to the informal meeting of Ministers responsible for regional policy and spatial planning, when matters relating to the European structural funds were discussed.

Mink

29. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of mink on Scottish wildlife. [13654]

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has received advice from Scottish Natural Heritage on the impact of mink on Scottish wildlife. The species is an active predator and established itself in the wild after escaping from mink farms as long ago as 1929. Research results indicate that the mink has generally not had the serious effect on our wildlife that was first expected. However, there is concern about its possible effect on some colonies of ground-nesting sea birds.

Public Appointments

30. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for how many public appointments he is now responsible for in Scotland; and how many people are on his list of possible candidates for such appointments. [13655]

Mr. Lang: There were 3,656 appointments nominally within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Scotland at 1 September 1994, including 1,895 members of children's panels, who are recruited through the local authorities. There are currently about 4,000 names on the Scottish Office public appointments list.

Scottish Sleeper Services

31. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further discussions he has had in respect of the sleeper services to Fort William and Carlisle and the Scottish sleeper services; and if he will make a statement. [13656]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for railways throughout Great Britain rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. My right hon. Friend and I have been keeping in touch with developments.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what plans he has to seek a judicial review of the decision taken by the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising in respect of the Fort William and Carlisle to London sleeper services and the Scotland to London motorail services; and if he will make a statement. [15130]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Junior Doctors

32. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest estimates of additional numbers of junior doctors required to allow the agreed reductions in junior doctors' hours in Scottish hospitals. [13657]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such estimates have been made. NHS employers are expected to meet the targets for junior doctors' hours by measures other than recruiting additional junior doctors.

Housing Development, Niddrie

33. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations led him to reject the recommendation of a Scottish Office inquiry into the housing development in the village of Niddrie; and if he will make a statement. [13658]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend does not consider that a convincing case has yet been made to justify the loss of green belt land for housing purposes in the village of Niddrie.

Inward Investment

34. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the trend on inward investment into (a) Scotland and (b) the rest of the European Community. [13659]

Mr. Kynoch: The year 1994–95 is well on course to being another record year for inward investment in Scotland.

Scotland is currently attracting inward investment projects at the rate of almost two per week.

In 1993–94, Locate in Scotland and the Scottish Office Industry Department helped attract to Scotland 95 inward investment projects involving planned investment of £587 million and the expected creation or safeguarding of over 11,000 jobs. All these figures represent a significant increase over the corresponding figures for 1992–93.

At no time since LIS was set up in 1981 has Scotland secured a higher number of inward investment projects.

Scottish Arts Council

35. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Scottish Arts Council to discuss its role in the development of the audio-visual industry in Scotland. [13660]

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the Scottish Arts Council from time to time but has no plans to discuss the development of the audio-visual industry. The Scottish Office-funded body with the greater interest in the development of the audio-visual industry is the Scottish Film Council. Its future role is currently the subject of a review.

Scottish Enterprise Tayside

36. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the establishment of Scottish Enterprise Tayside and tourism-related projects. [13661]

Mr. Kynoch: The only representations that my right hon. Friend has received on these matters in recent months have been those submitted by the hon. Gentleman.

Local Government

37. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what change he expects in the overall numbers of staff employed by local authorities in Scotland following the introduction of single-tier local government. [13662]

Mr. Kynoch: The numbers of staff employed will depend on decisions yet to be made by the new authorities, but overall it is estimated that local government reorganisation could lead to a reduction of between 200 and 1,800 in the present work force of around 300,000. In addition, approximately 7,000 staff will transfer from local authorities to the new water and sewerage authorities and the Scottish Children's Reporter Administration. Further transfers may arise as a result of proposals still under consideration for the maintenance of trunk roads.

Scottish Homes

38. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what allocation of funds he has made to Scottish Homes for 1995–96; and what proposals he has to review the way in which that sum is allocated between regions in Scotland. [13663]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have approved a development funding programme for Scottish Homes which maintains investment in 1995–96 at the 1994–95 level of over £320 million. The allocation of that programme to Scottish Homes's districts is a matter for Scottish Homes.

European Union Expenditure

39. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the value of EU expenditure in Scotland expressed as a proportion of total tax revenue raised in Scotland; and what is the comparative figure for the rest of Great Britain. [13664]

Mr. Kynoch: European Community expenditure cannot be geographically identified on a comprehensive basis. However, in 1992–93, EC expenditure in Scotland in respect of my right hon. Friend's programmes, together with agricultural intervention expenditure and that financed by receipts from the European social fund, is estimated to have been of the order of £370 million. In that year, revenues raised in Scotland from the four main sources—income tax, national insurance contributions, VAT and local government revenues—amounted to some £12.8 billion. For the UK as a whole, total public sector receipts from EC institutions in 1992–93 were some £2.8 billion and the revenues from the four main sources were some £153.7 billion.

Campbeltown to Ballycastle Ferry

Mr Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about proposals for the Campbeltown to Ballycastle ferry. [13640]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that Argyll and the Islands Enterprise and Moyle district council, the sponsors of the project, are at an advanced stage in consideration of the harbour works that would be required to allow this service to operate and have initiated discussions with interested shipping operators.

Bishopbriggs (Private Prison)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Bishopbriggs is being considered as a site for a new private prison; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The site of the existing resettlement unit at Bishopbriggs is one of a number of sites currently being considered as a possible location for a new privately financed prison. No final decisions about the site or about the specification of a new prison have yet been made. Such decisions would require ministerial approval and would be the subject of an application for outline planning permission.

Repair and Improvement Grants

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homes in each district and islands area of Scotland are ineligible for grant aid towards the cost of repairs and improvements because of the application of the rateable value threshold for that area; and what proportion of the private housing stock that represents for each area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Rateable value limits were introduced in 1974 with the intention of excluding from grant assistance some 20 per cent. of homes in each housing authority district. The actual numbers excluded may have varied over time. The limits are not an absolute bar on entitlement to grant. They are waived where local authorities take action on houses in the worst condition or where lead plumbing is to be replaced or levels of radon gas reduced. Neither are they applied for works to adapt a house for a disabled person.

Empty Commercial Property

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider the decision to implement the proposals to levy 50 per cent. rates on empty commercial property.

Mr. Lang: No. With effect from 1 April 1995, a national non-domestic rate will apply in Scotland at the same level as the unified business rate in England. The valuation methods used at the 1995 revaluation will also now be harmonised across the border and certain express harmonisation measures, for example the rating of plant and machinery, will also take effect on 1 April 1995. The new provisions on the rating of unoccupied property in Scotland are just one of those measures and bring the position into line with that which has existed in England and Wales since 1990.

The Government believe that the net effect of the harmonisation of the Scottish rating system with that in England and Wales will be of great benefit to Scottish business.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effect of the imposition of 50 per cent. rates on empty commercial property on the competitiveness of the firms affected.

Mr. Lang: We have no evidence that the competitiveness of companies will be affected by this measure. Parallel provisions already exist in England and Wales and this is part of the overall process of harmonisation to put Scottish businesses in a similar situation to their competitors south of the border.

Prescriptions

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prescriptions were issued in the Grampian health board area for each of the last five years; and how many were exempt from payment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table shows the total number of prescriptions presented for dispensing and the number for which no charge was made. The number of prescriptions issued to patients but not presented for dispensing is unknown.

The number of prescriptions for which no charge was made at the point of dispensing includes items dispensed on presentation of pre-payment certificates.

Financial year	Total number of prescriptions dispensed	Number of prescriptions for which no charge made at point of dispensing
1989–90	3,813,054	3,020,258
1990–91	3,898,337	3,111,925
1991–92	4,007,418	3,211,843
1992–93	4,137,204	3,328,756
1993–94	4,288,124	3,497,826

Government Expenditure and Revenue

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish an updated version of the 1992 document, "Government Expenditure and Revenues in Scotland."

Mr. Lang: I shall keep this possibility under review.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employees of local authority direct labour organisations will be affected by his decision to exclude DLOs from tendering for the management and maintenance contracts for the primary route network due to go to tender in September of this year: and how many of them will lose their jobs as a result of this exclusion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities are not excluded from tendering for contracts for the future management and maintenance of any part of the trunk road network and, therefore, there are no implications for staff employed by local authority DLOs arising from any exclusion.

Lomond Health Trust

Mr. John McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the name of the chairman of the Lomond Health trust and detail his or her qualifications for the post. [15129]

Mr. James Douglas-Hamilton: A press release announcing Mr. Stephen P. Newall from Rhu, Dunbartonshire as chairman of the Lomond Healthcare NHS trust was issued on 7 March 1995. He was appointed to the post because of his distinguished track record of leadership in the public and private sectors.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the current 21-hour rule enabling unemployed people to study while receiving benefit will be reduced to 16 guided learning hours when the jobseeker's allowance is introduced in Scotland; what difference there will be in the treatment of unemployed people who take up places in either further or higher education courses, and if he will make a statement. [15160]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: People claiming jobseeker's Allowance will be able to take part-time courses provided they remain available for and are actively seeking employment. In the case of further education courses, it has been decided that for those funded by the Further Education Funding Council for England, part-time courses will be defined as courses of up to 16 guided learning hours a week. Because the concept of guided learning hours does not apply to Scottish, further education consideration is being given to what similar arrangements will apply in Scotland. They will be designed to ensure that broadly the same number of people benefit from this concession as at present.

For higher education courses, it is expected that the definition of a part-time course will remain essentially unchanged.

Farming Community (Suicides)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many suicides there have been in the Scottish farming community in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [14214]

Sir Hector Monro: The General Register Office, Scotland, compiles figures for suicide where the occupation of the deceased was classified as farmer, farmer's wife or farm worker. This information for the most recent five years available is as follows:

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Number	19	16	18	19	17

The Scottish Office is working with other agencies to raise the general awareness of conditions associated with suicidal behaviour.

Forestry

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares the Forestry Commission has planted in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [15030]

Sir Hector Monro: The information is as follows:

Year ended 31 March	Area planted (hectares)
1985	11,021
1986	11,630
1987	13,380
1988	13,129
1989	12,580
1990	11,946
1991	11,137
1992	11,259
1993	10,830
1994	9,289

Out-patient Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients failed to attend out-patient appointments in Scotland on each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [15111]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of new out-patient appointments where the patient failed to attend is shown in the table. Corresponding information is not available centrally for return out-patients.

New out-patient referrals—patients who did not attend

Date	Number
1992	120,054

NHS Trusts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a reply from the chief executive of the West Glasgow Hospitals University NHS trust to his letter of 9 February concerning the expenditure of the trust's start-up grant; [15195]

(2) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a substantive reply from the chief executive of the East and Midlothian NHS trust to his letter of 9 February concerning the expenditure of the trust's start-up grant; [15198]

(3) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a reply from the chief executive of the Fife Healthcare NHS trust to his letter of 9 February concerning the expenditure of the trust's start-up grant; [15199]

(4) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a reply from the chief executive of the Edinburgh

Sick Children's NHS trust to his letter of 9 February concerning the expenditure of the trust's start-up grant; [15200]

(5) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a reply from the chief executive of the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust to his letter of 9 February concerning the expenditure of the trust's start-up grant; [15201]

(6) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a reply from the chief executive of the Stobhill General Hospitals NHS trust to his letter of 9 February concerning the expenditure of the trust's start-up grant. [15202]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that the chief executives of the West Glasgow Hospitals University NHS trust, the Edinburgh Sick Children's NHS trust and the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust have not responded to the hon. Member. The chief executive of the East and Midlothian NHS trust, the Fife Healthcare NHS trust and Stobhill NHS trust have indicated that they will reply before the end of March.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the chair, chief executive and correspondence addresses of each of Scotland's NHS trusts; [15206]

(2) if he will list the executive and non-executive directors of each of Scotland's NHS trusts. [15207]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the information requested in respect of the 39 NHS trusts is rather lengthy, I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines have been issued to NHS trusts about replying to correspondence from hon. Members with particular reference to the time scale for response. [15208]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No specific guidelines have been issued to NHS trusts concerning replies to correspondence from hon. Members.

Quangos

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has carried out into the employment background of members of quangos operating in Scotland. [15196]

Mr. Lang: None. I am aware of the background of persons whom I am appointing to non-departmental public bodies and NHS bodies at the time when I make the appointments.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures are adopted by his Department in recruiting individuals to the membership of quangos. [15197]

Mr. Lang: The relevant procedures are set out in the Cabinet Office publication "Guide on Public Appointment Procedures", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The recent "Review of Guidance on Public Appointments," published on 6 February and also available in the Library, has recommended a number of changes to make these procedures more effective. The Government have accepted these recommendations and have instructed Departments to implement them, subject to any other changes which may be necessary in the light of the recommendations of the Committee on Standards in Public Life.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many quangos operate within Scotland; and what is the total annual expenditure of these bodies in each year since 1978–79. [15203]

Mr. Lang: A full list of non-departmental public bodies, nationalised industries and NHS bodies sponsored by my Department at 1 April 1994 is published in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies 1994", which is available in the Library of the House. A full list of non-departmental public bodies in existence for each year since 1979 is available in the following publications: "Report on Non-Departmental Public Bodies"—Pliatzky report, Cm 7797, January 1980; "Non-Departmental Public Bodies: Facts and Figures 1980"; "Non-Departmental Public Bodies: Facts and Figures 1981"; and "Public Bodies", published annually since 1982. This publication shows the gross expenditure of each body and the amount of that expenditure funded by central government. Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the quangos currently in operation in Scotland. [15204]

Mr. Lang: A list of the non-departmental public bodies, nationalised industries and NHS bodies sponsored by my Department at 1 April 1994 is shown in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies 1994", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the quangos which have been established in Scotland in each financial year since 1978–79. [15205]

Mr. Lang: Lists have been prepared centrally for each year from 1986 to 1993 of non-departmental public bodies which have been created and abolished. Copies are available in the Library of the House. Such summary data for the years 1979 to 1985 were not prepared and could be reconstructed only at disproportionate cost. Between 1 April 1993 and 1 April 1994, the following bodies were added to the list of Scottish Office-sponsored non-departmental public bodies: Scottish Arts Council, Scottish Further Education Unit, Post Qualification Board for Health Service Pharmacists in Scotland.

Right to Buy

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the grounds for refusal of an application by a tenant under the right to buy legislation. [14542]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1995]: There are certain safeguards within the right to buy provisions to permit local authorities to retain a stock of houses which are required for specific purposes.

Under section 61(4) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 the right to buy does not apply to groups of houses provided with facilities—including a call system and a warden service—specially designed or adapted for the needs of elderly or disabled people. These are generally known as sheltered housing.

Section 69 of the Act gives public sector landlords discretion to apply to the Secretary of State for permission to refuse to sell houses with features suitable for occupation by persons of pensionable age. Such houses must have facilities which make them substantially different from those of an ordinary house.

An application to purchase may also be refused under schedule 2 to the 1987 Act where the tenant is required to live in the house as a consequence of his employment for the better performance of his duties; or where the house forms part of a building, or comes within the boundaries of another building, which is held by the authority mainly for purposes other than housing.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment the Scottish Office has made of the average profit which is made by an owner-occupier when the owner sells a former council property purchased under the right to buy legislation. [14530]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1995]: The Scottish Office does not collect information on the resale price of former council property. When a former council house is sold, the difference between the right to buy discounted price and the price obtained in a sale on the open market will depend on various factors; including the original level of discount, the marketability of the property, and the state of the housing market at the time.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate for each local authority in Scotland (a) the number of dwellings they currently own, (b) the number of properties sold under the right to buy legislation and (c) the number of properties sold as a percentage of their total housing stock listed in descending order. [14531]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1995]: Information on the number of dwellings owned by local authorities is published in the statistical bulletin HSG/1994/9 "Housing Trends in Scotland—Quarter ended 30 June 1994". Information on the number of local authority dwellings sold to sitting tenants by each local authority, including those sold under the right to buy legislation, is published each quarter in the same statistical bulletin series. The series is available in the House Library.

Local Authority Housing Construction

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new dwellings have been constructed by local authorities for each financial year in Scotland since 1979–80. [14532]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1995]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Year	Number of new dwellings built
1979–80	4,818
1980–81	5,199
1981–82	3,141
1982–83	2,222
1983–84	2,470
1984–85	2,024
1985–86	1,880
1986–87	1,678
1987–88	2,021
1988–89	1,818
1989–90	1,243
1990–91	987
1991–92	1,030

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much revenue the Scottish Office has made available for new house building in each financial year since 1979–80 for each local authority in Scotland. [14533]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1995]: Capital allocations of over £5.9 billion have been issued to local authorities since 1979–80 for investment to meet local housing needs as shown in the table. It is for local authorities themselves to determine how to allocate the resources made available to them between the improvement of their stock and new house building.

The annual publication, "Scottish Local Government Financial Statistics", which is held in the Library of the House, provides information on capital expenditure by local authorities on new house building.

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was spent on central administration and policy formulation by his Department in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14256]

Mr. Lang: Details of my Department's running costs and administrative spending for the years 1989–90 to 1997–98 are contained in table 7.1 of the Scottish Office departmental report, Cm 2814, a copy of which is available in the Members' Library.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent of preparatory costs for GP fundholders for each health board area in Scotland for each year since the introduction of GP fundholding. [14496]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The information requested is not available centrally. Health board returns on the money disbursed to support the operational costs of GP fundholders in their area do not differentiate between GP practices who are operational fundholders and those in their preparatory period.

A preparatory fundholding practice is entitled to claim an allowance up to a maximum level—£17,500 in 1994–95. A practice may also claim reimbursement for the installation and other associated costs of computer equipment, which is agreed by the health board as being essential to their participation in fundholding. Finance for this reimbursement expenditure comes from the health board's cash-limited GMS allocation for computer expenditure. It is the responsibility of health boards to monitor the cost-effectiveness of each preparatory fundholding practice's use of such preparatory costs, as part of the health board's statutory role in monitoring the overall performance of GP fundholders.

Polling and Public Survey Organisations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the employment of polling or public survey organisations by his Department during the current and previous financial years, on the organisations employed by his Departments, on the values of individual contracts for these services, on the total amounts of money spent and on the purposes of the research undertaken by these organisations. [14512]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The information requested is shown in the table. The fee paid to individual contractors is commercially confidential and therefore cannot be detailed. The total cost of the 40 surveys listed was £1.153 million.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

World Summit for Social Development

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy to support the proposal put forward by the United Nations Development Programme to the world summit for social development, requiring donor states to devote a minimum of 20 per cent. of their development assistance to meeting basic human needs. [14916]

Mr. Baldry: The world summit for social development declaration called for greater efforts to be made, by donors and developing countries, to help meet basic social needs. We welcome this: the whole of the United Kingdom aid programme is about helping people in poorer countries to improve their lives.

Common definitions and measures of "basic social needs" have yet to be established in the international development context—we stand ready to support further work in this area.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the estimates about the number of people in Sierra Leone who have been displaced and the number who have become refugees. [14852]

Mr. Baldry: According to the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs, there are currently 500,000 to 700,000 internally displaced persons in Sierra Leone; in addition it is estimated that, as at the beginning of March 1995, there were over 200,000 Sierra Leonean refugees in Guinea and a further 120,000 refugees in Liberia.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British aid organisations are still active in Sierra Leone; and which have withdrawn because of the security situation. [14846]

Mr. Baldry: British NGOs still active in Sierra Leone are Action Aid, CARE (UK), Concern Universal, the British Red Cross and the Methodist Church Overseas Division. Christian Aid, CAFOD and Village Aid are providing help through local organisations.

Voluntary Service Overseas and Water Aid have recently withdrawn for security reasons.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests for international assistance have been made by the Government of Sierra Leone. [14849]

Mr. Baldry: There has been no official appeal for international assistance by the Government of Sierra Leone.

UNHCR

Mr. Gary Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is giving to the general programmes budget of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees in 1995.

Mr. Baldry: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has approved a grant of £6 million for UNHCR's general programmes budget for 1995. The UK is one of the foremost national donors of UNHCR; last year our contributions, both in direct payments and assistance in kind, exceeded £60 million in value, the highest level of contribution ever.

Written Answers to Questions

TREASURY

Pool Betting Duty

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue he expects to receive from the pool betting duty in (a) the current year and (b) next year. [15399]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 21 March 1995]: The amount of pool betting duty receipts is expected to be about £340 million in 1994–95. No separate forecasts are made for pool betting duty for future years.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax was received from the pool betting duty in December, January and February 1993–94 and December, January and February 1994–95. [15398]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 21 March 1995]: The amount of pool betting receipts for December, January and February 1993–94 was £88.2 million and for December, January and February 1994–95 was £81.6 million.

Spread Betting

Ms Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the likely effects of deregulating sports spread betting; [14795]

(2) what consultations he has had concerning the deregulation of sports spread betting; [14793]

(3) what alternative forms of regulations he has considered for the control of sports spread betting; [14796]

(4) what regulations exist to protect participants in spread betting and to ensure they are fully informed of the risks. [14794]

Mr. Nelson: Spread bets are currently regulated as investments under the terms of the Financial Services Act 1986. Companies offering spread betting services are required to become authorised by joining one of the self-regulating organisations recognised under that Act. In doing so, they are subject to detailed conduct of business rules.

Spread betting based on matters such as the performance of financial indices will continue to be regulated in this way. But we intend that spread betting on matters such as sporting events and the weather should be excluded from the scope of the Act.

The financial services deregulation task force identified non-financial spread betting as an area for deregulation. My officials have consulted industry representatives, as well as the Securities and Investments Board and the Home Office. A draft amendment to exclude certain non-financial spread betting from the Financial Services Act is under preparation, and the Treasury will shortly be consulting with all interested parties on its terms.

Barings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Her Majesty's Government and Bank of England officials will co-operate fully with all requests for information made by judicial managers, representatives of SIMEX and other authorised persons in Singapore charged to carry out inquiries into activities at Barings.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 March 1995]: If any such requests are received by the Treasury, officials will co-operate fully to the extent allowed by the applicable statutory framework and the need to avoid confusion or unnecessary duplication between inquiries. I understand that the Bank of England takes the same view.

Privatised Companies

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the total tax receipts for the last financial year from industries that have been denationalised since 1979.

Sir George Young [holding answer 28 February 1995]: Corporation tax receipts in 1994–95 from privatised companies are likely to be £2.5 billion.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr Banks) of 17 November 1986, Official Report, column 82, as to the number of individual shareholders retaining shares in each of the concerns privatised since 1979. [15401]

Sir George Young: This information is not held centrally, but the number of shareholders may be found in individual companies' annual reports.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the exchequer what was the total amount of debt written off in each of the privatisations and sale of Government assets since 1979, for each company privatised. [15358]

Sir George Young: The table shows the debt written off, and the type of debt concerned, for each company privatised where this occurred. This includes all debt written off since 1979 in companies subsequently privatised. The liability to pay interest on debt remains up to the date of repayment or write-off.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the administrative costs for the share offers relating to (a) British Gas, (b) the electricity generating companies, (c) the electricity distribution companies, (d) the two Scottish electricity companies and (e) the water companies in the same manner as he did in his answer to the hon. Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) of 5 March 1992, Official Report, column 240. in respect of British Telecom. [15400]

Income Tax

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the number of those who will pay income tax in 1995–96; and how many people paid income tax in each year from 1978–79 to 1994–95.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 March 1995]: Provisional estimates for 1993–94 and onwards are given in the table. Figures for earlier years are available in table 2.1 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1994", a copy of which is in the Library. The increase in taxpayer numbers is largely due to economic growth. In addition, the number of people in work is increasing—UK work force in employment up 174,000 between December 1993 and December 1994.

Year	estimated numbers of individuals paying tax (millions)
1993–94	25.5
1994–95	25.7
1995–96	26.2

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the numbers of poor people who would be assisted by the zero rating of standing charges in regard to VAT on fuel. [14980]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Zero rating of standing charges would not necessarily help the very poor who frequently are on a prepayment meter tariff which is for a single supply and does not identify a standing charge. The Government have put in place a substantial package of help for those least able to meet the increase in their fuel bills. In addition, the Government have increased funding of the home energy efficiency scheme to £100 million a year from April. The burden of VAT on fuel will bear fully only on people of working age not receiving means-tested benefits.

Vocational Courses

Ms Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax relief on training costs is given to people who enrol in and pay fees on national vocational qualification and other vocational courses; and if he will make a statement. [15161]

Sir George Young: Since 6 April 1992, tax relief has been available to individuals for the payments they make for training capable of counting towards national vocational qualifications and Scottish vocational qualifications, subject to certain conditions. Relief at the basic rate of tax is given by deduction at source from the fees by the trainee, so both taxpayers and non-taxpayers can benefit.

Employees may also be able to claim tax relief for certain job-related training expenses under an Inland Revenue extra-statutory concession—ESC A64—if the requirements of the concession are met.

The self-employed can also get tax relief for business expenditure on training which is revenue in nature and incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of their trade or profession.

Retail Prices Index

Sir Timothy Sainsbury: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 275, on consumer expenditure patterns, if he will ask the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee to consider how the retail prices index might be modified to take better account of the spending patterns of consumers varying in response to sales and special offers. [15387]

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to do so. The Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee has recommended repeatedly that the quantities and qualities of the contents of the RPI basket should be held constant during the year. The weights given to different items and types of shop are, therefore, reviewed annually. This reflects changes in consumers' shopping patterns more closely than in most other countries, which only re-weight their indices at intervals of about five years.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on his Budget proposal to extend personal equity plans to corporate bonds, preference shares and convertibles. [16474]

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend's Budget proposal to admit corporate bonds, preference shares and convertibles to PEPs has been widely welcomed. The Inland Revenue will be issuing draft regulations, for consultation, on 31 March. Comments will be invited as soon as possible, but, in any event, by no later than 12 May. In the light of the consultation, the regulations will be finalised by the end of May, laid before the House in June and, subject to the negative resolution procedure, will come into force three weeks later.

EMPLOYMENT

Cumbria Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress Cumbria TEC is making in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [16586]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce that Cumbria training and enterprise council has now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standard we set for the award of the new three-year licences. Its licence will be effective from April 1995.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers of full-time employees on adult rates in (a) Greater Manchester, (b) Merseyside, (c) Cheshire, (d) Lancashire and (e) the north-west region whose weekly earnings excluding overtime were (i) less than £220 and (ii) less than £200 broken down by the categories (1) manual males, (2) non-manual males, (3) all full-time males, (4) manual females, (5) non-manual females and (6) full-time females giving total numbers of employees in the sample in each case; and what is the number of part-time employees on adult rates in (a) to (e) whose hourly earnings excluding overtime, were (iii) less than £6 and (iv) less than £5.50, broken down by the categories, (7) manual females, (8) non-manual females, (9) all part-time females, (10) manual males, (11) non-manual males and (12) all part-time males, giving total number of employees in the sample in each case.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what would be the value of the enterprise allowance at current values if the annual rate of inflation had been applied since the scheme's inception. [15063]

Mr. Paice: It is estimated that the value of the £40 weekly enterprise allowance, introduced nationally in 1983, would be £69 at current values if the annual rate of inflation had been applied throughout.

The standard rate of £40 ceased to apply in 1991 when the programme was renamed the business start-up scheme. Training and enterprise councils, which deliver the scheme, could then pay between £20 and £90 per week.

BSUS resources are now part of the single regeneration budget. This will fund locally initiated economic regeneration projects, including start-up activity, where they are proposed and approved.

Asbestos

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of health dangers to workers associated with asbestos; if he will provide details of enforcement of existing controls; what new steps his Department proposes to take; and if he will make a statement. [15317]

Mr. Oppenheim: The most recent formal assessment of the effects on health of exposure to asbestos was conducted by Sir Richard Doll and Professor Julian Peto on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission. The results were published in 1985. Recent research by Professor Peto and the Health and Safety Executive, published in The Lancet on 4 March 1995, has shown that although the assessment is still valid, the extent of occupational exposure to asbestos dust was more widespread than previously thought. That research indicates that those employed in the building maintenance industry such as plumbers and electricians may be at risk from occasional exposure to asbestos installed in existing buildings. HSE is currently mounting a campaign to raise awareness of the risks from asbestos in these occupational groups.

All work with asbestos is governed by the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987, as amended in January 1993. In addition, the most dangerous—that with asbestos insulation and coating—is covered by the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations (ALR) 1983. The provisional enforcement figures for 1993–94 are set out in the following table:

	Informations laid	Convictions	Average fine per conviction (£)
ALR	6	6	1,117

HSE is satisfied that current legislation and guidance provide an adequate framework for preventing and controlling the risks posed by exposure to asbestos dust.

Training

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether unemployed people who have once been required to attend either (a) a restart course, or (b) a workwise—worklink in Scotland—course, or (c) a job-plan workshop, and who have fully complied with that requirement, will be free from any subsequent requirements to attend such a workshop or course in a particular spell of unemployment; and if he will make a statement. [15151]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 23 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about attendance on Jobplan, Workwise (Worklink in Scotland) and Restart Courses.

It may help if I explain that since December 1990 there has been a requirement for people to attend a Restart Course after two years unemployment if they fail to take up an offer of a place on an Employment Department (ED) programme at their Restart interview. This requirement is covered in the Income Support (General) 1990 Regulation 21A. This regulation was amended in March 1993 to cover people who have been unemployed for 12 months or more and they are now required to attend a Jobplan Workshop if they refuse an offer of a place on an ED programme.

In April a new package of help for 18–24 year olds called Workwise and 1-2-1 will replace Jobplan for people in this age group who have reached 12 months of unemployment.

It is not out intention that people should be required to attend more than one Jobplan Workshop or equivalent for 18–24 year olds or more than one Restart Course within a spell of unemployment if they have already been required to attend and have completed the full programme. I hope this is helpful.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions apply when a person has to leave training for work or community action because of (a) operational difficulties encountered by their provider, including the unavailability of a suitable work placement, or (b) illness or accident, so as to allow the person to qualify for entry to another training for work or community action place; and if he will make a statement. [15183]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils will be required to provide alternative training where a provider is no longer in a position to provide training for work as agreed in the person's individual training plan, so that the individual does not have leave the programme. Where trainees experience an extended period of sickness, they will be able to re-enter the programme without having to requalify.

If people have to leave community action due to operational difficulties encountered by the provider or through illness or accident, they are able to rejoin the programme, if they wish to do so, without having to requalify.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if unemployed claimants are offered a place in (a) training for work or (b) community action, or (c) job clubs or (d) the job interview guarantee at a restart or other counselling interview would they lose benefit if they fail to participate; if they take up a place on any of these programmes, if they can leave at any time without incurring a benefit penalty; and if he will make a statement. [15152]

Miss Widdecombe: Participation in employment and training programmes is generally voluntary and failure to participate does not carry a benefit sanction. The only exception to this is at the 12 and 24-month stage of unemployment where clients are asked to attend a job plan workshop and restart course respectively unless they take up a place on another Employment Department programme.

Consequently, people who agree to participate in one of the programmes listed by the hon. Member but who fail to start, or who leave prematurely, are not usually subject to benefit sanctions. They are, however, interviewed to see if there is a problem, to make sure the course of action previously agreed is still appropriate and to see what other help may be needed.

Employment Medical Advisory Service

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many doctors were working within the employment medical advisory service for each year since 1979, broken down by region; what studies are currently in progress on the work of EMAS doctors; what are the estimated number of EMAS doctors for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 broken down by region; and if he will make a statement. [15136]

Mr. Oppenheim: The following tables show the numbers of doctors working by region in the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service on 1 April for each year since 1979.

In 1979 EMAS was organised in the following regions:

	Number
Eastern and Midlands	7.0
London and South East	13.5
Northern	5.5
North East	8.5
North West	13.0
Scotland	9.0
South West	6.5
Wales	3.5
West Midlands	9.5

From 1980 to 1984 EMAS was organised as follows:

Year	Eastern and SE Midlands	London South and SE	London North	Northern	North East	North West	Scotland	South West	Wales	West Midlands
1980	6	7	5	6	6.5	13	8	6	4.5	9.5

From 1985 to date EMAS has been organised in areas which make up the following regions:

Note:
From 1993 the figures do not include the director or deputy director of medical services who were based in headquarters.

A prior options study of EMAS activities to consider whether they could be undertaken by alternative means is currently in progress.

The following table shows the anticipated numbers of EMAS doctors by region for 1 April 1995 and 1 April 1996.

Year	Home Counties	London and South East	Midlands	North West	Scotland	Wales and South West	Yorkshire and North East

Jobseekers' Records

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what records of active job seeking he expects to be kept by claimants who have problems with reading and writing, or whose first language is not English; and if he will made a statement. [15174]

Miss Widdecombe: Clients who have problems with reading and writing, or whose first language is not English, are not expected to keep written records. They are asked to provide a verbal account of the steps they have taken to seek work. If they have particular difficulties, I would expect the Employment Service to offer them appropriate advice and assistance.

Jobcentres

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy in respect of the advertising in jobcentres of full-time jobs at (a) £40 and (b) £45 a week; and if he will make a statement. [15788]

Miss Widdecombe: Rates of pay for particular jobs are matters for agreement between employers and workers. Jobcentres advise employers who offer vacancies with low pay about the local prevailing rates of pay for the job and their likely prospects of filling the vacancy.

Lifeguards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce a standard training qualification to be required of all coastal lifeguards. [14784]

Mr. Paice: I am replying as Minister responsible for training and vocational qualifications. The Government have no plans to introduce a new qualification to be required of all coastal lifeguards. The Royal Life Saving Society (UK) awards the national beach lifeguarding qualification.

Repetitive Strain Injuries

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to amending the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 to require cases of repetitive strain injuries to be reported to the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement. [15213]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Commission is currently considering the responses to its public consultation document on proposals for change to the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985. The proposals include adding to the regulations' list of reportable diseases certain categories of upper limb disorder, so-called repetitive strain injuries.

A copy of the commission's consultation document has been placed in the Library.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps his Department is taking to (a) monitor the number of men and women dying from mesothelioma, (b) monitor the age of the men and women dying from mesothelioma and (c) estimate the specific years that the victims of mesothelioma faced exposure to asbestos; [15214]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to monitor the occupational backgrounds of the victims of mesothelioma. [15216]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive receives copies from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the General Register Office (Scotland) of all death certificates mentioning mesothelioma. The age, sex, latest full-time occupation, and other details on the death certificate are recorded on a database. Tabulations of mesothelioma deaths by age and sex are published in "Health and Safety Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library.

An analysis of the occupational breakdown of mesothelioma deaths will be published in the "Occupational Health Decennial Supplement", a joint publication by OPCS and HSE, on Thursday 30 March 1995. A copy will be placed in the Library.

The timing of mesothelioma victims' asbestos exposure cannot be determined from routine sources. This issue is to be addressed in a planned case control study of mesothelioma cases.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by region the annual cost of advertising job vacancies in the press and on radio in Scotland. [15597]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 23 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the annual cost of advertising job vacancies in the Press and on the Radio in Scotland, listed by region.

Unfortunately this information is not recorded centrally, as it is the responsibility of the local Business Manager and is therefore managed at a local level.

The Employment Service uses 12 Radio stations spread over Scotland and over 100 different Newspapers. This makes the cost of collecting this information prohibitive.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful.

Outreach Projects

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by region the number of outreach projects providing access to vacancy and advisory services operating in Scotland. [15599]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 23 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of Outreach projects providing access to vacancy and advisory services operating in Scotland. We have interpreted Outreach projects to mean those where information outside and complementary to Employment Service (ES) programmes and services is provided by advisors in locations other than ES offices.

The ES has supported, either in full or as part of a joint funded initiative, nine Outreach type projects throughout Scotland in 1995–95. These are based in the following locations;

Strathclyde Region:-

Castlemilk Economic Development Agency Office, Castlemilk, Glasgow;

Ferguslie Park partnership premises, Ferguslie Park, Paisley;

The Ethnic Minority Enterprise Centre in Glasgow, covering projects in Shawlands, Govan and Maryhill areas;

Drumchapel, Glasgow;

The Ashgill, Netherburn and Stonehouse areas of Lanarkshire.

Lothian Region:-

The Pilton Partnership premises in Edinburgh.

Grampian Region:-

The Forres Area Action Project premises in Forres, Morayshire.

I hope this information is helpful.

Freephones

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to extend the Employment Service freephone services in Scotland. [15598]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 23 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about what plans the Employment Service (ES) has to extend freephone services in Scotland.

While we are continuously reviewing the services we provide to clients in rural areas, there are no plans at present to extend the freephone facility.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reserves were held by each TEC at the end of the financial year 1992–93 and 1993–94. [15833]

Mr. Paice: A list of English training and enterprise councils and their accumulated reserves, as shown in their annual statutory audited accounts, at the end of the financial year 1992–93 and 1993–94 are shown in the following tables:

PRIME MINISTER

Administration and Policy Formulation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister what was the amount of money spent on administration and policy formulation by the Prime Minister's office in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14648]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1995]: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 22 March 1995 to the hon. Member for Meirionnyd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science.

Official Functions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister what was the amount of money spent on functions hosted by him in his official capacity as Prime Minister in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14783]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1995]: Expenditure from my office's budget on functions hosted by me in my official capacity as Prime Minister in 1993–94 was £33,000; information for projected expenditure is not available.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Service Agency

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place in the Library a copy of (a) the logo for the Court Service Agency, (b) the winning design, produced by Jeanette Paris, of last year's departmental staff logo competition and (c) such of the Epps Partnership drawings working up the design as are in existence. [15780]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Yes. Arrangements have been made for the designs to be placed in the Library.

George Long

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date the case of George Long was referred to the Court of Appeal; whether a date has yet been fixed for the appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Home Secretary referred the case of George Long to the Court of Appeal on 16 March 1994. The hearing of the appeal was due to take place on 4 April 1995, but was taken out of the list on 20 March 1995 at the request of the parties' solicitors.

Magistrates, West Yorkshire

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the political balance of magistrates within West Yorkshire.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The political balance of magistrates within West Yorkshire on the latest information available is as follows:

Conservative 566
Labour 401
Liberal/Democratic 245
Independent/Not known 160

Structured Settlements

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Government have to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission's report "Structured settlements and interim and provisional damages". [16476]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government welcome the report and will introduce legislation implementing all the recommendations made in it, both on the rationalisation of the structured settlements system and on other aspects of the law of damages, when a suitable opportunity arises.

Trusts

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Government have to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission's report "The Law of Trusts—Delegation by Individual Trustees", Law Com. No. 220. [16477]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government have decided to accept the Law Commission's recommendations subject to one amendment, agreed with the commission, which will ensure that there will be no need to renew an enduring power of attorney if the donor of the power has a beneficial as well as a fiduciary interest in the relevant property. The Government will introduce legislation to implement these proposals when a suitable legislative opportunity occurs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity Supplies

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was paid by regional electricity companies to Electricité de France for supplies via the cross-channel interconnector in each of the last five years; and what proportion in cash and percentage terms was accounted for by it being electricity sourced from nuclear power stations. [15839]

Mr. Eggar: The amounts paid for electricity supplies across the interconnector are a commercial matter for the contracting parties. I understand that those RECs with output contracts with EDF have been able to satisfy the Director General of Electricity Supply that the electricity they import from France is supplied from designated nuclear stations.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of the electricity supplied by Electricitié de France through the cross-channel interconnector in each of the last five years. [15840]

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the parties to the relevant contracts.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much electricity was imported from France through the cross-channel interconnector in each of the last five years; and how much was produced by nuclear power. [15842]

Mr. Eggar: Electricity imports from France have been as follows:

Electricity imports from France, GWh
Year
1990: 11,749
1991: 16,466
1992: 16,786
1993: 16,763
1994: 16,942
Source: National Grid Company plc

I understand that those regional electricity companies with output contracts with Electricitié de France have been able to satisfy the Director General of Electricity Supply that the electricity they import from France is supplied from designated nuclear stations.

Television Decoders

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of whether it will be possible to oblige manufacturers of decoding systems for television transmission to fit, in addition to the proprietary conditional access system, a connector to the decoder box for a common interface; and if the Government support the concept of a common interface throughout Europe.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government have looked closely at this issue. The development of a common interface for conditional access equipment is an option provided for in the draft EC directive on standards for television broadcasting. A common position on this directive was adopted by the Council on 13 November 1994. The directive is now being considered by the European Parliament. The European Digital Video Broadcasting Group—an industry body with a standard-making role—has developed an agreed technical specification for such an interface. If the directive is adopted in the terms of the common position, the common interface will be an option, but not a requirement, for manufacturers of set-top boxes. However, manufacturers will be obliged to incorporate in equipment the capacity to descramble signals according to a common European algorithm.

The Government have supported these developments. The Government consider that it is important that the option of a common interface should be open to manufacturers and to those establishing conditional access systems for digital television. But the Government are also firmly of the view that a common interface should not be mandatory for conditional access systems: such systems involve a considerable investment, and face a real risk of piracy. Not all operators will want manufacturers to install a common interface; they should not be obliged to do so.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Beith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when and in what form he expects to announce the results of the nuclear review. [15447]

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 19 October 1994, Official Report, column 239.

Surveys

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the employment of polling or public survey organisations by his Department during the current and previous financial years, on the organisations employed by his Department, on the values of individual contracts for these services, on the total amounts of money spent and on the purposes of the research undertaken by these organisations. [14501]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The tables list only those surveys commissioned by my Department from polling or public survey organisations in 1993–94 and 1994–95. Information on the individual fees paid cannot be disclosed due to commercial confidentiality considerations, but the total value of those listed was £270,000 in 1993–94 and £329,000 in 1994–95. Most surveys commissioned by my Department are of businesses and are conducted by business consultants or by the Department itself. Polling organisations compete for these contracts in accordance with competitive tendering rules, and sometimes gain contracts for other than polling work.

Mr. Enright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has held with regard to allotment holders on British Coal property. [13902]

Mr. Page: We are actively pursuing with British Coal options for the future of allotments. No decisions have yet been taken.

Executive Pay Review

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the Greenbury committee on executive pay to report. [15434]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The CBI announced on 16 January that Sir Richard Greenbury would chair a group to review the structure within which executive remuneration was determined and disclosed. The announcement indicated that the group would aim to report within six months.

Investing Companies

Mr. Legg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what grants, aid or relief are available to companies investing in the United Kingdom from (a) Government, (b) the European Union and (c) local authorities and how much money was granted in each year since 1990 under each source. [15341]

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not collated. Schemes run by my Department are published annually in "The Government's Expenditure Plans, Trade and Industry", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Legg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) non-EU and (b) EU foreign companies have invested in the United Kingdom since 1990. [15323]

Mr. Eggar: According to figures notified to my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau, for the financial years 1990 to 1994, from a total of 1,478 inward investment projects in the UK, 983 were from non-EU countries and the remaining 495 from EU countries. These figures are based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest, and take no account of subsequent developments.

Mr. Legg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of assets repatriated from the United Kingdom by overseas companies since 1990. [15320]

Mr. Eggar: The information is not available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

"Competing for Quality"

Mr. Legg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide a breakdown of the results of the "Competing for Quality" programme, on a Department-by-Department basis, for the years 1992–93 and 1993–94 giving the proportion of work awarded for each Department which was abolished, privatised, contracted out, awarded to the in-house team or led to internal restructuring and the level of savings achieved by each Department.

Mr. Horam: The results of the "Competing for Quality" programme, covering the period from April 1992 to September 1994, have been broken down as requested. Copies have been placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Consulates

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost of maintaining United Kingdom consulates in 1993–94; what are the projections for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [14268]

Mr. Goodlad: Details of the actual and projected costs of maintaining United Kingdom consulates are provided in the following list:

Year	Cost £ million
1993–94:	50.1

Palestine

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitment he has made to send United Kingdom observers to supervise the Palestinian legislative elections; and if this has been accepted by President Arafat. [15534]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During his visit to Gaza on 14 March, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reaffirmed the EU's willingness to consider co-ordinating international observation of the Palestinian elections. Chairman Arafat warmly welcomed this. The nature of the UK's participation will be considered once the agreement has been reached between the Israelis and the Palestinians on the arrangements for the elections and their observation.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress was made in implementing the second chapter of the declaration of principles at 9 March meeting between Shimon Peres and Yaser Arafat. [15532]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Peres and Mr. Arafat agreed to aim to complete negotiations on elections and redeployment on the west bank by 1 July, and on various confidence-building measures—including the opening of safe passage routes between Gaza and Jericho, the reactivation of the ministerial committee reviewing procedures for the release of Palestinian prisoners, and the expedition of passage through checkpoints. They agreed to increase the number of permits for Palestinian workers in Israel to 21,000. Two new joint committees on security and civilian issues have been formed. It was also agreed to transfer additional economic powers to the Palestinians in the west bank.

Foreign Ministers Meeting

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of EU Foreign Ministers in Carcassonne. [15673]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs attended the informal EU Foreign Ministers meeting in Carcassonne on 18 and 19 March. Discussion covered a wide range of topical issues. The EU's relations with Russia and the situation in the former Yugoslavia were the main focus. On Russia, EU Foreign Ministers agreed a broad strategy covering the EU's political, economic and security relationship, taking into account the economic reform process in Russia, the situation in Chechnya and questions of European security architexture.

Discussion on the former Yugoslavia concentrated on the need to ensure the extension of the cessation of hostilities in Bosnia; the continuation of the presence of UN forces in Croatia; and the importance of carrying forward proposals for a durable and peaceful settlement of the conflict.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration for the current year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constituted.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The number of employees on temporary contracts of less than 51 weeks' duration are as follows:

No. of casuals	81	80	83	99	106	115
Percentage of total work force	0.83	0.81	1.01	1.24	1.38	1.53

[1] Projected figures for 1995–96.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Independent Commission for Police Complaints

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) expenditure for the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland for 1994–95 and (b) projected expenditure for the same body for 1996–97. [15411]

Sir John Wheeler: Forecast expenditure by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland for the 1994–95 financial year is £781,000. At this stage, projected expenditure by the commission for the 1996–97 financial year is estimated at £823,000.

School Transfer Tests

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the details of the marking formulae for the school transfer test. [14895]

Mr. Ancram: The compilers of the tests prepare a marking key for each of the tests. The key indicates the correct answer, or the range of acceptable answers, to each question and, if appropriate, the basis on which the available marks should be awarded. The marking keys are adjusted to take account of unforeseen acceptable answers which emerge during marking, upon which all candidates' papers are remarked accordingly.

Copies of the marking keys are made available to the principals of primary and preparatory schools when marking is complete.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make available the individual child's marks to parents of children who undertake the school transfer test; [14896]

(2) what marks were awarded in the school transfer results for examinee number 21949/8. [14898]

Mr. Ancram: It is not the Department's policy to issue transfer test marks for individual candidates.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what adjustments are made in the marking results of the school transfer test to take account of the individual child's age. [14897]

Mr. Ancram: The marks obtained by the children in each section—English, mathematics and science—of each test are adjusted for age, using a statistical analysis of the scores to calculate an amount to be added to the scores of the younger children; the younger the child, the larger the allowance will be. The allowance for each child is calculated in accordance with the day of his or her birth.

Public Record Office

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide details of the launch of the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland as a next steps executive agency. [16202]

Mr. Moss: The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland will be formally established as an executive agency on 1 April 1995.

The key performance targets set for the agency for 1995–96 are:

1. to (a) process 1,100 linear feet of privately deposited records and ensure that 100 per cent. of all new such "open" material is processed within one year of receipt; and (b) reappraise approximately 10,000 linear feet of records with a view to eliminating low-grade material;
2. to reduce the unit cost of £16.62 per reader visit by 6 per cent. to £15.79 without diminishing the quality of service;
3. to process written enquiries from customers within 10 working days of receipt in 70 per cent. of cases and within 14 working days in 95 per cent. of cases; and
4. to manage the agency's work load—including an anticipated 3 per cent. increase in readers and the introduction of extended opening hours—while ensuring that expenditure is within financial limits approved by the Department.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Private Detective Agencies

Mr. Denham: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the schemes, activities and projects on which Brays Detective Agency has been retained by the Treasury Solicitor, in each case giving the Government Department sponsoring the scheme, activity or project; what is the purpose of the contract with Brays; and what is the total expenditure to date. [15119]

The Attorney-General: Brays Detective Agency is used by the Treasury Solicitor on a case-by-case basis rather than under any standing contract. The principal Government Departments for which work is undertaken by the agency are:

Department	Activity	[1] Amount £
Department of Transport	Property-related work, mainly in relation to road schemes, actions for possession and actions against trespassers	310,930
Ministry of Defence	Work in relation to possession, debt and personal injury actions	8,400

[1] Amounts paid to the agency to date in the financial year 1994–95.

SCOTLAND

Sheep Scab

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of cases of ectoparasitic infestation in sheep for (a) the two years before compulsory dipping was abolished and (b) the two years since compulsory dipping has been abolished.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 31 January 1995, Official Report, column 652, for the number of cases of sheep scab during the period in question.

Other ectoparasitic infections of sheep have never been notifiable in Scotland and consequently information on the number of cases of these diseases is not available.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the national nature reserves. [15125]

Sir Hector Monro: The national nature reserves are listed in the annual reports of Scottish Natural Heritage. Copies of the reports for 1992–93 and 1993–94 are in the Library.

Scottish Sleeper Services

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in favour of the withdrawal of the Fort William and Carlisle to London sleeper services and of the withdrawal of Scotland to London Motorail services. [15143]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Rape Convictions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the median age of men convicted of rape for the first time; and if he will make a statement. [14260]

Mr. Maclean: The convictions of two samples of men born in 1953 and 1958 have been traced up to the ages of 39 and 33 respectively. The samples included 75 men convicted of rape for the first time. The median age for this group was 22 years old.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of convicted rapists imprisoned in English and Welsh prisons in 1994; and if he will make a statement. [14261]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 23 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for the number of convicted rapists imprisoned in English and Welsh prisons in 1994 and if he will make a statement.

Provisional information for 1994 shows that 446 persons were received into a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales under sentence for rape.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convicted prisoners were admitted to a prison hospital or a general hospital in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; what these figures are as percentages of the general hospital population; and if he will make a statement; [14262]

(2) how many convicted rapists were admitted to a prison hospital or a general hospital in (a) 1993 and

(b) 1994; what these figures are as percentages of the total number of convicted rapists in prison; and if he will make a statement. [14263]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 23 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about admissions of convicted prisoners to prison or general hospitals.

I regret that information on admissions for in-patient care is not collected by remand and convicted prisoner categories, or by type of offence.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average sentence given to men convicted of rape in (a) 1990, (b) 1992 and (c) 1994: and if he will make a statement; [14266]

(2) what was the average sentence given to men convicted of rape in 1980; what was the average duration of the sentence served by these men; and if he will make a statement. [14267]

Mr. Maclean: The information on the average sentence length given for adult males convicted of rape for the years 1980, 1990, 1992 and 1993 is given in the table. 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Precise information on the average duration of the sentence served by men convicted of rape in 1980 is not available, but those given determinate sentences would have served up to two thirds of their sentence depending on whether and at what stage they were granted parole.

Average sentence length imposed at the Crown Court on adult males—aged 21 and over—for rape offences, 1980, 1990, 1992 and 1993

England and Wales

Attempted rape	1980	41.2
	1992	60.4

Lifeguards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make compulsory the provision of lifeguards in coastal areas frequented by holiday-makers; [14785]

(2) if he will make the provision of coastal lifeguards and beach safety procedures a statutory duty of local authorities; [14786]

(3) if he will establish a central body to control and standardise the provision of coastal lifeguards and coastal safety procedures. [14788]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Government acknowledge the considerable efforts of voluntary bodies, such as the Royal Life Saving Society and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents which encourage the provision of coastal lifeguards and coastal safety procedures; and the efforts of beach operators, including local authorities in coastal areas, to improve beach safety. We particularly welcome the provision of appropriately trained lifeguards and the introduction of beach safety procedures. However, we are not presently persuaded that it is necessary for these matters to be regulated by statute or by a Government-appointed central body.

Water Safety

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made with the National Water Safety Committee towards guidelines for local authorities on coastal safety. [14787]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The National Water Safety Committee was consulted in the course of the preparation of the joint publication by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents and the Royal Life Saving Society UK of the report entitled "Safety on British Beaches—Operational Guidelines". The Government welcomed that publication, which was circulated free of charge to each local coastal authority, and commend it to all those responsible for the safety of visitors to the British coast.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to reduce the number of drownings on Britain's coastal resorts; and if he will make a statement; [14815]

(2) what resources are made available to local authorities in order to provide coastal safety guidance and procedures towards the cost of coastal lifeguard provision; [14817]

(3) if he will introduce a national standardised flag system to enable bathers in coastal areas to gauge tidal and other water hazards; [14814]

(4) what encouragement and guidance he issues to local authorities in coastal areas on the issue of coastal safety and lifeguard provisions. [14818]

Mr. Nicholas Baker [holding answers 20 March 1995]: The Government support the water safety efforts of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents with a grant. We hope that the campaign which ROSPA proposes to launch at the beginning of the summer covering general water safety will help to reduce the number of drownings on Britain's coastal resorts.

The publication "Safety on British Beaches—Operational Guidelines" published in 1993 jointly by ROSPA and the Royal Life Saving Society offers guidance and advice to local authorities and other beach operators on coastal safety and lifeguard provisions. That publication also includes details of the two interacting flag systems which have been adopted in many countries worldwide to warn bathers about sea conditions and designating specific activity areas within a supervised system. Central Government do not make any resources available to local authorities in coastal areas specifically to assist them with their work in connection with coastal safety.

Transport Accidents (Legal Process)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 796, on reforms into the legal process of inquiry, what conclusions the inter departmental group of officials reached; when the group next expects to make further recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [15835]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The interdepartmental group identified a number of options. These will be contained in a consultation paper, which should be published shortly.

Torture

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government submitted to the United Nations their latest periodic report under the convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. [16478]

Mr. Howard: The United Kingdom's second report under the convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment was today submitted to the United Nations. Copies of the report have also been placed in the Library.

Live Animal Exports

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries he has made as to the likely policing costs for 1995–96 of proposals to tranship live animals and veal calves from the port of Folkestone; and if he will make a statement. [15253]

Mr. Maclean: These are budgetary matters, which are the responsibility of the police authority. I understand that no estimate of the likely cost for 1995–96 has been made.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of police officers on active duty in the Metropolitan police area (a) at the present time and (b) in 1979. [15266]

Mr. Maclean: In December 1993—the latest period for which figures are available—operational police strength in the Metropolitan police area was 19,932 and support strength 7.211. Comparable figures are not available for 1979 as data were not collated in this format. The total police strength of the force is now nearly 25 per cent. greater than in 1979.

Criminal Justice Legislation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons recent criminal justice legislation has not removed or amended the assumption that a person aged from 10 to 14 years cannot be convicted of a crime without proof that he or she knew what they were doing was wrong; and if he will make a statement on the Law Lords' ruling of 16 March. [15388]

Mr. Maclean: The Government took the view in 1990—in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public", Cm 965, paragraph 8.4—that the rebuttable presumption of doli incapax made

> "proper allowance for the fact that children's understanding, knowledge and ability to reason are still developing" between the ages of 10 and 13.

Following the judgment of the House of Lords given on 16 March, the Government are now giving careful consideration to that judgment.

Intercepted Communications

Mr Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds mail sent by members of the group known as inner sanctum to the Bank of England is being intercepted; and if he will make a statement. [15134]

Mr. Howard: It has been the long-standing policy of successive Governments not to confirm or deny whether interception of communications has been authorised in any particular case. Persons who believe that their communications have been intercepted may apply to the tribunal established under section 7 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 for an investigation.

Research (Prisoners)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, columns 547-48, if he will now place in the Library a copy of the research into public attitudes towards the Prison Service carried out by MORI. [14843]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Further to my reply of 28 February, the research into public attitudes toward the Prison Service carried out by MORI was undertaken to guide the work of the service. There are, therefore, no plans to publish it or to place a copy in the Library.

Custodial Sentences (Women)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women served custodial sentences in each year since 1989, broken down by type of offence committed. [14865]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms. Janet Anderson, dated 23 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many women served custodial sentences in each year since 1989, broken down by type of offence committed.

Information for the years 1982 to 1992 is published in "Prison statistics, England and Wales" (Tables 3.10 (young offenders) and 5.9 (adults) of the 1992 edition, Cm 2581), a copy of which is in the library of the House of Commons.

Information for 1993 and 1994 is given in the attached table, a copy of which will be placed in the House of Commons library.

Females received under immediate custodial sentence into Prison Service establishments: by type of offence for England and Wales 1993–94

Spread Betting

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how his Department intends to monitor the effects of deregulating sports spread betting. [14792]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that the Treasury will shortly be consulting on the terms of a draft amendment to exclude certain non-financial spread betting from the scope of the Financial Services Act 1986. Decisions on the form of any future monitoring will be taken in the light of that consultation.

Staff-prisoners Ratio

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the staff to prisoner ratio for each prison in England and Wales (a) at the latest date available and (b) for each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 23 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question concerning the staff:inmate ration for prisons in England and Wales.

The attached tables provide a breakdown of the staff:inmate ratio for each prison in England and Wales by category. Copies of these tables have been placed in the Library. Sub totals, and the staff:inmate ratio are provided for each category of prison. The inmate figures exclude those in police cells. Both the inmate figures and the staff figures are for 31 January 1995. The staff figures include all prison officers, senior officers and principal officers and, in the case of private sector prisons, all prisoner custody officers.

The information required to provide a similar breakdown for each of the last 20 years is either not available, or not readilny available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but a second table is attached which supplies the available total staff:inmate ratio since 1975.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Council

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what conclusions he has reached following consultation on the Government's proposals for reform of the Sports Council. [16377]

Mr. Dorrell: The creation of separate United Kingdom and England Sports Councils was warmly welcomed by those who responded to the Government's proposals, and I can confirm that, subject to the grant of royal charters, we intend to proceed to set up both councils from 1 January 1996. As previously announced, Mr. Rodney Walker, the current chairman of the Sports Council, will in due course become the chairman of the English Sports Council. I am pleased to be able to announce today that Sir Ian MacLaurin has agreed to join the Sports Council and to serve in due course as chairman of the United Kingdom Sports Council. I am also pleased to be able to announce the other members-designate of the United Kingdom Sports Council:

UK Sports Council

Mr. Rodney Walker, Chairman-designate of the English Sports Council

Mr. Graeme Simmers, Chairman of the Scottish Sports Council

Mr. Ossie Wheatley, Chairman of the Welsh Sports Council

Mr. Don Allen, Chairman of the Northern Ireland Sports Council

Mr. Gary Lineker

Mr. Rob Andrew

Mr. Clive Lloyd

Dr. Sarah Springman

Mr. Craig Reedie

I would expect the UK Sports Council to work closely with all the appropriate bodies of British sport throughout the UK and in particular with the Central Council of Physical Recreation, the Scottish and Welsh Sports Associations and the Northern Ireland Council of Physical Recreation.

I can also announce today the Government's intention to produce in early summer a White Paper setting out the broader strategic framework for Government policy on sport. It will focus on the development of sporting opportunity for young people, within and outside formal education, and on creating pathways through every stage of sporting activity, including the elite level. This will allow talent to achieve its fullest expression. I have asked the chairmen-designate of the English and UK councils to prepare and submit to me precise definitions of the functions of their respective bodies, taking account of White Paper policies.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the criteria for assessing the competitive bids for the channel tunnel rail link and the Euro passenger services which will ensure that (a) the successful bidder is demonstrably competent to run as well as build the railway and (b) safety and security against terrorist and other dangers. [15348]

Mr. Watts: The bidders for CTRL and EPS demonstrated these competences at the pre-qualification stage. The successful promoter will be obliged to comply fully with the requirements of existing legislation on railway security and safety, and the requirements of Her Majesty's railway inspectorate and my Department's transport security directorate.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will be issuing his revised guidelines for operating section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1992 before the Select Committee examining the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill finishes taking evidence. [15748]

Mr. Watts: I hope to do so.

Lorry Checks

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many intermodal lorries were checked, and if the accuracy of their consignment notes were considered at the intermodal truck depots in each of the last three years; and how many of these inspections were carried out at the nearest depot to the points of the lorries' departure. [15740]

Mr. Norris: The regulations in question were intended to encourage combined road/rail freight through the channel tunnel. The delayed start of full freight operations through the tunnel meant that, in the half year to 30 September 1994, no vehicles were found to be operating at the higher weight limit. The vehicle inspectorate will shortly be compiling figures for checks carried out up to 31 March this year and I will forward them to the hon. Member as soon as they are available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will now reconsider the decision regarding the regulation of lorry braking safety and introduce a mandatory test of braking safety at the six month interim between the annual MOT tests of general roadworthiness; what is the current availability of the equipment for such tests; and what is the cost per axle tested. [15529]

Mr. Norris: I have no plans at present to introduce a mandatory six month brake test, although I will keep that option under review. It is the responsibility of vehicle operators to look after their vehicles properly and there are plenty of test facilities available to help them do so. The vehicle inspectorate's current charge to operators for voluntary roller brake testing is £6 per axle.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the prospective bidders for the first eight passenger train operators who have sought to pre-qualify for franchises in respect of the announcement made in December 1994. [15746]

Mr. Watts: The Franchising Director announced today that 37 organisations have applied to pre-qualify for the first group of eight passenger rail franchises, and that many applicants are interested in more than one franchise, taking the total number of applications to more than 160. Under section 145 of the Railways Act 1993 the identity of any individual applicants cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects OPRAF to agree the criteria against which a passenger scheme requirement will be determined for each of the train operating units. [15743]

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, following his instructions of 22 March 1994 if he will place in the Library a copy of the criteria which were submitted to him by the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising in respect of deciding appropriate service specifications for loss-making services; and if he will make a statement. [15138]

Mr. Watts: The guidance issued to the Franchising Director requires him to ensure that passenger service requirements for the first franchises are based upon the timetable being operated by BR immediately prior to franchising. A copy of an explanatory note setting out the Franchising Director's approach to and criteria for setting these passenger service requirements has been placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, the guidance requires the Franchising Director to develop criteria for evaluating the benefits obtained from the provision of loss making services. These criteria are intended to detail the long term basis on which the Franchising Director will make decisions about support for loss-making services as the passenger network develops over time. The Franchising Director expects to submit proposed criteria to the Secretary of State in due course.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the companies which applied for pre-qualification for each of the first eight train franchises. [15517]

Mr. Watts: The Franchising Director has announced today that 37 organisations have applied to be pre-qualify for the first group of eight passenger rail franchises, and that many applicants are interested in more than one franchise taking the total number of applications to over 160. To preserve commercial confidentiality individual applicants will not be named, nor will the number of applicants for each franchise be given.

ScotRail Passenger Services

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the date when the passenger service requirement for ScotRail will be announced. [15744]

Mr. Watts: In early summer.

Sleeper Services

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions took place with OPRAF and British Rail when decisions were taken to exclude (a) the Motorail service and (b) the Fort William sleeper from the passenger scheme requirement of ScotRail; and what discussions took place before the decision to end bookings for these services. [15745]

Mr. Watts: Regular meetings are held between OPRAF and British Rail to discuss a wide range of issues. The decision to withdraw Motorail services and the London—Fort William sleeper service from May was taken by BR on commercial grounds.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what statutory powers the Director of Franchising and OPRAF were acting when the decision was taken to exclude the Fort William sleeper and Motorail services from the passenger service requirement for ScotRail. [15747]

Mr. Watts: In indicating that he would not include the Fort William sleeper service and Motorail services in the draft passenger service requirement for ScotRail, the Franchising Director was acting within the bounds of the statutory objectives, instructions and guidance issued by my right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) on 22 March 1994 in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the Railways Act 1993.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the additional costs associated with maintenance of the (a) Fort William to London sleeper service, (b) Carlisle to London sleeper service and (c) Scotland to London motorail services, for the purpose of an eight week consultation period commencing in May, indicating the financial assumptions involved; and if he will make a statement; [15139]

(2) what estimate he has made of the costs associated with the closure of the (a) Fort William to London sleeper service, (b) Carlisle to London sleeper service and (c) Scotland to London motorail services; and if he will make a statement; [15141]

(3) what estimate he has made of the start up costs associated with re-opening, after May, the (a) Fort William to London sleeper service, (b) Carlisle to London sleeper service and (c) Scotland to London Motorail services; and if he will make a statement. [15140]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend has not made any such assessments on estimates. The decision to withdraw Motorail services and the sleeper service between London and Carlisle and London and Fort William from 28 May was a commercial decision by British Rail. It has undertaken to retain the assets needed to run these services so that they can be restored if the Franchising Director decides to include them in the passenger service requirement for the ScotRail franchise.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will ensure that the inquiry into the Birmingham northern relief road is based on a re-assessment of traffic models and growth forecasts; [15257]

(2) what account he has taken of the effects of congestion of the traffic model assumption in respect of the Birmingham northern relief road which assumes that for roads which are full traffic will grow at a reduced rate; [15255]

(3) on what basis traffic modellers have ignored heavy goods vehicles in respect of the Birmingham northern relief road; and if he will make a statement; [15254]

(4) what assessment he has made of the impact of an (a) untolled and (b) tolled west orbital road in respect of the Birmingham northern relief road. [15256]

Mr. Watts: These are matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Laurie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 23 March 1995:

You asked the Secretary of State for information about the traffic modelling used for the Birmingham Northern Relief Road.

We are satisfied that the traffic model uses a robust methodology and has taken account of significant changes, such as the SACTRA report, which have arisen since the draft Orders were published. The ongoing public inquiry into the proposals has received much information on traffic flows and techniques. It will be for the Inspector to form his own judgement on that evidence.

The Original (February 1994) BNRR traffic forecasts assumed a tolled Western Orbital Route. The latest (November 1994) forecasts assume a WOR that will be free to motorists. The traffic impacts of these differing assumptions are contained in evidence placed before the inquiry.

HGVs are not ignored in the traffic model. Tests established the most appropriate methodology for the evaluation of the BNRR proposals; this ensures the most realistic estimate of HGV routing. Details of the methodology used have been presented to the inquiry.

The traffic model takes account of the capacity of the roads in the area. Reduced growth rates have been assumed for all journeys with one or both ends in the conurbation, in line with assumptions made by local highway authorities in the conurbation.

ENVIRONMENT

Hydrofluorocarbons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to set targets for the phasing out of HFCs. [14984]

Mr. Atkins: There are no plans to phase out HFCs, nor to set targets for phaseout. HFCs have been developed as alternatives to some ozone-depleting substances and are an important part of the solution to the problem of depletion of the ozone layer. However, HFCs are also greenhouse gases and the Government are discussing with industry the scope for voluntary agreements to limit HFC emissions and to ensure that HFCs are not used where emissions are unavoidable if safe, practical and more environmental acceptable alternatives are available.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what qualities he will look for in appointing a new chair of the revamped Local Government Commission. [15058]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: On 21 March my right hon. Friend announced the appointment of Sir David Cooksey to the chairmanship of the Local Government Commission, Official Report, column 145. I believe Sir David has all the qualities required of the chairman, and I note that his appointment was immediately welcomed by the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson).

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the English counties, following the current reorganisation of local government, that will have no administrative function but will have a lord lieutenant and sheriff; [15072]

(2) if he will list the English counties, following the current reorganisation of local government, which are to be extended beyond their administrative boundaries for ceremonial purposes and where lords lieutenant and sheriffs will have jurisdiction over the wider area; [15070]

(3) if he will list the English counties, following the current reorganisation of local government, that will have no functions. [15071]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Decisions have not yet been taken in all cases. However, I expect that the only county areas without any county councils but with their own lords lieutenant will be Berkshire and East Yorkshire. Most areas whose local authority is granted unitary powers will be deemed to be part of a neighbouring county area for ceremonial purposes.

In those areas for which structure orders have been made, North West Somerset and Bath and North East Somerset will be deemed to be part of Somerset; South Gloucestershire will be deemed to be part of Gloucestershire; North Lincolnshire and North East Lincolnshire will be deemed to be part of Lincolnshire; York will be deemed to be part of North Yorkshire; and Hull will be deemed to be part of East Yorkshire. We are still considering the ceremonial arrangements for Cleveland.

Lords Lieutenant

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the English county councils which have their own lord lieutenant and sheriff. [15073]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: A lord lieutenant and high sheriff are appointed to the following counties:

Greater London
Greater Manchester
Merseyside
South Yorkshire
Tyne and Wear
West Midlands
West Yorkshire

Air Pollution

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place with his European ministerial counterparts concerning the need to reduce levels of air pollution. [15127]

Mr. Atkins: I maintain regular contacts with my European ministerial counterparts on all aspects of environmental protection, including air pollution. Most recently, I met my European Community counterparts in Brussels on 9 March at the meeting of the Environment Council. We had a fruitful discussion on a number of issues related to air pollution, including the proposed directive on integrated pollution prevention and control and the proposed framework directive on ambient air quality assessment and management.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to reduce levels of air pollution; and if he will make a statement. [15133]

Mr. Atkins: The Government announced their strategic policies for managing air quality in the document "Air Quality: Meeting the Challenge", published on 19 January. Copies are available in the House Libraries. Those policies are aimed at delivering sustainable improvements in air quality throughout the UK. Proposals include a framework of national air quality standards, a new system of local air quality assessment and management and an action plan for transport.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of (a) grant in aid, (b) internal income generated and (c) total budget for the National Rivers Authority for each year since its establishment. [15321]

Mr. Atkins: The level of grant in aid, income generated from charges and levies and total expenditure of the National Rivers authority are:

Regional Water Companies

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each regional water company (a) the net equity proceeds to Government as a result of privatisation, (b) the market value at the end of the first day of trading and (c) the current market value. [15351]

Mr. Atkins: Information on the proceeds resulting from privatisation, the market capitalisation at flotation and movement in share values at the end of the first day's trading in shares in the 10 water holding companies in England and Wales, is contained in the National Audit Office report "Department of the Environment: Sale of the Water Authorities in England and Wales", a copy of which is in the Library. Current market values vary according to fluctuations in the share price of the companies. This information is not held by my Department.

Local Authorities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to require local authorities to disclose in their annual accounts (a) the number of staff employed, (b) their total remuneration, (c) the number of staff in receipt of remuneration in excess of £10,000 per annum in salary bands of £5,000 and (d) the remuneration of the highest paid chief officer in a format similar to that used in company accounts. [15165]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There is a strong case for local authorities to publish details of the pay of their senior staff in broadly the same way as companies are required to publish details of the pay of their senior employees. However, I am keen to keep the new obligations on local authorities under control.

My Department is considering what information it would be appropriate for local authorities to publish and the best way for the local authorities to be encouraged to make that information public. Of course, no new stipulations would be introduced without consultation with the local authority associations.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the (a) total staff numbers, (b) total revenue and capital expenditure and (c) local authority housing stock in all district authorities in East and West Sussex. [14890]

Notes:

(1)(2) Revenue expenditure and capital expenditure cannot be added together to give a "total" expenditure figure at an individual authority level. This is because some of the capital expenditure is funded from revenue.

(1) Net revenue expenditure is expenditure on recurring items including the running of services and capital financing. It excludes spending funded by special and specific grants and income from licence fees, etcetera. This is the expenditure figure to compare to standard spending assessment.

(2) This is gross capital expenditure on all services, including housing, and includes expenditure reimbursed by grants and expenditure financed from revenue.

(3) Includes dwellings owned by the named local authority but which are situated outside of this local authority's area.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his proposals for local authority participation in companies and for amending the capital finance regulations. [16203]

Mr. Curry: The Local Authorities (Companies) Order 1995 and the Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) Regulations 1995 have today been laid before Parliament. These implement the package of proposals to encourage closer partnership between local authorities and the private sector, announced by my right hon. Friend on 31 October 1994.

The Local Authorities (Companies) Order 1995 establishes a regime for local authority participation in companies, under which those companies, including companies limited by guarantee, which are led by the private sector will be subject to few controls other than those applicable generally under the Companies Acts. We are providing in the regime transitional provisions for local authority companies established before 1 April 1995, and we are also allowing certain exemptions.

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) Regulations 1995 make a number of changes to the local authority capital finance rules, with the intention of promoting the use of private finance.

The order and regulations laid take account of extensive consultation conducted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales with the local authority associations, individual local authorities, and other interested parties. The main changes made following this will:

- free authorities of all subsequent capital finance impact from a company's operations provided it leaves the public sector, permanently, by 31 March 1996.
- increase to 75 per cent. the usable proportion of receipts of sale of local authority shareholdings in airport companies arising before 1 April 1997, and in bus companies arising before 31 March 1996. This was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 3 March, Official Report, column 732.
- allow authorities holding leases of non-housing property taken out before 1988 to extend them for up to 10 years without capital costs.
- allow authorities to transfer assets to companies in return for a mixed consideration of cash and shares, without needing to set resources aside in relation to the shares.

The regulations also introduce other beneficial changes which reflect consultations with and representations from local authorities. These will:

- allow authorities to renew, for up to two years without capital cost, leases on privately owned homes expiring after 20 December 1994. This will enable authorities to continue present arrangements by renewing short-term leases on good quality homes in the private rented sector, rather than using bed-and-breakfast hotels to provide temporary accommodation. The use of bed and breakfast accommodation has fallen by 43 per cent. over two years.
- allow costs of computer software to be capitalised.

In addition, there are many clarificatory and drafting changes.

I will also be laying before Parliament later in the year further regulations which will have the effect of increasing to 90 per cent. the usable proportion of local authorities' receipts from sales of car parks and retail property arising between 1 September 1995 and 31 August 1996.

Thus local authorities and prospective private sector partners can now look forward to a total of four targeted reductions in set-aside to take effect during this year. It is up to authorities to take advantage of these and to persuade us of the case for others.

I have been impressed by the strength and depth of partnership arrangements already established by many local authorities with the private sector. The changes I am now making will support those initiatives and give authorities even greater scope to harness the private sector's investment potential and management skills in delivering capital projects.

We regard this improved package of measures as just a start. We shall be looking at other areas of the capital finance regulations, in particular those relating to allowance of cost deductions from capital receipts before set-aside is calculated, with a view to further amendments later in the year.

I have arranged for copies of two documents which summarise the new measures—"New Private Finance Rules for Local Authorities" and "A Guide to Local Authorities' Interests in Companies"—to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 English districts with the lowest total capital and revenue expenditure. [14891]

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 22 March 1995]: Revenue expenditure and capital expenditure cannot be added together to give a "total" expenditure figure at an individual authority level. This is because some of the capital expenditure is funded from revenue.

The available information is.

Net revenue expenditure:

This is expenditure on recurring items including the running of services and capital financing. It excludes spending funded by special and specific grants and income from fees and charges, interest, etcetera. This is the expenditure figure to compare to SSA.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, for each local authority in England, the latest available net revenue expenditure figures to compare with standard spending assessment, broken down by broad service block, in each year since 1990–91; and if he will place this information in the Library in personal computer spreadsheet readable format. [14574]

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 17 March 1995]: I have placed the information in the Library of the House.

Housing Partnership Schemes

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what application he has had for housing partnership schemes from the Isle of Wight; and when he expects to make an announcement. [15851]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department has received three applications under the housing partnership fund from the Isle of Wight. The successful schemes for the 1995–96 housing partnership fund are being announced today, and I am pleased to tell the hon. Member that the Hansford store conversion scheme in Ryde is to be allocated £177,000 to redevelop part of a redundant furniture store into 15 flats.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the allocation of resources to local authorities under his Department's housing partnership fund for 1995–96. [16204]

Mr. Curry: Some 220 schemes in 170 housing authorities will benefit from £30 million housing partnership fund for 1995–96.

Councils continue to be very enthusiastic about the scheme. This year we received over 740 bids. The scheme demonstrates the Government's commitment to supporting imaginative high-quality housing projects which will be of long-lasting benefit to local communities.

The successful bids involve a wide range of innovative and valuable housing projects, which address local housing needs. This year we have particularly focused on schemes to bring empty properties back into use and those which effect major energy efficiency improvements. The schemes have been put together in partnership with the private sector, housing associations and other local organisations.

The combination of public and private sector money means that up to £108 million will be invested to meet local housing need, help stimulate local economic growth and create jobs.

A list of the resources being allocated to local authorities under the housing partnerships fund for 1995–96 has been placed in the Library.

Water and Sewerage

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State if he will list, by water company, the percentage 1995–96 price increase for water and sewerage charges for (a) domestic customers paying water rates, (b) domestic customers paying by water meter and (c) commercial customers. [15782]

Mr. Atkins: The information relating to domestic customers is shown. Information about charge increases for commercial customers is not held centrally.

PSA Projects

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what adjustments have been made to the value of the liabilities retained by Government following the sale of the former PSA Projects business. [16475]

Sir Paul Beresford: Two reductions have been made to these liabilities in line with the terms of the sale agreement for PSA Projects. First, the limit on the Government's liability to contribute to the costs of redundancies of staff formerly employed in PSA Projects has been reduced by £800,00 to £39.5 million, as calculated by using the formula in the sale agreement. This follows a correction to the previously reported transferring staff total to 704. Secondly, there has been a consequential reduction of £200,000 to £4.34 million in the consideration adjustment due to the purchaser on the first anniversary of the sale.

DEFENCE

Nerve Agent Destruction

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of progress in development of the Silver II electro-chemical disposal method; and if he will make a statement. [14407]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 23 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what assessment he has made of progress in development of the silver II electro-chemical disposal method and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. CBDE, working in close collaboration with AEA Technology, has undertaken an initial evaluation of the efficacy of the silver II process. Extensive laboratory tests successfully demonstrated that the method is suitable for the destruction of a range of CW agents including nerve agent and mustard gas. A pilot plant at Dounreay has carried out extensive experimental work with simulants and it is planned, subject to funding approval, to build a similar plant at Porton Down this summer. This would be used to prove the technique on a larger scale using live agents. If this trial is successful, the plant could be used to destroy agent from old CW munitions found within the UK. The process has a number of potential advantages for the destruction of chemical agents. It is an intrinsically safe process as the procedure stops as soon as the supply of electricity is switched off and the process is carried out at relatively low temperatures ie below 100°C. The volume of effluent is minimal and, because the organic matter is totally oxidised, consists of an aqueous solution of inorganic salts. The method should allow complete decontamination of CW munitions, including their explosive content, regardless of their nature.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the potential cost savings to the United Kingdom Exchequer of the withdrawal of troops from Northern Ireland. [14842]

Mr. Soames: The units withdrawn from Northern Ireland remain on standby to return, should there be a resumption of terrorist violence. Significant cost savings will not arise until progress towards a permanent peace justifies permanent withdrawals.

Arms Exports

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the payment of commissions to those involved in the sale of arms to overseas Governments in respect of (a) civil servants, (b) members of the Government, (c) Members of Parliament and (d) relatives of Members of Parliament of the country concerned; and if he will make a statement. [15054]

Mr. Freeman: The British Government do not pay commissions to those involved in arms sales. I cannot comment on other countries' requirements or conventions on the payment of commissions to their nationals.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of black or Asian (a) warrant officers and (b) commissioned officers up to the rank of (i) captain, (ii) colonel and (iii) field-marshal or equivalent ranks serving in Her Majesty's forces. [14899]

Mr. Soames: According to the results of the ethnic origin survey of the regular armed forces, based on the 57 per cent. of responses received as at 1 October last year the following numbers of personnel classified themselves as black or Asian:

	Black	Asian
Warrant officer or equivalent	64	40
Commissioned officers:
up to the rank of captain or equivalent	59	94
Major to colonel or equivalent	31	66
Brigadier to field marshal or equivalent	[1]—	[1]—

[1] Figure less than 5. Where numbers are less than 5, figures are not given in order to avoid individuals being identified.

The first results of ethnic origin survey of the regular armed forces, giving percentage figures, have been published in the new tri-service personnel statistical return entitled "Ethnic Composition of the Regular Armed Forces", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Land Sales

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all surplus Ministry of Defence land sold in the last 12 months with the names of the purchasers; what surplus land is currently for sale; and if he will make a statement about his Department's policy towards the disposal of surplus land. [15212]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. member and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

HMS Sirius

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his Department's instructions for the future use of HMS Sirius; and if he will make a statement. [15444]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 15 December 1994, Official Report, columns 815–16. No decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Sirius was built and at what cost, together with the dates and costs of subsequent maintenance and refits. [15445]

Mr. Freeman: HMS Sirius was accepted from the shipbuilder, HM Dockyard Portsmouth, in June 1966. Acquisition cost details for the ship are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dates of major maintenance and refits carried out on HMS Sirius are set out in the table. Details of routine and operational maintenance, and the costs of refit and maintenance work carried out before the royal dockyards passed into commercial management in April 1987 are not available. The total cost of her last major maintenance period, undertaken between October and December 1987, was some £1.2 million. The total cost of the final refit, undertaken between October 1989 and May 1991, was in the region of £25 million.

Major maintenane Periods
19 November 1967 to 5 January 1968
2 March 1970 to 23 March 1970
22 February 1971 to 19 March 1971
30 May 1973 to 22 June 1973
29 February 1980 to 31 March 1980
28 October 1987 to 11 December 1987
Refits
18 August 1969 to 12 December 1969
10 January 1972 to 26 May 1972
10 March 1975 to 10 February 1978
5 May 1981 to 30 June 1982
15 April 1985 to 6 December 1985
23 October 1987 to 19 May 1991

Empty Housing

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of unoccupied homes under the control of his Ministry as at 1 July 1994 and at 1 January 1995 in each local housing authority area in England, Wales and Scotland. [15834]

Mr. Soames: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Plymouth Airport (Training Flights)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total annual cost to his Department for services at Plymouth airport in connection with Royal Navy training flights. [15778]

Mr. Soames: The total cost of Royal Navy training flights at Plymouth airport is £626,000 per annum.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the need to carry out Royal Navy training flights from Plymouth airport; and if he will make a statement. [15779]

Mr. Soames: There has been no recent assessment of the need to carry out Royal Navy training flights from Plymouth airport.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost to his Department of Sea King helicopters using Plymouth airport in relation to sea training. [15777]

Mr. Soames: The transfer of flag officer sea training from Portland to Plymouth in September this year will require the continuation of certain aviation support. Various options for the provision of the service are being investigated, including the use of civil aircraft under contract operating out of Plymouth airport, but comparative cost are not yet available.

RAF Training

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what plans he has for the future of flying training in the Royal Air Force. [16378]

Mr. Soames: Following the issue of consultative documents on 17 November 1994 recommending the closure of RAF Scampton and RAF Finningley, representations have been made by local authorities, Members of Parliament and members of the public. My Department has consulted thoroughly with the trade unions and those local authorities closely associated with the stations, and full and careful consideration has been given to all of the representations that we have received.

Following this work, I am satisfied that no issues have been raised which call into question the viability of the proposals, which satisfactorily meet out future flying training needs and save £23,000,000 per annum. I have therefore decided that both RAF Finningley and RAF Scampton should close in April 1996, and that all future non-fast jet fixed wing fixed flying training will be undertaken at RAF Cranwell and RAF Linton-on-Ouse.

We will, of course, continue to consult the trade unions about the detailed implementation of these measures.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Abattoirs

11. Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that there is sufficient abattoir capacity for farmers in Devon. [13886]

Mrs. Browning: I know the area well. I know that the replacement of an old abattior with a new one will be welcome in east Devon..

Calves (Human Food)

14. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ban the brain and spinal cords of calves under the age of six months from going into human food. [13889]

Mrs. Browning: In a large experimental study of the pathogenesis of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle, no infectivity has been demonstrated in the brain and spinal cord in calves two and six months after oral challenge with a large dose of BSE-infected cow brain at four months of age. We would, of course, act in response to scientific advice if there were to be any new evidence.

Tobacco Regime

17. Mr. Barron: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the total cost of the common agricultural policy tobacco regime in 1995. [13892]

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest estimate is around £900 million.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

20. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to review the level of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments. [13896]

Mr. Jack: Agriculture Ministers expect to review the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances which will apply for the 1996 scheme this autumn, as part of the annual review of public expenditure.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had with the farming unions about the payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement. [13879]

Mr. Jack: We invariably consult the farming industry before we determine HLCA rates or make any changes to the scheme and listen carefully to what it says.

Animal Welfare

21. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to improve the welfare of livestock in the European Union. [13897]

Mrs. Browning: In response to my right hon. Friend's request in January, the European Commission is bringing forward from 1997 to this year its report to the Council reviewing directive 91/629 on the welfare of calves. The resulting discussions in the Council of Ministers will provide the opportunity to press again for Community-wide standards which rule out the use of the veal crate, which has been illegal in the United Kingdom since 1990, I have visited Ministers in other member states to enlist support for our opposition to the veal crate and the response has, in many cases, been encouraging.

In the continuing Council negotiations on the welfare of animals in transit, we shall persevere in refusing to accept unsatisfactory compromises, and in pressing for a satisfactory Community measure which includes journey limits.

Animals (Human Genes)

22. Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animals were reared in the United Kingdom last year following the incorporation of human genes in their genetic make-up; and whether he will take steps to have food products marked accordingly. [13898]

Mrs. Browning: The statistical information sought is not readily available. However, no animals containing copy genes of human origin have been cleared for food use in the UK. I can assure the hon. Member that if any such clearance was to be given, a labelling requirement would be imposed so as to allow consumers to make an informed choice.

Horses

23. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that the minimum value rule for horses exported to continental Europe remains; and if he will make a statement. [13900]

Mrs. Browning: Council directive 91/628 on the welfare of animals during transport contains a provision, for which we fought hard in the negotiations, which allows our national rules on the export of equines to continue. We shall resist very strongly any proposal to revoke or amend this provision.

EC Grubbing-up Scheme

24. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the uptake of the latest EC grubbing-up scheme in the United Kingdom. [13901]

Mr. Jack: The latest EC apple orchard grubbing-up grant scheme was open to applications in the UK during 25 October to 1 December 1994 and 13 to 31 January 1995. Some 318 applications covering 2,777 hectares were received. By the end of February, 260 covering 2,343 hectares, had been approved and 32 covering 133 hectares had been either rejected or withdrawn. The remaining applications were still being processed.

Approval of an application does not carry an obligation to grub. That is a decision for the applicant. Consequently, we shall not know the uptake of the scheme for several months.

Live Animal Exports

25. Ms Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of live farm animals exported from the United Kingdom for slaughter in other EU member states in (a) 1979 and (b) 1994. [13903]

Mrs. Browning: Official trade statistics for the total number of livestock, in thousand head, exported from the United Kingdom to other EU member states are as follows;

	1979	January to November 1994
Cattle	505	463
Sheep	445	896
Pigs	37	172
Poultry	3,731	19,642

These statistics do not distinguish animals for slaughter or for fattening. Figures for 1979 include exports to Spain, Greece and Portugal which joined the EU after this date, but all figures exclude exports to the member states that joined the EU in 1995. Figures for 1994 are provisional and are thought to under-record the true level of exports.

Rural White Paper

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has had to the rural White Paper consultation exercise. [13889]

Mrs. Browning: We have received about 350 written submissions. Views have also been expressed in a series of regional and subject seminars.

Milk Quota

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to prevent speculators exploiting the shortage of milk quota in the United Kingdom. [13899]

Mr. Jack: There is no evidence to support allegations of speculation in milk quotas. Milk quota may be leased only between producers who are registered with the Intervention Board; while quota may be purchased only by producers actively involved in milk production or by those who acquire, on a permanent basis, the land to which milk quota is attached.

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the weekly cost of all agricultural support for a family of four in (a) 1965, (b) 1975, (c) 1985 and (d) currently.

Mr. Jack: A note entitled "The Cost of the Common Agricultural Policy to Taxpayers and Consumers", produced by my Department, was deposited in the Library of the House on 9 March. This gives estimates of the cost to UK consumers and taxpayers of all forms of agricultural support of £4.15 per person per week in 1993, the most recent year for which information is available. The equivalent figure for 1985 is estimated at £2.39 per person per week. Both estimates include national agricultural expenditures as well as transfers resulting from the operation of the CAP. These estimates are based on calculations of total transfers resulting from agricultural policies in the European Union, made by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. Comparable figures for 1975 are not available. The estimates are likely to overstate the savings which could be made by consumers and taxpayers if agricultural support policies were removed, because, in the absence of support, world prices would be higher than at present.

In 1965, the UK operated a system of deficiency payments. The cost to UK taxpayers of these and other measures was equivalent to £0.08 per person per week—or £0.82 per person per week in 1994 prices. In addition, there were a number of policies which had the effect of raising prices to consumers. It is not possible to quantify these costs, but it is likely that they were smaller in real terms than the present consumer costs of the CAP.

Suicides

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many suicides there have been in the English farming community in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [14258]

Mrs. Browning: The information is set out in the table.

Suicides of farmers and farm workers in England

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	Total
Farmers	32	33	36	31	31	163
Farm workers	21	21	18	17	14	91
Total	53	54	54	48	45	254

Source:
OPCS

The relatively high rate of suicides among farmers is, of course, a cause of concern and with other agencies we are seeking means to reduce it. However, the underlying causes are many, and there is no single solution to this complex issue.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of cases of ectoparasitic infection in sheep for (a) the two years before compulsory dipping was abolished and (b) the two years since compulsory dipping was abolished. [14570]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 25 January 1995, Official Report, column 215, for the number of cases of sheep scab during the period in question.

Other ectoparasitic infections of sheep have never been notifiable in England and consequently information on the number of cases of these diseases is not available.

Farm Investigation, Derbyshire

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish information held in his Department and all readings for levels of sulphur, molydenum, fluorides and dioxins at the farm of Wareing Bros., the Breck, Barrow Hill, Chesterfield, Derbyshire since 1984. [14557]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 March 1995]: The results of investigations undertaken by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on behalf of individual farmers are not published for reasons of commercial confidentiality. The Ministry, as part of its own investigations, took samples of milk for dioxin analysis in April 1991 and May 1993 from several farms in the Bolsover and Staveley areas, including the Breck. The Ministry published the results of these surveys for dioxins in August 1992 and May 1993 respectively. Mr. M. J. Wareing was informed of the dioxin levels in the samples which he provided.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make assessments and publish a report on investigations undertaken by the veterinary investigation service, ADAS, the alkali inspector, HM inspectorate of pollution and environmental health officers into the farm of Wareing Bros., the Breck, Barrow Hill, Chesterfield, Derbyshire, since 1984. [14560]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 March 1995]: No, reports on the investigations carried out by the veterinary investigation service and ADAS, as for similar investigations into individual animal disease outbreaks, contain information which is inappropriate for disclosure on commercial confidentiality and other grounds. The alkali inspector, HM inspectorate of pollution and environmental health officers are not a part of MAFF and it is up to those organisations to decide whether to make any information they hold public.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the records he holds on cattle reared on the farm of Wareing Bros., the Breck, Barrow Hill, Chesterfield, Derbyshire, since 1984, including details of stillborn calves, calves born with eye defects and cattle which have not been able to be sold directly to market since the introduction of the Animals, Meat and Meat Products (Examination for Residues and Maximum Residue Limits) Regulation 1991. [14561]

Mrs. Angela Browning [holding answer 22 March 1995]: No, reports on the investigations carried out by the veterinary investigation service, as for similar investigations into individual animal disease outbreaks, contain information which is inappropriate for disclosure on commercial confidentiality and other grounds.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make assessments and publish a report on the impact of sulphurs, molydenum, fluorides and dioxins on crops, soil, cattle, residents and workers at the farm of Wareing Bros., the Breck, Barrow Hill Chesterfield, Derbyshire and in its vicinity; and if he will take steps to recommend a spray programme for the crops and fodder at the farm. [14562]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 March 1995]: It is appropriate for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to undertake such assessments only if issues of public concern such as food safety are involved. No evidence exists to indicate that this is the Breck or other farms in its vicinity as, for example, the levels of dioxins in cows milk taken from the Breck in April 1991 and May 1993 were within the normal background range for milk in the UK. It is not the Ministry's responsibility to provide advice on a spray programme for crops and fodder on the Breck as this information is available from commercial consultants.

SOCIAL SECURITY

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what monitoring arrangements are in place to assess whether vulnerable groups are reducing their consumption of fuel as a result of the imposition of VAT. [14979]

Mr. Roger Evans: None, the family expenditure survey, published by the Central Statistical Office, provides estimates of spending patterns of households in the United Kingdom.

Earnings Disregards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new proposals he has to increase earnings disregards.

Mr. Roger Evans: From April 1996 we propose that couples receiving income support or jobseeker's allowance should have the first £10 of their earnings in any week disregarded, rather than the current £5 each. From October 1996 we will also be introducing the back to work bonus, which will provide a lump sum payment of up to £1,000 to claimants with earnings above the disregard when they move off benefit into work.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in north Tyneside are currently in receipt of invalidity benefit. [14556]

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Tony Laurence to Mr. Stephen Byers, dated 22 March 1995:

As Michael Bichard is on leave at the moment, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of Invalidity Benefit (IVB) recipients in North Tyneside.

The information is not available in the form requested. This is because Benefits Agency (BA) District areas do not correspond with county or borough boundaries.

The BA North Tyneside District, comprising North Shields District Office (DO) and Wallsend Branch Office (BO), has responsibility for administering claims for almost all IVB customers resident in the North Tyneside District Council administrative area.

However, that District also deals with a small number of IVB customers who reside within the Newcastle City Council administrative area. Furthermore, the Newcastle East Branch Office of the BA Newcastle District also deals with a small number of IVB customers resident in the North Tyneside District Council area. Figures relating specifically to these small groups of customers would only be available at disproportionate cost.

For this reason, I am providing the latest figures available for IVB customers within the BA North Tyneside District only:-

Number of IVB Customers in North Tyneside District at 28 February 1995

	Number
North Shields DO	4,501
Wallsend BO	3,504
Total	8,005

These figures include a very small number of customers who are entitled to IVB but are not actually receiving it because they are receiving an overlapping benefit (such as Widows Benefit) payable at a higher rate.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving invalidity benefit in the Rhondda benefit district; what percentage this is of the total population of working age; and what are the average percentages for (a) Wales and (b) England and Wales. [14845]

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the tables.

Table A: People in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Taff Rhondda District Office area on the last working day of February 1995

	Number
Taff Rhondda District Office	18,235

Notes:

1. Figures obtained from 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the Benefits Agency offices.
2. The figure will include some people who have claimed but are not actually receiving Invalidity Benefit because they are in receipt of a higher overlapping benefit.

Table B: People in receipt of invalidity benefit on 3 April 1993 by country and percentage of working population

Country	People in receipt of invalidity benefit	Percentage of the working population
Wales	172,000	10
England	1,184,000	4
England and Wales	1,356,000	4

Notes:

1. The working population has been taken to be 16 to 64 for men and 16 to 59 for women.
2. Invalidity benefit information based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Estimated mid-year—1993—population figures supplied by the population estimates unit, OPCS.

War Pensions

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates would be the cost to the Exchequer if war pensions awarded to widows continued for their natural life and not until their re-marriage or permanent co-habitation. [14394]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is estimated that the net cost of awarding the war widow's pension for life would be in the order of £100 million in a full year.

Social Fund

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances participants on Government programmes including training for work and community action can obtain help from the social fund; and if he will make a statement. [15153]

Mr. Roger Evans: People who were in receipt of income support prior to starting these programmes continue to be eligible to apply to the social fund. Such people will be eligible for awards of both community care grants and budgeting loans. People can apply to the social fund for crisis loans whether or not they are in receipt of an income-related benefit.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to make social fund loans available for the purchase of gardening equipment, allotment rents and seed, so that people can begin to grow their own vegetables. [15262]

Mr. Roger Evans: In considering whether or not to make an award from the fund, social fund officers are required to take account of the nature, extent and urgency of the need. Although loans for gardening equipment are not excluded, social fund officers take account of all the individual circumstances surrounding each application, as well as the priority guidance provided by the Secretary of State and the area social fund officer, when using their discretion to reach a decision.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many private hours of study should be included by adjudication officers when calculating the 21-hour rule; what counts as private study to be included in the total number of hours studied; when and where the rule about private hours was established; and if he will make a statement. [15157]

Mr. Roger Evans: A course, for the purpose of the 21-hour rule, is defined in regulations as including time spent receiving instruction of tuition, undertaking supervised study and other course requirements, which does not exceed 21 hours a week. A social security commissioner in a decision dated May 1990, held that, for the purpose of this rule, supervised study can include work set by a supervisor and done privately by the student in his own time.

Decisions on income support, including the 21-hour rule, are the responsibility of the independent adjudication officers who apply the law and case law taking into account the fact of each individual case.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if participants in training for work or community action who are unable to get jobs after they leave their scheme can immediately take advantage of the 21-hour rule and take up part-time places on education or training courses and retain their right to income support; and if he will make a statement. [15156]

Mr. Roger Evans: One of the qualifying conditions for the 21-hour rule is that immediately before the start of the course the claimant was in receipt of income support, unemployment benefit or sickness benefit for three months. People who have completed the learning for work scheme or the community action programme have to satisfy the normal qualifying conditions before they can take advantage of the 21-hour rule concession. Those who receive an element of income support during their participation will be treated in the same way as other income support recipients. The three months in receipt of a qualifying benefit required under the 21-hour rule can therefore include time spent in either scheme.

Mortgage Interest

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assistance his Department can provide to unemployed people who, on joining training for work, find that their insurance cover for mortgage, hire purchase and other agreements becomes invalid as they are no longer technically unemployed; and if he will make a statement. [15154]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 22 March at column 251.

Expenditure

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the gross domestic product has been spent on social security in each year since 1974. [15168]

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table:

Total benefit expenditure as a percentage of GDP 1974–75 to 1994–95 (cash prices)

1974–75	6.6	89.4	7.4
1975–76	8.9	111.2	8.0
1976–77	10.6	130.0	8.2

WALES

Information Super-highway

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grant support is available to encourage the development of fibre-optic cabling of towns and villages in Wales; what proportion of Wales now has fibre-optic cable links already established of a standard adequate for the foreseeable needs of the super-highway technological revolution; and what take-up there has been to date of grant support for the further development of this network.

Mr. Redwood: Cabling is one of my priorities for Wales. I have been pressing for swifter action on licences. Local delivery franchises have already been awarded for areas covering West Glamorgan, Cardiff and Newport. An announcement about a franchise operator for most of the remainder of mid, south and west Glamorgan and Gwent is expected in the summer. This should be followed by the offer of a franchise for an area of north Wales. My Department does not hold full details of the miles of fibre optic cable in existing networks, but this is known to be significant.

I have been told by cable companies that radio links may provide high quality access to less densely populated areas. They are also looking at ways of making greater use of existing pylons and telegraph poles. The development of these alternative technologies will, I hope, ensure that the whole of Wales can be linked to the super-highway.

I will provide grant support for this work in remote areas, if it is needed, through the strategic development scheme and other existing grant schemes. I am looking closely at the powers at my disposal. I am told by those interested that grant availability is not the crucial issue. For remoter areas, technology holds the key.

Community Pharmacist Dispensing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prescriptions were made up by community pharmacists in 1993; and what was the total cash value of these prescriptions. [14667]

Mr. Richards: A total of 32.5 million prescription items were dispensed by community pharmacists in 1993 with a total net ingredient cost of £215.4 million. The figures include all items prescribed by hospitals and dispensed in the community and items prescribed by GPs, excluding dispensing doctors, and dentists.

Drug Treatment Centres

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from psychiatric doctors and other professionals in Wales concerning the inadequacy of treatment centres available in Wales for those suffering from drug dependency; and if he will make a statement. [14669]

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has received two letters, both concerning services in Gwynedd.

Dentists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the number of general dental practitioners in practise in the county of Gwynedd; and how many of these are giving no service on the NHS. [14722]

Mr. Richards: Information available centrally relates to the number of general dental practitioners who have some NHS patients on their lists. At 31 December 1994 there were 66 such practitioners in Gwynedd.

School Balances

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of annual maintenance grants is held in reserve by (a) grant-maintained schools in Wales and (b) non grant-maintained schools. [14734]

Mr. Richards: At the end of the 1993–94 financial year, the latest date for which these details are available, grant-maintained schools in Wales held reserves of £845,458. This represented 6 per cent. of the total annual maintenance grant allocated in that year. According to financial outturn statements prepared by local education authorities under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988, during that same period LEA maintained schools were allocated £758,376,907 under authorities' local management of schools schemes. Of this, 6.28 per cent. was carried forward into the next financial year.

Housing

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of representations received by the Welsh Office on the issue of licensing of housing in multiple occupation; and what percentage of these representations was in favour of a licensing scheme. [14564]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office received 46 replies to my right hon. Friend's letter of 8 December 1994. Eighty per cent. were broadly in favour of licensing. However, there was no clear consensus on the way in which a licensing system should operate and the replies raised a wide range of issues for further consideration.

Residential Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve residential care for the elderly. [14665]

Mr. Richards: We are considering guidance on improving the way in which local authorities apply and enforce the Registered Homes Act 1984. We intend to ensure that there is a sensible level of regulation which safeguards residents by ensuring there are uniform standards throughout Wales.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are now waiting for NHS hospitals and trust appointments; and if he will make a statement. [14668]

Mr. Richards: At 31 December 1994, there were 119,339 people waiting for a first out-patient appointment at NHS hospitals in Wales. This represents a reduction of 9 per cent. on the number reported for 30 September 1994.

Learning Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the per capita average cost of resettling people from long stay hospitals into the community, excluding the costs of decommissioning the hospitals themselves. [14689]

Mr. Richards: It is for local and health authorities to determine individuals' care and support needs and to provide facilities and services accordingly, consequently the information requested is not available centrally.

In 1994–95 agreement was reached on the transfer of 50 individuals with a learning disability into the community. Approximately £1.7 million will be made available each year from mental handicap strategy funds to pay for these individuals' care and support. A further £0.53 million each year will come from resources released from long stay mental handicap hospitals. This is in addition to funds from other sources, such as authorities' own resources and social security and housing benefits, where appropriate.

NHS Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 79, if he will now make it his policy to collect information on those communities in Wales where there are no dentists providing a service on the NHS. [14725]

Mr. Richards: Local situations can change quickly and often. Welsh Office officials keep in close touch with the family health services authorities who are best placed to provide the most up-to-date information on local availability of NHS general dental services. It would be unnecessarily bureaucratic to require the submission of formal returns.

Public Appointments

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the current contracts for the chairman and the chief executive of each Welsh quango end. [14735]

Mr. Redwood: The end dates of the current contracts for the chairman and chief executive of each executive non-departmental public body in Wales are shown in the following table:

Sheep Scab

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of cases of ectoparasitic infestation in sheep for (a) the two years before compulsory dipping was abolished and (b) the two years since compulsory dipping has been abolished. [14569]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 January 1995, Official Report, column 269, for the number of cases of sheep scab during the period in question. Other ectoparasitic infections of sheep have never been notifiable in Wales and consequently information on the number of cases of these diseases is not available.

Learning Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what mechanism he plans that adults already living in the community but with significant learning difficulties, will in future be enabled to secure living accommodation which will enable them to have an independent life of their own in the community without dependency on ageing parents; and if he will make a statement. [14578]

Mr. Richards: It is for local and health authorities to provide care and support for individuals with a learning disability.

A key objective in guidance on the Welsh mental handicap strategy, which was issued in July last year, is provision of support to help individuals with a learning disability who already live in the community to continue to do so. Furthermore, Welsh Office Circular 7/95 "Mental Handicap Strategy: Planning Alternative Care and Support for Individuals Living Unnecessarily and Inappropriately in Long Stay Mental Handicap Hospitals", stresses the need for authorities to consider the future accommodation and support needs for individuals already living in the community, when drawing up plans for the resettlement, into the community, of individuals living inappropriately and unnecessarily in long-stay hospitals.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of GPs in Wales are fundholders; how many fundholding applications are outstanding; and if he will make a statement. [14666]

Mr. Richards: There are 117 GP fundholding practices, comprising over 30 per cent. of GPs, in Wales covering one third of the population. A further 29 practices are preparing to become fundholders from 1 April next, at which time general practitioner and population coverage is expected to increase to some 35.5 per cent. and 40 per cent. respectively.

Private Recruitment Agencies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the guidelines issued by his Department to local education authorities with regard to using private recruitment agencies to provide supply teachers to state sector schools; what quality controls exist to ensure that supply teachers provided in this way meet the necessary standards required of teachers in state schools, in terms of professional competence and record of conduct; and what assessment he has made of whether children are vulnerable to being taught by unsuitable teachers as a result of the recruitment system. [14687]

Mr. Richards: The responsibility for the appointment and continued employment of teachers is primarily for local education authorities and school governing bodies. The Welsh Office has not issued guidance to them on the use of private recruitment agencies although consideration is being given to the issue of such guidance. LEAs and schools should ensure that all the necessary checks, including those in relation to the qualifications of teachers and their past employment record, have been carried out before an individual is recruited to a teaching post in a maintained school; this applies regardless of the method of recruitment used. It is, amongst other things, a statutory requirement that teachers employed to teach in maintained schools in England and Wales have qualified teacher status.

Employment

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many years it would take for Welsh unemployment to return to the 1979 level at the rate of change of the last three years. [14733]

Mr. Redwood]: Seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment fell from 123,500 in February 1992 to 107,600 in February 1995, an average fall of 442 claimants a month. It is difficult to say when unemployment would reach the same percentage as 1979 as that depends on whether more women wish to join the workforce or not. There has been a big expansion in numbers joining the workforce in the last 15 years. Over the past year unemployment has been falling at the faster average rate of 1,567 claimants a month.

New School Construction

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new schools have been completely constructed since 1979 in Wales; and at what cost. [14868]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Hospital Construction

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new hospitals have been completely constructed since 1979 in Wales; and at what cost. [14872]

Mr. Richards: Eight hospitals have been completely constructed since 1979 at a cost of £82.1 million at the time of construction.

Staff Numbers

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the Welsh Office; and what was the corresponding figure 12 months ago. [15418]

Mr. Redwood: My Department employed 2,504 people at the end of February. This is 123 fewer than at the end of February 1994.

Medical Records

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospital trusts and health authorities who will release medical records to patients only if they first guarantee not to take legal action against the authorities or trust.

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally. In any event such guarantees would be inappropriate where the provisions of the Access to Health Records Act 1990 apply.

Suicides

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many suicides there have been in the Welsh farming community in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [14257]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Deaths registered in 1993 by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys as being suicides among farmers and farm workers in Wales numbered 11 in total.

The information on suicides among farmers for the years 1988 to 1992 given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend on 25 March, Official Report, column 454 and for 1992 on 4 May 1994 at column 533 have been found to be incorrect. I shall write to the hon. Member when corrected data have been verified and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the issue of housing renovation grants during the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [14264]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office regularly receives letter on renovation grants. Renovation policy and progress are also discussed with each of the 37 district councils on the basis of their housing strategy and operational plans.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to review the present formula determining the allocation of housing renovation grants; and if he will make a statement. [14265]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The formula is reviewed annually following consultation with the Council of Welsh Districts.

North East Wales Institute

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the financial management of the North East Wales institute at Wrexham; and if he will make a statement. [15742]

Mr. Richards: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library details of the remuneration and expenses allowable to members of the governing board of the North East Wales institute at Wrexham and the present salaries of the principle and deans. [15741]

Mr. Richards: Governors of higher education institutions do not receive remuneration. They are entitled to receive the repayment of expenses incurred in connection with their duties as governors. Beginning with the academic year ending on 31 July 1995 all higher education institutions will be required to publish emoluments of the principal and remuneration of higher paid staff in their annual accounts.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the Touche Ross report commissioned by the Welsh Higher Education Funding Council into the finances of the North East Wales institute at Wrexham. [15739]

Mr. Richards: No. The report was commissioned by the High Education Funding Council for Wales. It deals with the financial and management systems at the institute which is an independent corporation. The report is being treated as confidential to the council and the institute.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy in respect of civil servants whose name, position and telephone numbers are not publicly available answering queries from members of the public and what is the external distribution of his Department's internal telephone numbers. [18500]

Mr. Redwood: Welsh Office staff answering queries from the public are normally expected to give their names, in line with the principles of the citizens charter. Their office telephone numbers are available from the Welsh Office exchange. The Welsh Office internal telephone directory is sent on request to central Government bodies, non-departmental public bodies and the National Audit Office.

NNR Management

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what levels of funding were allocated to the Countryside Council for Wales for the management of its national nature reserves in Wales in 1994–95; and what has been allocated for 1995–96;

(2) what levels of funding were allocated by the Countryside Council for Wales for the management of its national nature reserves in Wales in 1994–95; and what has been allocated for 1995–96.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 March 1995]: The amounts allocated by the Countryside Council for Wales are as follows:

1994–95: £430,000
1995–96: £300,000

I have asked the CCW to look at the ways of reducing its overhead and reconsider its programme expenditure.

HEALTH

Disability

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the recommendations in the report of the Disablement Income Group entitled "An Opportunity Lost". [15058]

Mr. Bowis: The report makes seven recommendations, most of which are aimed at local authorities. The recommendation to central Government that former independent living fund resources within the special transitional grant should be ringfenced has been considered. It would, however, restrict their flexibility in using their resources. Local authorities are, of course, free to ring fence their own funds. We do not, however, consider that the important tool of ring fencing should be used at central Government level in this instance.

Care Homes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines apply in respect of the eviction from nursing homes of elderly people whose funds are exhausted. [14912]

(2) what powers are available to her to prevent poor elderly citizens from being evicted from homes for the elderly. [14913]

Mr. Bowis: Since April 1993, local authorities have had a responsibility to arrange accommodation in residential care and nursing homes for elderly people who for whatever reason are assessed as needing such care but are unable to meet the cost.

Elderly people who entered independent sector homes before April 1993 may have preserved rights to the higher rates of income support. If such people have been evicted or are threatened with eviction from a residential care home, local authorities have a responsibility to make alternative arrangements. In the case of elderly people in nursing homes who are in this position, the national health service has a responsibility to assess their health needs and to offer appropriate services within the resources available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what assessment she has made of the implications of the Department of Environment's proposals for the removal of the requirement for local authorities to retain directly provided residential accommodation in respect of a local authority's duties under (a) the National Assistance Act 1948, other than part III, (b) the Registered Homes Act 1984 and (c) the NHS and Community Care Act 1990; and if she will make a statement. [14708]

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities already and increasingly discharge their statutory duties to provide residential care through contracts with independent sector providers. Under the Government's proposals, if local authorities thought they were unable to contract for particular services from the independent sector, they could continue to provide them directly.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority care homes provided under the National Assistance Act 1948 have offered (a) respite care, (b) day care and (c) assessment facilities for each year since 1979. [14709]

Mr. Bowis: The information available centrally is shown in the table.

Local authority homes for all client groups, England

As at 31 March	Number of homes with short-stay admissions	Number of homes with day care places available
1987	2,849	1,529
1988	2,947	1,765
1989	2,987	1,848
1990	2,957	1,777
1991	2,945	1,755
1992	2,659	1,581
1993	2,388	1,422

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to amend the rules governing personal contributions to the cost of long-term residential care. [15678]

Mr. Bowis: None but they are kept under regular review.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much (a) capital and (b) revenue has been spent on accommodation provided by local authorities under part III of the National Assistance Act 1948 in each year since 1979. [14774]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 22 March 1995]: The information available centrally relates to capital and revenue expenditure on residential accommodation for adults and is shown in the table for the years for which figures are available.

Local authority expenditure on residential accommodation for adults, England

Financial year	Capital £ million[1]	Revenue (gross) £ million[2]

Kidney Patients

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many renal patients currently on FP10 prescriptions will be transferred to the district health authority contract system as of 1 April. [15375]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what her Department estimates the change in the number of renal patients in England and Wales will be from 1994–95 to 1995–96. [15374]

(2) how many new renal patients per million of population she expects to undergo treatment in the National Health Service in the coming year. [15376]

Mr. Sackville: Both the total number of renal patients and the number of new renal patients per million population are expected to increase. Local purchasers and providers should take this into account in their planning. Specific information in the form requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what efforts her Department has made to ensure that general practitioners are aware of the forthcoming changes to the funding arrangements for the treatment of kidney patients. [15384]

Mr. Malone: All general practitioners and pharmacists have received a family practitioner notice giving guidance and instructions on the changes to the system for providing high tech health care for patients at home. More detailed instructions in the form of an executive letter, EL(95)5 copies of which are available in the Library, have been sent to regional, district and family health services authority General Managers, national health service trust chief executives and general practitioner fundholders. Both of these set out clearly what is expected of GPs in implementing these changes.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she now expects her Department to publish the renal review; and what factors led to the delay in publication. [15382]

Mr. Sackville: We are currently considering the practical implications of the report on the review of renal services. We intend to publish purchasing guidance based on the report once those implications are clear.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts she is making to ensure that the new contracts between district health authorities and renal units are in place before 1 April. [15385]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities have been asked to ensure that new arrangements are in place by 1 April where continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis is currently being funded through general practitioner prescribing. This affects about half of CAPD patients. District health authorities have been asked to ensure as a priority that there is a continuity of care for these patients. In order to facilitate this they only have been authorised, if necessary, to contract with the supplier currently providing the services for 1995–96.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been made by her Department as to the effect of the new funding arrangements for renal units on the level of care provided for kidney patients at the Royal Victoria infirmary and the Freeman hospital in Newcastle-upon-Tyne. [15377]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Newcastle and north Tyneside health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. S. Murray, chairman of the authority, for details.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for health how many renal units there are in England and Wales; and how many patients they treat (a) by region and (b) in total. [15381]

Mr. Sackville: In 1992, the latest year for which figures are held for England and Wales, 53 adult renal units in England, and eight in Wales treated a total of 18,768 patients. Regional details are as follows:

Regions	Number
Northern and Yorkshire	1,944
Trent	1,814
Anglia and Oxford	1,910
North Thames	3,534
South Thames	1,927
South and West	2,239
West Midlands	1,350
North West	2,849
Wales	1,201
Total	18,768

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the policy of her Department regarding rationing renal treatment and peritoneal dialysis on the basis of age. [15379]

Mr. Sackville: National health service treatment should be available to all on the basis of clinical need. It is for the clinician concerned to determine the appropriate treatment, which should not be denied on the ground of age alone, although age will be one of the factors which the clinician will take into account.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which groups were consulted by her Department during its renal review. [15383]

Mr. Sackville: All providers of renal services in England, all regional and district health authorities and a number of professional and patient interest groups were consulted on the renal review.

Casualty Units, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish and set out the dates, periods and reasons when, in 1995 to date, at casualty units in the area of the former North East Thames regional health authority within Greater London, those arriving either before or after diagnosis and treatment were accommodated on trolleys from emergency ambulances, and the maximum number so used on any such occasion. [15820]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. Local health authorities are responsible for monitoring the performance of hospitals providing services for their residents.

Patients at Home (Care Packages)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to monitor the introduction of EL(95)5. [15128]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities have been asked to introduce changes in the way some packages of care are provided in the national health service from 1 April 1995. They have been further asked to develop strategies for providing these treatments from April 1996. Their progress in implementing these requirements will be monitored by the NHS Executive in the usual way.

Intensive Care

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average percentage bed occupancy rate for each intensive care therapy unit in England during 1994 and for each of the last 10 years. [15360]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many intensive care units in England have an intensive care consultant available 24 hours a day; and what percentage of all intensive care units that represents. [15359]

Mr. Sackville: Intensive care does not have specialty status and does not, therefore, have its own dedicated consultants. Patients in intensive care are attended by consultants in various specialties.

Deprivation and Ill Health

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment her Department is making as to any link between poor housing and ill health; [15390]

(2) what assessment her Department has made as to regional and local inequalities in health; and what action is being taken to tackle inequalities; [15386]

(3) what assessment her Department is making as to any link between low incomes, poor diet and ill health; [15392]

(5) what assessment her Department is making as to any link between unemployment, stress and ill health; [13389]

(6) what assessment is being made by her Department as to any link between low income and ill health. [15391]

Mr. Sackville: The White Paper,"The Health of the Nation", Cm 1986, acknowledged that good housing is important to good health and that in England, as in all other westernised countries, there are variations in health status between different socio-economic groups within the population. A sub-group of the Chief Medical Officer's health of the nation working group is currently looking at how the Department and the national health service can make best use of existing information in tackling ethnic, geographical, socio-economic and gender variations in health status in the current health of the nation key areas. The sub-group will also be advising on areas in which new epidemiological and research information is needed.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects that beta-interferon will be prescribable on the NHS for the treatment of multiple sclerosis. [15378]

Mr. Malone: No beta-interferon drug for multiple sclerosis has been licensed for use in the United Kingdom. A licence application for such a drug is currently being assessed by the European Medicines Evaluation Agency.

AIDS

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how much money has been ring-fenced for HIV/AIDS prevention in 1995; and what proportion of this figure has been allocated to the Health Education Authority for this specific area of work. [15315]

Mr. Sackville: A total of £49.612 million has been earmarked for HIV/AIDS prevention in the national health service in 1995–96. This includes funding to safeguard the blood supply, train health care workers for infection control and HIV testing as well as monies for local prevention/public education work. The Health Education Authority budget, available for national public education, is separate from this budget. The amount of money to be provided for the HEA's work on HIV/AIDS in 1995–96 has yet to be determined.

Solihull Hospital

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what were the costs of operating Solihull hospital for 1994–95; what estimates she has made for 1995–96; and if she will make a statement. [15132]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally, however, I understand from West Midlands regional health authority that the 1994–95 budgeted costs were £32.9 million and that for 1995–96 proposed costs of £39.5 million have been identified. It is estimated that these costs will lead to an £850,000 deficit in 1994–95 rising to a potential deficit of £7.8 million the following year. A project team has been set up by West Midlands regional health authority, including representatives from Solihull hospital and Birmingham Heartlands national health service trust, to explore ways of resolving this situation. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Baker, chairman of the authority, for further details.

Road Traffic Act (Emergency Treatment Fee)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what representations she has received about section 158 of the Road Traffic Act 1988; and if she will consider bringing forward proposals to annul that section of the Act. [15371]

Mr. Sackville: During 1994 the Department received a number of letters from hon. Members and the public expressing concern about the emergency treatment fee, collected under section 158 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. We have no plans to change the Act.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 24 November 1994 at cols 321–22 and on 14 March at col 545.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each family health service authority what percentage of the costs for (a) computer hardware, (b) computer software and (c) computer maintenance (i) non-funding and (ii) fundholding GPs are presently allowed to claim back. [15363]

Mr. Malone: Under the terms of the cost-plus contract for general practitioners, the profession is fully reimbursed all expenses incurred in the delivery of general medical services.

All GPs, non-fundholders and fundholders alike, are able to claim direct reimbursement of normally up to 50 per cent. for practice computer systems to support general medical service activity.

In addition, GP fundholders are required to have systems to manage their budgets, for which they are able to claim up to 100 per cent. of specialist computer software and related maintenance costs and 75 per cent. of computer hardware and associated maintenance costs.

The balance of expenditure on computer hardware, software and maintenance will continue to be met indirectly through the expenses element in the gross fees and allowances.

Information on the percentage costs reimbursed by individual family health services authorities is not available centrally.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the waiting time in each regional health authority area are in England for the delivery to a patient of a standard wheelchair. [15328]

[15819]

Mr. Bowis: Runwell medium secure unit is run by the Southend Community Care Services national health service trust. In October 1994 the trust expanded the number of beds in the secure unit from 14 to 28. The trust's plans to expand medium secure provision further on the Runwell hospital site and the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the trust about these plans.

South and West RHA Headquarters

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the cost of acquiring and equipping the premises for the South and West regional health authority at the Parkway business park, Bristol. [16063]

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the circumstances in which a person with no formal medical qualifications was asked to assist in a hip replacement operation at Newham general hospital; who was the employee; and what was his or her contract of employment. [15837]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Newham Healthcare national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Mrs. Rosemary Walters, for details.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grades of personnel, other than qualified medical practitioners and nurses are, under health service regulations, permitted to participate in surgical operations; and what records are kept of such occasions. [15836]

Mr. Sackville: The law does not specify who may participate in an operation. Theatre nurses, operating department assistants and operating department orderlies working under the direct supervision of medical staff may assist in some operations where needed, within the limits of their competence.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available in the Library copies of the written evidence submitted to, and the transcripts of oral evidence taken by, the Warnock committee which produced the report on human fertilisation and embryology; and if that evidence and those transcripts have ever been published. [15838]

Mr. Sackville: Copies of written evidence to the committee of inquiry into human fertilisation and embryology and responses to the Warnock report from organisations were placed in the Library in 1985, where the organisation consented. Transcripts of oral evidence to the committee were not made. Organisations who gave oral and written evidence to the committee are listed in the appendix to the Warnock report. Some of them are believed to have published their own evidence.

Community Care Forum

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the oral statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 1 February, Official Report, column 1036, if she will list the schedule of dates for the meetings of the Community Care Forum, its terms of reference, and who is to be appointed to the chair. Mr. Sackville: [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The then Basildon and Thurrock health authority envisaged a continuing major role for Orsett hospital in the provision of health care in the district.

EDUCATION

Hearing Impaired Children

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many vacancies exist for teachers of the deaf; [15456]

(2) how many teachers of the deaf have qualified in each of the last three years. [15457]

Mr. Robin Squire: The results of a DFE survey covering the 1993–94 financial year indicate that in the 87 local education authorities that completed the survey, 68 teachers completed their training to gain a mandatory qualification in the teaching of hearing impaired children.

The same survey indicated that there were 24.2 vacancies for teachers of hearing impaired children in the 87 LEAs concerned.

Figures are not available for earlier years, but a similar survey is currently being undertaken covering the 1994–95 financial year.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many further education colleges in the north-west have not met their targets for (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; [15674]

(2) which colleges of further education in the north-west have made the biggest claims for demand lead element in 1994–95; and what vocational training contributed most to these demand lead element bids; [15676]

(3) what are the consequences for colleges that have been awarded grants but not achieved their targets; in which cases reimbursement of public funds will be sought; and how the reimbursement will be operated. [15675]

Mr. Boswell: These are matters for the Further Education Funding Council. I have written to the FEFC's chief executive, Sir William Stubbs, and asked him to respond to the hon. Member's questions directly by letter.

National Curriculum

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of the Dearing review of the national curriculum. [15593]

Mr. Forth: The estimated total cost of the Dearing review of the national curriculum is £4.7 million, comprising:

i. £755,000 for the interim and final Dearing reports on the national curriculum;

ii. £528,000 for work on slimming down the curriculum by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority and its advisory groups, excluding SCAA internal staff costs;

iii. £2 million for the consultation on the revised curriculum proposals, including the cost of publishing and distributing the consultation documents and a report on the outcome of consultation;

iv. £1.4 million for publication and distribution of the final subject documents in January 1995, excluding staff costs.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total cost of the work on the national curriculum before the Dearing review. [15592]

Mr. Forth: Central Government expenditure on the national curriculum between 1988 and 1993 was an estimated £469 million. Some £350 million of this was in the form of grants for education support and training to support expenditure by local education authorities and schools mainly on books, equipment and training. The £469 million also includes the full grants to the former National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council, and thus includes some expenditure on the curriculum and assessment which was not directly concerned with the national curriculum.

Secondary Education Advisory Council

Mr. Don Foser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of (a) setting up and (b) winding up the Secondary Education Advisory Council and the National Curriculum Council. [15595]

Mr. Forth: I will write to the hon. Member.

Whittingham Communities Primary School

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she will be in a position to give a full answer to the letter from the hon. Member for Walthamstow of 27 February, regarding Whittingham school: and when the council of the London borough of Waltham Forest will be giving a decision on the rebuilding of Whittingham school. [15850]

Mr. Robin Squire: My letter of 13 March to the hon. Member explained the position on the proposals to establish the Whittingham community primary school. I expect a decision to be made shortly and shall advise the hon. Member of the outcome.

School Inspections

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of (a) an average primary school Office for Standards in Education and (b) an average secondary school Ofsted inspection for the most recent year for which figures are available. [15594]

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of setting up the Funding Agency for Schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The sum of £1.044 million was spent on the FAS headquarters in York, initial staff-related costs, and other miscellaneous items prior to the agency's formal establishment on 1 April 1994.

Asbestos

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what steps her Department has taken over the last year to inform local education authorities and grant-maintained schools of the dangers of school buildings containing asbestos for individuals carrying out repair, refurbishment and building maintenance work; [15147]

(2) what consideration her Department has given to the sending of a guidance note to head teachers informing them of the dangers of asbestos for individuals carrying out repair, refurbishment and building maintenance work on school buildings; and if she will make a statement. [15149]

Mr. Robin Squire: General information and advice about asbestos is set out in the Department of the Environment's booklet "Asbestos Materials in Buildings", which was revised most recently in 1991. The Department for Education will shortly be issuing, as part of a document dealing with building matters generally, additional guidance about asbestos.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration her Department has given to the risk of voluntary staff facing exposure to asbestos dust when carrying out repair, refurbishment and building maintenance work on school buildings. [15148]

Mr. Robin Squire: All work with asbestos is regulated by the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987. These regulations impose duties on employers, including local education authorities and schools, to protect their employees from exposure to asbestos, but also extend this duty to include the protection of anyone else who may be affected by the work. Schools can seek professional advice about asbestos either from their local education authority or other sources. They should certainly do so if they believe that asbestos poses any threat to staff or pupils. Detailed guidance is available in the Department of the Environment booklet "Asbestos Materials in Buildings".

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration her Department has given to encouraging local education authorities to survey school buildings so as to create detailed registers of school buildings that contain asbestos; and if she will make a statement. [15150]

Mr. Robin Squire: Responsibility for the condition of school buildings and the health and safety of pupils and staff lies with local education authorities and school governors. Although the Department would suggest that in all cases the presence of asbestos in school buildings should be recorded and its condition monitored, how local education authorities and schools exercise their responsibilities for health and safety must be for them to decide.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what financial provision has been made by central Government for increases in teachers' pay in 1996 both in cash terms and in percentage terms. [15267]

Mr. Robin Squire: The provisional figure for the aggregate total standard spending on all services in 1996–97 is £44,073 million. Individual service shares will be decided in next year's settlement.

Grant-maintained Schools

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the capital allocation to each grant-maintained schools in Birmingham since their establishment; and what information she has on the annual capital expenditure of each school. [15443]

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education with which bodies she consulted prior to the announcement of the standard spending assessment for education. [15044]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government consulted the local authority associations through the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance and the working groups which support it. In addition, my right hon. Friend and other Ministers and I regularly meet representatives of local education authorities and other bodies; discussions cover a range of issues including education funding.

Green Fold School

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the registered capacity of Green Fold school in Bolton, Lancashire when it was first opened in 1981; what has been the registered capacity for each year since then; and what is the latest projection. [144434]

Mr. Robin Squire: Our records show that in 1981 Green Fold special school had approval for 80 "educationally sub-normal (severe)" boys and girls aged three to 18. The capacity remained the same until 1988, when the then Secretary of State gave approval for the school for 60 boys and girls with severe learning difficulties aged three to 11. The capacity has remained at this level for each year since then. Any change to this figure would require Bolton local education authority to submit proposals to the Secretary of State under section 183 of the Education Act 1993.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000. [14596]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 17 March 1995]: To supply all the information requested would involve disproportionate expense. The following information is readily available.

Publicity expenditure by my Department, excluding agencies, expressed in 1994 prices, is as follows:

Year
1985–86	5.4
1986–87	6.3
1987–88	6.9
1988–89	9.3
1989–90	[1]39.5

1991–92	1.5
1992–93	1.5
1993–94	1.4
1994–95 (forecast)	1.7

Notes:

It is not possible to identify readily any expenditure related to privatisation within the figures shown.

Polling and Public Survey Organisations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the employment of polling or public survey organisations by his Department during the current and previous financial years, on the organisations employed by his Department, on the values of individual contracts for these services, on the total amounts of money spent and on the purposes of the research undertaken by these organisations. [14513]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The Department undertakes a wide range of research activities to assist in meeting its priority aims, as set out in the Department's annual report. In order to achieve this in an efficient and cost-effective manner, the Department employs research organisations on short-term contracts to undertake relevant and necessary public survey work. The main purpose of these surveys is to seek public views on key issues in order to monitor and evaluate the impact and effectiveness of departmental policy. Contracts are awarded on the basis of open competitive tendering, in line with government purchasing procedures.

In the current and previous financial years—that is, 1994–95 to date and 1993–94—the Department commissioned 39 public surveys from a variety of research bodies, including market research companies, academic bodies and commercial organisations. The total value of these contracts was in the order of £2.2 million. The value of individual contracts is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Allotments

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many spare allotment spaces there are currently (a) in the London borough of Tower Hamlets, (b) in the Ancoats area of Manchester, on Teesside and (d) nationally.

Sir Paul Beresford: Allotments are a matter for the appropriate local authority, and this information is not held centrally. However, my Department is currently funding the National Society of Allotment and Leisure Gardeners to conduct a survey of allotment authorities. This aims, within the next two years, to produce statistics on the number of plots, vacancies and waiting lists, whether the site is local authority run or self-managed, and details of the site facilities.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to make available information to the unemployed on how to manage allotments and grow their own vegetables. [15260]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department is this year funding the National Society of Allotment and Leisure Gardeners with a grant of £35,000, part of which is designed to help promote allotment gardening and increase the take-up of vacant allotment plots, particularly by the unemployed. NSALG has a number of information leaflets available, including a starter pack for new tenants on how to grow vegetables.

Cabling

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the code of practice being prepared by his Department on cabling will be completed. [15761]

Sir Paul Beresford: The national joint utilities group in producing guidelines to encourage operators of underground services to adopt practices which minimise damage to ~~trees.~~ They will be published shortly.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if a report or survey will be produced on the damage to tree roots that has resulted from cabling. [15762]

Sir Paul Beresford: No. However, the national joint utilities group will shortly publish guidelines to help minimise damage to tree roots by operators of underground services. The guidelines will be reviewed six months after their implementation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Commonwealth Development Corporation (Indonesia)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the exact date on which it was decided in principle to set up an office of the Commonwealth Development Corporation in Indonesia; on what exact date it was set up; how many staff it has employed in each year since it was set up; what has been its running costs in each year; what account the Commonwealth Development Corporation takes in its funding arrangements on human rights abuses in Indonesia; and if the Commonwealth Development Corporation has supported projects with implications for the development of East Timor. [15473]

Mr. Goodlad: The CDC representative office in Indonesia was opened in 1971 following ministerial approval in 1970 for CDC to operate in Indonesia. I understand from the CDC that the office has three executive and 10 support staff. Running costs in 1994 were £413,000. Staffing and costs since 1971 have been similar; details for each year could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

When deciding on its programme in particular countries, the Government expect CDC to take account of any decision to suspend other aid programme activities on human rights grounds. This does not arise in Indonesia, where we believe there is a good economic and development case for continuing to provide aid.

CDC does not have, and has never had, any involvement in East Timor.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial support the Commonwealth Development Corporation has given to projects in Indonesia in each year since 1980; and if he will list the project supported and the cost in each case. [15450]

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 22 March 1995]: CDC Investments, and projects committed since 1980, are shown in the following tables.

CDC investments in Indonesia 1980 to 1993–94

1980	1,635
1981	7,535

Madagascar

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is currently being provided by the United Kingdom Government to the Government of Madagascar to promote sustainable development and the conservation of biodiversity in Madagascar.

Mr. Baldry: Under our joint funding scheme we are providing £385,000 in support of two World Wide Fund for Nature projects to assist the Government of Madagascar in biodiversity and protected areas management and environmental education. Our bilateral development programme is confined to English language teaching and training awards.

Mr. Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the use of United Kingdom public funds in the Rio Tinto Zinc project to mine for titanium dioxide in southern Madagascar.

Mr. Baldry: No British aid funds are involved in this project.

PRIME MINISTER

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the sources and calculation behind his statement in January on the extra amount that a Scottish Parliament could cost the average Scot. [14917]

The Prime Minister: I have no intention of introducing a Scottish Parliament which would undermine the integrity of the Union and make Scotland the highest taxed part of the United Kingdom. As I said in January, a tax-raising Scottish Parliament able to raise income tax by 3p in the pound could cost the average family on Scottish male average earnings £6 per week. I am arranging for the basis for this calculation to be placed in the House library. Moreover, if identifiable public expenditure in Scotland were to be reduced after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament to the same level per head as the United Kingdom average, the shortfall to be made up by Scottish taxpayers would be equivalent to at least an extra 19p in the pound on income tax. The basis for this calculation is also being placed in House Library.

The proponents of a Scottish Parliament should have calculated the cost to taxpayers in Scotland before they committed themselves to its introduction.

Bank of England

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will ensure that the replacement for the Deputy Governor of the Bank of England in a senior industrialist or trade unionist who understands manufacturing economy and its needs in competitive industry. [16066]

The Prime Minister: The Government will ensure that the person appointed to this post will be the one best qualified to fill it.

Scott Report

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Prime Minister how soon after the publication of the Scott report the minutes of evidence will be available; and if he will make a statement. [16067]

The Prime Minister: The transcripts of the public hearings of Sir Richard Scott's inquiry are available in the House Library and Westminster city library. In addition, Sir Richard Scott has made it clear that he will publish as soon as practicable following the publication of his report as much as possible of the documentary evidence submitted to the inquiry, including witness statements and the questionnaires sent by the inquiry to the witnesses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Privatisation

Ms Armstrong: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in respect of each privatisation since 1979, including industries previously located at the Department of Energy, (a) the loss or profit of each company in the five years prior to privatisation and (b) the grants or loans made over the same period. [15352]

Mr. Heseltine: This information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. Such information as is readily available on the finances of privatised bodies when they were in the public sector can be found in the following published sources:

> "The Government's Expenditure Plans", for each of the years up to and including 1989;
> The annual "Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement", for 1990 to 1992, succeeded for 1993 and 1994 by the "Statistical Supplement to the Financial Statement and Budget Report".

These were published by HMSO as Command Papers and are available in the Library of the House.

Microsoft Corporation

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Mr. Bill Gates of Microsoft Corporation with particular reference to employment issues. [15526]

Mr. Heseltine: We had a wide-ranging discussion about a number of matters. I would not be prepared to make a public statement about matters discussed in confidence.

Inward Investment

Mr. Legg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much equity capital has been invested in the United Kingdom since 1990 by (a) EU companies and (b) non-EU companies; [15327]

(2) how much has been invested in the United Kingdom by overseas companies by way of additional loans since 1990. [15324]

Mr. Eggar: The latest available information was published by the Central Statistical Office in table 2.10 of Business Monitor MA4, "Overseas Direct Investment", which is available in the Library of the House. Official statistics do not distinguish between share capital and loan capital.

Coal Imports

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the tonnage of coal imported into the United Kingdom, and the power stations which used it, in each of the last five years. [15841]

Mr. Page [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The total quantities of coal imported into the United Kingdom and the quantities imported by the major power producers over the past five years were:

Year	Total imports	(Thousand tonnes) Imports by major power producers
1990	14,783	4,721
1991	19,611	7,261
1992	20,339	7,568
1993[1]	18,400	4,508
1994[1]	15,850	2,889

[1] Figures for 1993 and 1994 are provisional and include a small element of estimation.

Figures for individual companies are confidential.

EDUCATION

Youth and Community Workers

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what financial provision will be made to training youth and community workers beyond the current financial year; and if she will make a statement. [15542]

Mr. Boswell: Local education authorities are free to decide on how much they budget for youth and community work and other educational areas from within their more general education budgets.

In 1995–96, an allocation of £1.2 million from the Department's budget for the grants for education support and training—GEST—programme will be specifically target training in youth and community work. The GEST programme accounts for less than 2 per cent. of overall LEA expenditure.

Through the funding councils the Department also funds higher and further education institutions which provide youth and community worker training.

Youth Service Unit

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what role is projected for her Department's youth service unit beyond 1995. [15541]

Mr. Boswell: The youth service unit's principal role will be to assist in discharging the objective for the youth service described in the Department's document "Better Education for All", which is to support statutory and voluntary youth service providers in promoting the personal and social education of young people.

Prescriptions (Students)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask (1) the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of students in the last year for which figures are available are eligible for free prescriptions. [15950]

(2) the Secretary of State for Health at what stage the Prescription Pricing Authority regarded a student loan as income when deciding on a claimant's eligibility for free prescriptions. [15952]

Mr. Malone: I have been asked to reply.

Student loans have been an integral element of the provision made from public funds for student support since September 1990. Since that day they have been taken into account as income when assessing students' entitlement to help through the national health service low-income scheme. In 1993–94, around 308,000 low-income scheme claims were made by students, of which about 60 per cent. resulted in entitlement to free prescriptions.

TRANSPORT

Rail Services, Carshalton and Wallington

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to franchise rail services serving the constituency of Carshalton and Wallington in the current Parliament; and what guarantees he can give about the safety, frequency and reliability of the services. [15270]

Mr. Watts: The Franchising Director proposes to issue invitations to tender for the Network SouthCentral franchise later this year. He aims to let the franchise by April 1996. The passenger service requirement for the franchise will specify, among other things, the frequency of trains to be operated and maximum journey times. The Franchising Director will monitor operators' performance regularly and he will be able to impose penalties if the passenger service requirement is not delivered. The Rail Regulator requires train operators to have a validated safety case before he will issue a licence to operate.

Road Schemes, North-west

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff currently employed in the Highways Agency are being re-deployed to the roads programme directorate in Birmingham to provide local knowledge of schemes in the north-west. [15664]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 24 March 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, how many staff currently employed in the Highways Agency are being re-deployed to the Roads Programme Directorate in Birmingham to provide local knowledge of schemes in the North West.

We are keeping the Directorate's Northern Operations Division in Manchester, therefore our oversight of the preparation and design of major improvements to trunk roads in the North West will not change location.

As part of our total restructuring package we asked staff to indicate their preferences for future location and type of work. Many wished to stay working in the same location and are likely to stay on the same work. Supervision of construction is being brought together in Birmingham and 3 staff presently based in Manchester are to be transferred with that work.

None of our restructuring and reorganisation affects the terms of employment of either firms of consultants or local authorities who are designing the schemes or acting as engineers to the contracts.

Airport Safety

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if individual airports are permitted to carry out self-assessment on the need for arrestor beds; [15776]

(2) if the Civil Aviation Authority has reviewed the potential safety hazards beyond current runway and safety areas and determined the need for ground arrestor systems at Plymouth airport in accordance with recommendation 94-15 of the air accidents branch; [15775]

(3) if he will make a statement regarding the progress being made by the Civil Aviation Authority to implement recommendation 94-15 of the air accident branch report on the accident for Cessna 550 Citation II at Southampton Eastleigh airport on 26 May 1993. [15781]

Mr. Norris: These are matters for the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority who, I understand, wrote to the hon. Member on 22 December 1994. As was pointed out in that letter, it is consistent with good safety management practice for individual airport authorities to conduct their own safety risk assessments of any potential hazards beyond the ends of runways and to take any action they consider appropriate to eliminate or mitigate the potential risks posed.

I expect the Civil Aviation Authority to advise me later this year on progress with the review that it is conducting in response to the air accident investigation branch's recommendation 94-15.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the United Kingdom post in Islamabad asked the Home Office to interview the sponsor in the United Kingdom of Mr. Shahid Iqbal, IMM/89155 and J238169; and when and where the sponsor is to be interviewed. [16147]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The request from the British high commission in Islamabad for an interview from Mr. Shahid Iqbal's sponsor was received by the Home Office on 22 February 1995. The papers are currently at Leeds-Bradford airport, which will contact Mr. Iqbal's sponsor to arrange an interview in due course.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when papers were forwarded to Leeds-Bradford airport in connection with a request to interview the sponsor of Mr. Parvez Akhtar, IMP A518185/2(S) and PO 28871/94; if an interview date has been allocated to the sponsor; and if he will make a staement. [16145]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The papers in connection with the request to interview the sponsor of Mr. Parvez Akhtar were sent to Leeds-Bradford airport on 1 June 1994. Since

I wrote on 15 February, Leeds-Bradford airport has written to Mr. Akhtar's sponsor to ask whether she would be willing to travel to a port in the north-east other than Leeds-Bradford airport to be interviewed. As a result of the response, the papers have now been transferred to the immigration office at North Shields who will shortly contact Mr. Akhtar's sponsor to offer her an appointment for an interview.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which of Her Majesty's prisons action to control the use of illegal drugs has been intensified within the past six months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 24 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about which of Her Majesty's Prisons have intensified action to control the use of illegal drugs within the past six months.

Reducing the level of drug misuses is one of the Prison Service's main strategic priorities for 1994 to 1997 and as part of this all prisons have been asked to take additional action to prevent the misuse of drugs within their establishments. This is being supported by a range of initiatives from Headquarters to control further the use of illicit drugs, including the development of a new and comprehensive strategy for reducing drug misuse which will be issued shortly.

Examples of measures being adopted to combat drug misuse across the Prison Service include:

wider use of closed (non-contact) visits for those found guilty of drug-related offences; increased use of drug sniffer dogs;

more extensive use of closed circuit television cameras during visits; better use of intelligence to target drug dealers and those inmates and visitors attempting to smuggle drugs into prison; improved training for staff in identifying drug substances and in searching techniques.

the start of mandatory drug testing at eight establishments prior to its extension to all establishments.

Police Authority Clerks

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance he issues to police authorities on the remuneration scales to be used for the employment of the clerk to the authority; and if such posts have to be advertised for open competition. [15582]

Mr. Maclean: No guidance has been issued to police authorities on the remuneration scales to be used for the employment of the clerk to the authority; this is a matter for police authorities to determine. There is no requirement for such posts to be advertised for open competition.

Victims Helpline

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of the victims helpline to 8 March. [15167]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 24 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of the Victim Helpline up to 8 March.

The total costs are estimated to be in the region of £19,000. This includes start up costs of £8,400, and running costs of £10,600.

Live Exports (Policing Costs)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of additional policing costs arising from the transhipment of (a) live animals and (b) veal calves for 1994–95 at (i) Coventry airport, (ii) Shoreham point, (iii) Brightlingsea, (iv) Plymouth and (v) Swansea. [15252]

Mr. Maclean: These are matters for individual police authorities. I understand that the latest estimates of the additional policing costs to be incurred in 1994–95 are:

Coventry Airport	385,000
Shoreham	3.74 million
Brightlingsea	1.8 million
Plymouth	[1]100,000
Swansea	2,500

[1] Actual expenditure to 17 March.

It is not possible to apportion costs by type of animal.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Equal Opportunities (Teachers)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if teachers of the Protestant faith can be appointed to schools controlled by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools; and if he will make a statement about fair employment practices in controlled schools. [14844]

Mr. Ancram: Teachers of the Protestant faith can be appointed to schools controlled by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools. Fair employment legislation does not, however, apply to teachers in any schools but does apply to non-teaching staff in all schools. Education and library boards have in place an equal opportunities policy statement which is used by controlled schools for their non-teaching staff and are presently preparing a statement to be used by controlled schools for their teaching staff.

Fishing Industry

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fishing vessels are estimated to be involved in the catching of nephrops; and how many of these vessels previously caught white fish. [15124]

Mr. Ancram: In the Northern Ireland fleet 184 vessels of over 10 m in length landed nephrops during 1994.

While fishing for nephrops, there is an inevitable by-catch of white fish and all these vessels caught white fish.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the 18 projects grant-aided in 1992–93 by the EC Commission in the fishing industry in Northern Ireland as described in "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", section 5.22. [15428]

Mr. Ancram: The 18 projects grant-aided in 1992–93 by the EC Commission in the fishing industry in Northern Ireland are set out in the table.

Animal Diseases

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of enzootic disease in animals have been diagnosed in Northern Ireland each year since 1989; and what proportion of these cases was introduced from outside Northern Ireland. [15404]

Mr. Ancram: Enzootic disease is the term used to describe any animals or poultry disease which exists in a particular area. Listed in the table are the number of cases of the main notifiable enzootic diseases present in Northern Ireland for which statistics are available since 1989. It is not possible to provide the proportion of cases introduced from outside Northern Ireland.

Enzootic abortions in ewes	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	24	56

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of epizootic disease in animals have been diagnosed in Northern Ireland each year since 1989; and when he projects the eradication of this disease. [15405]

Mr. Ancram: Epizootic disease is the term used to describe any highly infectious disease which affects a large number of animals in a wide area at the same time and spreads with great rapidity.

Since 1989 the only instances of epizootic disease in Northern Ireland was in 1991 when six cases of Newcastle disease occurred in poultry.

Action continues to be taken to prevent the introduction of any epizootic disease of animals or poultry into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of cases of ectoparasitic infestation in sheep for (a) the two years before compulsory dipping was abolished and (b) the two years since compulsory dipping has been abolished. [14567]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 23 March 1995]: With the exception of sheep scab, the number of ectoparasitic infections in sheep are not recorded in Northern Ireland.

Compulsory dipping of sheep was abolished in Northern Ireland in 1993. The number of cases in sheep scap in Northern Ireland for the years in question is as follows:

1991: 46

1992: 59

1993: 48

1994: 71

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the areas in Northern Ireland that have been designated as environmentally sensitive, (b) the amount of money spent on each of these areas since 1989, (c) the expenditure for each of these areas in 1994–95 and (d) the projected expenditure for each of these areas for 1996–97. [15424]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows.

There are five environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland:

Area
Mourne mountains and Slieve Croob	Designated as pilot ESA in 1988 Redesignated May 1993
Antrim coast, Glens and Rathlin	Designated as pilot ESA in 1989 Redesignated and extended May 1993
West Fermanagh and Erne Lakeland	Designated in May 1993
Sperrins	Designated in June 1994
Slieve Gullion	Designated in June 1994

As ESA payments are not due until 12 months from the date on which a farmer enters into an ESA agreement, the only payments to date have been the original pilot ESAs as follows:

	To date £ Million	1994–95 £ Million
Mourne mountains and Slieve Croob	1.6	0.350
Glens of Antrim	0.652	0.215

Projected expenditure for all five ESAs in 1996–97 is £5.104 million.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the criteria for an area of land to be designated as environmentally sensitive. [15423]

Mr. Ancram: The following criteria were applied to the selection of the existing five environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland:

> "Each area must be of national environmental significance; must represent a discrete and coherent unit of environmental interest; its conservation must depend on adopting, maintaining or extending particular farming practices; farming practices in the area must have changed, or must be likely to do so, in ways that pose a threat to the environment."

Agricultural Helpline

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many calls the helpline planned by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland—see "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", section 5.8—received in its first year; and how much it cost. [15426]

Mr. Ancram: In its first year the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland's helpline received 750 calls. The cost of each call was borne by the caller and the estimated cost of handling the calls was £370.

Industrial Research and Technology Unit

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons there is a planned decrease of £3 million in spending on the industrial research and technology unit in Northern Ireland between 1995–96 and 1996–97, referred to in "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", table 6.1. [15409]

Mr. Ancram: The budget for the industrial research and technology unit will, in addition, receive European regional development fund funding which is included in the ERDF line of the table. Taking account of this, the total funding planned for the unit is:

1995–96: £13.5 million

1996–97: £13.3 million

1997–98: £13.2 million

Official Travel

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the review of arrangements for ministerial and official travel mentioned in "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", section 4.49 has taken place; and if he will list how much each Minister and other officials spent on travel (a) in 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [15420]

Sir John Wheeler: Three reviews have been taken in 1994–95 into the use of (a) executive jets provided by the private sector; (b) agents to provide travel and hotel bookings in Belfast; and (c) the use of the Government car service. As a result of each review, the new contracts have provided improved value for money through reducing costs and higher discounts.

It is not possible, without disproportionate cost, to identify the separate travel costs for each individual Minister and officials. The total expenditure by the Northern Ireland Office on all travel and subsistence, including police escorts for Ministers, broken down as between (a) Ministers and their personal support staff (b) senior officials and team support staff and (c) all other Northern Ireland Office staff, including the Prison Service and the Compensation Agency was £3,859,514 in 1993–94 and £3,338,609 for 1994–95 to 22 March 1995 as follows:

	1993–94 £	1994–95 (to 22 March 1995) £
(a) Minister and support staff:
(1) Travel and subsistence	792,601	779,092
(2) Car service	322,922	272,694
(3) RUC escort	509,607	522,969
Total	1,625,130	1,574,755
(b) Senior NIO officials and support staff:
(1) Travel and subsistence	140,067	131,706
(2) Car service	48,060	43,040
Total	188,127	174,746
(c) All other NIO staff (including Prison Service and Compensation Agency
(1) Travel and subsistence	2,046,257	1,589,108
Grand Total	3,859,514	3,338,609

Watercourse Management

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been spent on watercourse management in Northern Ireland since 1989; and what is the projected expenditure for watercourse management in 1996–97. [15407]

Mr. Ancram: Expenditure for watercourse management division from April 1989 to March 1995 was £110.4 million. Projected expenditure for 1996–97 is £18.8 million.

Milk Marketing Board

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of converting the Milk Marketing Board for Northern Ireland into a voluntary co-operative. [15406]

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland's expenditure on this matter is estimated at £250,000 over the two years 1993–94 and 1994–95. This is compromised mainly of staff time but includes payments for independent financial advice. The Milk Marketing Board for Northern Ireland has estimated its expenditure at £650,000.

Agricultural Pollution

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the success of the campaign introduced in 1991 by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland to reduce farm pollution from farms in river catchment areas as described in "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", section 5.16(i); what were the costs of setting up this campaign; what were the costs of this campaign for 1994–95; and what are the projected costs of this campaign for 1996–97. [15427]

Mr. Ancram: More than 30 per cent. of farmers took action to minimise the risk of pollution.

There were no additional costs in setting up the campaign. It was rather a focusing of existing resources to target high-risk farms on selected river catchments with a known history of pollution from agricultural activities.

Measures to reduce farm source pollution remain a priority. The Department of Agriculture offers free advice to farmers at a cost of £186,000 in 1994–95.

Projected costs for 1996–97 are broadly similar to 1994–95.

Forensic Science Laboratory

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the £4 million planned for the Forensic Science Laboratory in Northern Ireland in 1994–95 was or will be recovered from the Police Authority as charges for services. [15410]

Sir John Wheeler: It is estimated that, of the laboratory's total expenditure of £4.8 million in 1994–95, £4.6 million will be recouped from the Police Authority.

Civil Defence Services

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) projected spending for the civil defence services for 1996–97 and (b) the areas within this where savings have been identified, as mentioned in "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", section 4.41. [15412]

Sir John Wheeler: The projected spending for civil defence services for 1996–97, based on the 1994 public expenditure survey exercise, is contained within a budget of £522,000 for all emergency planning services within the Northern Ireland Office. However, the projected spending is likely to be reduced to £403,000 as a result of the 1995 PES exercise which is not yet complete. The savings identified, as mentioned in "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", section 4.41 are primarily in respect of the elimination of costs for the rental and maintenance of food stores following the programme of disposal of the food stockpile, in line with United Kingdom policy, and the disposal elements of the former air attack warning system.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseekers Bill

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated numbers of employees in respect of whom employers will qualify for national insurance contribution rebates under clause 23 of the Jobseekers Bill in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98; what is the estimated resulting reduction in the number of unemployed people receiving a jobseeker's allowance; and what are the estimated resulting reductions in contribution revenue and benefit expenditure. [15135]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is estimated that in 1996–97 employers will qualify for rebates under clause 23 of the Jobseekers Bill in respect of some 120,000 employees. It is expected that employers will reclaim some £45 million from their national insurance payments. The figures for 1997–98 are expected to be broadly the same.

It is not possible to estimate the likely effects of the measures at this stage, but unemployment might be cut ultimately by up to 100,000 by all the work incentive measures, including the national insurance contribution rebate, announced by the Chancellor in the November 1994 Budget.

Private Pensions

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total amount of funds in private pension provision in the United Kingdom; and what is the equivalent figure for the two next largest European Union countries. [15330]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In 1992, the total amount of funds in private pension provision in the United Kingdom was around £550 billion. This is more than three times the amount in either of the two European Union countries with the next highest level of pension funds—£160 billion for Germany and £140 billion for the Netherlands.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefit entitlement applies pending the outcome of the appeal when a recipient of incapacity benefit or severe disablement allowance who is found to be capable of work under the all-work test lodges an appeal against the decision and declines to register as unemployed. [16139]

Mr. Hague: Incapacity benefit and severe disablement allowance cease to be payable when a recipient is found to be capable of work under the all-work test. A claimant who has lodged an appeal and has not registered as unemployed may qualify for income support. Where a claimant would normally be entitled to income support only if he were available for work, and he has declined to register as unemployed pending his appeal, income support will be reduced by an amount equal to 20 per cent. of the single person's personal allowance. This reduction will not be made if the claimant was in receipt of invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance on 12 April 1995, and the appeal is against a decision based on the first application of the all-work test to him.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if recipients of invalidity benefit, incapacity benefit or severe disablement allowance may take up part-time or full-time education or training courses without prejudice to their benefit entitlement; and if the taking up of such a place affects the assessment of their capacity for work. [16138]

Mr. Hague: Days on which a person attends a Government-funded course in respect of which he is paid a training allowance are not treated as days of incapacity for work, and benefit would not be payable. People getting invalidity benefit, sever disablement allowance or, from 13 April, incapacity benefit before starting the course will get a training allowance based on the rate of benefit they were receiving, plus £10.

Attendance on a course of education, either part-time or full-time, or a non-Government funded course, will not generally affect payment of benefit unless the nature of the course raises doubts about a person's continued incapacity for work.

Young people aged between 16 and 19 cannot get severe disablement allowance if they are in full-time education which would be suitable for young people of the same age who are not disabled.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many hours of study people in receipt of invalid care allowance will be allowed to undertake without jeopardising benefit entitlement when the jobseeker's allowance is introduced. [16144]

Mr. Hague: Those in receipt of invalid care allowance will be allowed to undertake a part-time course at a higher education establishment or up to 16 guided learning hours of study at a college of further education without jeopardising entitlement to jobseeker's allowance. We have no plans at present to change the invalid care allowance rules, which allow 21 hours study a week. As now, full-time students will be excluded from benefit.

EMPLOYMENT

Pay Rates

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the number of employees in employment in every wages council industry whose hourly pay rate was the wages council hourly rate for all quarters from spring 1992 to summer 1993, (b) the number of employees in employment in every former wages council industry whose hourly pay rate was the wages council hourly rate for all quarters from autumn 1993 to the last quarter, in each case expressing the data by individual wages council industry and using micro data from the quarterly labour force survey; [14228]

(2) if he will list the hourly wage rate for all employees in employment in every former wages council sector whose hourly wage rate was the wages council rate prior to the abolition of the wages councils, expressing the data by individual wages council sector, for all quarters beginning autumn 1993 up to the latest quarter, and using micro-data from the quarterly labour force survey. [14229]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 16 March 1995]: The labour force survey did not ask questions about earnings until winter 1992–93. The information from LFS that could be obtained without incurring disproportionate costs is in the following table:

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in each English region and for Wales and Scotland in (a) full-time work and (b) part-time work earn (i) less than £1.50 an hour, (ii) between £1.50 and £2 an hour, (iii) between £2 and £2.50 an hour, (iv) between £2.50 and £3 an hour, (v) between £3 and £3.50 an hour and (vi) between £3.50 and £4 an hour. Unemployment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of using narrow based rates in the regional unemployment statistics. [14919]

Mr. Oppenheim: The wide-based rate is a sensible way to expressing the claimant unemployment rate since its denominator has a more complete coverage of the workforce and it is the only rate which is quoted in the labour market statistics national press notice. Narrow-based rates are published in the Employment Gazette and on NOMIS, the Department's on-line database. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to whom training and enterprise councils are financially accountable. [15787]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are independent companies, mostly limited by guarantee, and are run by a board of directors who are also their members. The board has ultimate responsibility for all its TEC's financial obligations.

As with other independent private companies, these obligations arise from a TEC's contractual relations with other parties.

In the event of a TEC being unable to meet its financial obligations, the Companies Acts and Insolvency Act make provision for relevant affected parties to seek redress. These parties can request the courts and/or the Department of Trade and Industry to appoint an administrator, receiver or liquidator, with a view to controlling, disposing and investigating the company's affairs.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in awarding TECs three-year licences; and how many have been granted such licenses. [16141]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils have made significant progress in meeting the demanding criteria required to be awarded three-year licences. Twenty-one TECs have already obtained licences to operate from 27 March this year. The other 53 English TECs have until 1997 to meet the criteria.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what significant changes are being made to (a) the TEC operating agreement for 1995–96 and (b) the TEC quality assurance supplier management requirements; and if he will place copies of these in the Library. [16140]

Mr. Paice: The training and enterprise council operating agreement for 1995–96 has been significantly redrafted to:

incorporate the requirements of TEC licensing; include new programmes announced in the competitiveness White Paper; include the services funded by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade; and improve the clarity of the Government's contract with TECs.

There have been no changes to the TEC quality assurance supplier management requirements. Copies of all relevant documents have already been placed in the Library.

WALES

General Practitioners

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have been removed from doctors' lists in each of the last three years. [14736]

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the family health services authorities concerning the adequacy of supply of the doctors entering general practice; if he will list which authorities have made representations regarding shortage of latent supply; and if he will make a statement. [16191]

Mr. Redwood: I have held no specific consultations with chairmen of FHSAs nor received any representations. Over the past three years there have been approximately 1,400 new entrants to general practice per year in England and Wales. This has been sufficient to ensure a continuing increase in overall numbers of GPs.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of Sate for Wales how many planning appeals have been decided by his Department in each of the last five years; and how many have been successful. [14871]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision of statistical information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. C. Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. Shepley to Mr. Alan Williams, dated 21 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Wales has asked me to reply to your question about the number of planning appeals that have been dealt with in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many have succeeded.

The information requested is set out in the table:

Planning Appeals: Wales

Year	Number decided	Number allowed
1989–90	1,431	429
1990–91	1,442	488
1991–92	1,208	453
1992–93	1,051	350
1993–94	955	334
1994–95[1]	647	210

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Cynog Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if environmental appraisal will be required for project funding bids for ERDF moneys in all circumstances; [14826]

(2) at what stage in the bidding process for project funding for ERDF moneys environmental appraisals will be assessed; [14825]

(3) if he will establish a specialist advisory group to undertake critical evaluation of environmental appraisals relevant to project funding bids for ERDF moneys; [14827]

(4) when he will issue guidance notes on the significance attached to environmental appraisals in project funding bids for ERDF money. [14828]

Mr. Redwood: A statement in respect of the environmental impact of development proposals is required for all ERDF applications; in addition, a full environmental impact assessment is required for all projects with costs above 15 million ecu.

These statements and assessments are taken into account during the process of project appraisal, and the environmental contribution of a project is one of the key criteria used in selecting projects for ERDF assistance. Given the considerable experience in environmental matters available to assist the secretariat and the wider partnership in appraising projects, it is not considered necessary to establish a specialist advisory group in this field. A comprehensive guidance note intended to assist ERDF applicants has recently been issued to the rural Wales and industrial south Wales partnerships; it includes guidance on environmental appraisals.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Welsh health authorities and trusts concerning the availability of adequate supplies of junior doctors for hospital appointments, with particular regard to the staffing of accident and emergency departments; and if he will make a statement. [16189]

Mr. Redwood: My officials are undertaking extensive discussions with Welsh health authorities and trusts concerning the present problems of attracting adequate junior staff to accident and emergency departments with a view to establishing a co-ordinated strategy for dealing with any future shortages.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each hospital or hospital group unit which have either gained or lost accreditation for the training of junior doctors in each of the last three academic years, including parts of years, up to the present. [16194]

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list which health authorities, family health services authorities and hospital trusts have undertaken overseas recruitment drives during the past 12 months to match supply with the demand for junior doctors and new entrants into general practice; and what information he has received concerning the countries from which overseas doctors have been recruited. [16192]

Mr. Redwood: As part of their general recruitment policy, a number of health authorities and hospital trusts have employed doctors from overseas, but precise details are not available centrally.

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health authorities and trusts where there have been occasions of enforced closure at a hospital casualty unit for significant periods during the past two years; and if he will list each such occasion, the length of time for each such closure and the principal reason given for the closure. [16190]

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally, but can be obtained from health authorities.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will conduct an all-Wales review of casualty, accident and emergency and trauma units, in terms of demand, distribution and staffing requirements. [16195]

Mr. Redwood: My Department is currently undertaking such a review, and advice to the NHS in Wales will be available later this year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from the Cardiff community health council, the South Glamorgan health authority and the university hospital of Wales—Cardiff Royal Infirmary NHS trust-designate concerning the procedure to be followed pursuant to the vote by the Cardiff community health council against the transfer of accident and emergency services to the university hospital of Wales site at the Heath, Cardiff; and if he will list each step of the statutory procedure. [16196]

Mr. Redwood: I have not received any representations on this issue. Guidance on the procedures to be followed in the event of a community health council objecting to a health authority proposal for a major service change is set out in "Substantial changes in the use of health buildings: consultation procedures", which was published by my Department in June 1991. I will place a copy of the guidance in the Library of the House.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what criteria three-year operators' licences are being awarded to training and enterprise councils in Wales; and how many have been awarded. [16143]

Mr. Richards: Arrangements for training and enterprise councils to apply for three-year operating licences have not been introduced in Wales.

Community Services

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached a decision on the future of the voluntary youth services, village halls and community centres programme; and if he will make a statement. [16861]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Further to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 20 January 1995, Official Report, column 716 the consultation period on my proposal has ended. I received eight responses.

I have concluded that the programme should be wound up and the finance transferred to local authorities with effect from 31 March 1997. This is in line with our policy that decisions on the funding of local facilities should, wherever possible and appropriate, be taken by local authorities. After that date, assistance to local youth, voluntary and community groups to repair existing facilities and to construct new premises will not normally be funded under these regulations.

This decision does not affect projects which have already been approved under the programme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Social Development Summit

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement following the completion of the world summit for social development on the issues raised at the summit. [15979]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 20 March 1995, Official Report, column 15.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Marine Pollution

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department carries out of the endocrine effects of pollutants, or industrially discharged chemicals, on marine mammals, shellfish or fish.

Mr. Jack: Industrial discharge of chemicals to seas and rivers may only take place in accordance with consents or authorisations issued by the National Rivers Authority and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The Ministry carries out general pollution monitoring in the marine environment and has undertaken some research on levels of alkylphenolethoxylates and alkylphenols in river and estuarine waters. This research, funded by DOE, was to identify effects on caged male fish in rivers close to discharge points from sewage treatment works. Oestrogenic responses were observed close to discharge points but disappeared rapidly with distance downstream. Work is being carried out by the NRA to determine possible causes of the observed effects in fish. No work has been carried out on marine mammals. However, a further MAFF-funded programme of investigation on marine fish species is currently under consideration.

Live Exports

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 329, what information he has on the number of calves exported from Coventry airport in each of the last two years and the number of times flights have been delayed; and how often during that period officials have used their powers to ensure calves do not go for longer than 15 hours from the start of their journey without being fed and rested. [15166]

Mrs. Browning: A total of 20,213 calves were exported from Coventry airport in 1994. The number of calves exported by this route in the current year so far, to 20 March, is 6,873.

Delays long enough to compromise the 15-hour journey time on flights from Coventry airport occurred on 7 and 8 December because of bad weather—one flight on each date—and on 3 February, when the activities of protesters affected three flights. On each of these occasions calves that had arrived at the airport had to be returned to their premises of origin. In one instance on 3 February, the calves which were delayed at the airport would have exceeded the 15-hour statutory period in returning to their premises of origin. The calves were therefore returned under a notice requiring their feeding immediately on arrival at the home premises. The other journeys of calves returning to their premises of origin could be completed before expiry of the 15 hours, and so notices did not need to be served by officials.

Farming Incomes

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate in real terms the change in farming incomes in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; and by how much he estimates farming incomes will change in 1995. [15791]

Mr. Jack: Total income from farming rose in real terms by 35.8 per cent. in 1993 and by 4.4 per cent. in 1994.

Estimates of future changes in income are not made.

HEALTH

Occupational Therapy

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of referrals to social services is for occupational therapy; and what percentage of occupational therapists' posts were unfilled in each of the last five years. [15361]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Surgery Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to the NHS of (a) a hip replacement, (b) coronary artery bypass, (c) a hysterectomy, (d) a tonsillectomy, (e) a cataract extraction, (f) a kidney transplant, (g) a hernia repair and (h) correction of glue ear. [15831]

Mr. Sackville: The costing systems in the national health service are currently under review to enable the methodologies used to be standardised in all hospitals.

Cancer

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the length of survival after diagnosis of breast cancer in (a) the South Birmingham district health authority area and (b) the west midlands; what is the comparative figure in respect of the Nottingham prognostic index; what was the number of new cases diagnosed in each of the last five years in (i) South Birmingham and (ii) the west midlands; and what was the number of deaths in each of the last five years for each health authority weighted to take population into account. [15823]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Stoten, chairman of South Birmingham health authority, and Mr. Bryan Baker, chairman of West Midlands regional health authority, for details.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department monitors the rate of reproductive cancers, with particular reference to testicular cancer, on a continual basis; and if she will make the most recent statistics available. [15956]

Mr. Sackville: Data on the number of new cases of cancer registered each year with the 11 cancer registries in England have been published annually by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on behalf of the Department in "Cancer statistics—registration"—series MB1—reports since 1971. Prior to 1971, these data were published in the Registrar General's "Statistical Review of England and Wales, Supplements on Cancer".

In 1989—the latest available figures—there were 4,758 new cases of malignant neoplasm of the ovary and other uterine adnexa—ICD 183—registered in England, compared with 1,178 new cases of malignant neoplasm of the testis—ICD 186.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision has been made to accommodate expansion of renal services within the new home-based care services. [15663]

Mr. Malone: The changes being made in the way in which continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis is funded affects only those patients whose treatment is currently funded by general practitioners writing a prescription. This is about half all CAPD patients. From 1 April 1995 all patients will receive their treatment as part of contracts between health authorities and renal units. As far as allowing for expansion is concerned, as with other hospital services, it is for purchasers to assess need in their area and allocate resources based on local priorities.

Mr. Soley: To aks the Secretary of State for Health if her Department has fully informed general practitioners about the revised arrangements for the provision of home-based continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis. [15656]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 23 March Official Report, columns 351-53.

South Birmingham Mental Health NHS Trust

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what criteria were used in the selection of the new chair of South Birmingham Mental Health Trust; and which organisations were consulted about the selection; [16169]

(2) what was the cause of the delay in appointing a new chair of the South Birmingham Mental Health Trust; and if she will make a statement; [16168]

(3) which body recommended the appointment of the new chair of South Birmingham Mental Health Trust. [16170]

Mr. Malone: Following a process of identification and formal assessment, a choice of suitable candidates for the chairmanship of the South Birmingham Mental Health National Health Service Trust was submitted to Ministers by West Midlands regional health authority. The RHA also undertook consultation with local Members of Parliament. Mrs. Anne Hingley was appointed as chairman of the South Birmingham Mental Health NHS Trust on 1 March 1995 following her previous service as chairman of the Wolverly NHS Trust.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital consultants who have let the NHS in each year since 1979 to set up their own independent small business are still providing health care, but outside the NHS. [16065]

Mr. Malone: The activities of consultants who leave the national health service are a private matter for the individuals concerned.

Income from Leased Assets

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total annual income from NHS assets and services which are leased or contracted out to the private sector. [16187]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Weighted Capitation, North West

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent table 6 of her latest departmental annual report understates the amount of money the north-west region of the national health service should receive under the Government's new weighted capitation formula. [15865]

Mr. Sackville: For 1995–96, the allocation for North West regional health authority if based fully on weighted capitation using the modified national formula, would be £3,217,091,000. The figure of £2,217.1 million for North West regional health authority in table 6, column 2 of the departmental report 1995 is incorrect.

Copies of the departmental report entitled "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1995–96 to 1997–98", Cm 2812, which are available in the Library, will be amended accordingly. I am grateful to the hon. Member for bringing this to my attention.

Inquiries

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the internal or public inquiries begun since April 1991 after NHS service provision failure and conducted by regional health authorities, health authorities, her Department or an independent assessor; what was the reason for each inquiry; and what was the cost of each and in total. [16165]

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

False Memory Syndrome

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what clinical evidence her Department has evaluated which supports the existence of false memory syndrome. [14156]

Mr. Bowis: None, but we are currently considering a report by the British Psychological Society.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about false memory syndrome in the last three years; and if she will make a statement. [14157]

Mr. Bowis: We have received a small number of representations from members of the public.

[15960]

Mr. Sackville: Data for 1992 will be published in table 13 of "Abortion Statistics 1993", series AB, No. 19 on 30 March 1995, copies of which will be placed in the Library. Data for 1993 are not yet available.

TREASURY

Council of Ministers

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the most recent

Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European union. [15854]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the United Kingdom at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Union in Brussels on 20 March.

The Council agreed to recommend granting discharge to the Commission for the 1993 Community budget after a discussion on the Court of Auditors' report and in the light of a progress report from the new Commission on proposed improvements in financial management.

The Council adopted draft conclusions on a proposed regulation on the protection of the Community's financial interests and agreed that rapid progress needed to be made on the matter.

The Council reached political agreement on the draft second VAT simplification directive, agreed on a common position on the trans-European networks financial regulations, and adopted conclusions on the Commission report on the implementation of the money laundering directive, 91/308/EC.

The Council agreed on criteria for future lending to third countries, gave agreement in principle to a Commission proposal for a guarantee on the Community budget for EIB lending to South Africa of 300 mecu over two years, and agreed in principle to a loan to Belarus.

The Council asked the Commission to produce a report on the progress being made by the CEEs on preparation for integration into the internal market in time for discussion prior to the joint meeting between ECOFIN Ministers and associated central and eastern European Finance Ministers scheduled for 22 May.

The Commission presented a communication on the follow-up to the Essen conclusions on employment. The Council decided to discuss the issue further at the informal ECOFIN in early April.

There was unanimous agreement to the TENs financial regulation. No other formal votes were taken.

DEFENCE

Northern Ireland

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the tasking of the two battalions being withdrawn from Northern Ireland. [15356]

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland announced on 14 March 1995 that 5 Regiment Royal Artillery would be relocated from Drumadd barracks, Armagh, to Catterick. Their role remains the provision of support to the Royal Ulster Constabulary when required, and they will continue to train in this role and to be prepared to move back to the Province at short notice. This relocation has been made possible because of the reduced level of day-to-day support now required by the Royal Ulster Constabulary, and will allow the regiment to rejoin their families and to maintain their artillery skills without detriment to their continuing Northern Ireland role.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tornado aircraft have crashed while on exercise over (a) the land area of the United Kingdom and (b) the sea. [15329]

Mr. Soames: Since the aircraft entered service in 1981, 17 Tornado aircraft have crashed over the land area of the United Kingdom and 10 have crashed at sea in UK waters while engaged in training sorties.

(2) how many (a) male and (b) female service personnel have been detained in the military corrective training centre in Colchester in each of the last 10 years. [16073]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

[1] Figures for 1994 are not yet complete.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the proposals currently under consideration by his Department for the contractorisation of the military corrective training centre in Colchester. [16071]

Mr. Soames: A feasibility study into all aspects of the military corrective training centre functions has been completed and we are considering the recommendations. It would not be appropriate to comment further at this stage.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent by his Department on management consultancy fees in relation to the preparation and development of proposals for the contractorisation of the military corrective training centre in Colchester. [16072]

Mr. Soames: Approximately £63,000.

Long Marston Army Camp

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent construction and repair work has been done to Long Marston army camp; and what was the cost. [16076]

Mr. Soames: Since 1 April last year, the construction of a tactical fuel handling facility has been completed and work has commenced on repairs to the water ring main system. Property management work, including repairs to boundary roads, concrete hardstandings and underground cabling has also been undertaken. The total cost of this work has been some £1.2 million.

Nerve Agents

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what stocks of nerve agents his Department possesses; and if he will make a statement. [16080]

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 24 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what stocks of nerve agents his Department possesses and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of materials which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor.

3. Consequently, small quantities of nerve agent are held at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment in order to enable us to carry out our work to ensure that the protective measures for the UK Armed Forces are effective. It would not be in the national interest to disclose the precise quantities held; however, the UK holdings of nerve agents are within the aggregate amount of Schedule 1 chemical that will be permitted to be held for protective purposes under the terms of the Chemical Weapons Convention.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department is in possession of the nerve agent sarin; and if he will make a statement; [16079]

(2) if his Department has undertaken research into the effects of the nerve agent sarin. [16081]

Mr. Soames: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 24 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if his Department has undertaken research into the effects of the nerve agent Sarin, if his Department is in possession of the nerve agent Sarin; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer has Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work, the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Research on the nerve agent Sarin (GB) at CBDE Porton Down, has addressed all aspects concerned with the provision of effective protective measures against the threat that Sarin might be used by an aggressor against the UK Armed Forces. This has included hazard assessment, detection and identification, physical protection, contamination monitoring and management and the use of prophylactic and therapeutic medical countermeasures.

4. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of materials such as Sarin which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor. However, the quantities held are within the aggregate amounts of Schedule 1 chemicals permitted to be held for protective purposes under the Chemical Weapons Convention.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the potential effectiveness of the chemical weapons convention in restricting the proliferation of chemical weapons to (a) non-signatory states and (b) terrorist organisations; and if he will make a statement. [16082]

Mr. Soames: Once fully implemented, the chemical weapons convention will make a significant contribution to international security. The convention includes extensive provisions to control trade in certain key chemicals to non-state parties. It also requires each state party to the convention to pass national legislation making it a criminal offence for persons under its jurisdiction, to undertake the development, production, acquisition, transfer or use of chemical weapons.

Apprentice Training

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals for the provision of army apprenticeship training at Princess Marina college, Arborfield, are currently being considered by his Department; and if he will make a statement; [16068]

(2) what is his assessment of the consequences of proposals for the provision of army apprenticeship training at Princess Marina college, Arborfield, with regard to (a) the duration of training, (b) the staff to student ratio, (c) eligibility for Business and Technology Education Council national and City and Guilds qualifications and (d) extra-curricular activities. [16069]

Mr. Soames: My Department is considering proposals relating to the future of army apprentice training. Final decisions will, however, be made only after consultation.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of reference for the inspectorate general of doctrine and training study into technician and craftsmen training; and if he will make a statement. [16070]

Mr. Soames: The terms of reference are being considered at present for a study of the current system of Army apprentice recruitment and training. The aim of this would be to determine the most efficient, cost-effective and affordable means of achieving the Army's continuing requirement for technically training recruits.

Trigat Programme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent by his Department on the development of the Trigat programme. [16075]

Mr. Freeman: The total amount spent by the Ministry of Defence to 28 February 1995 on the combined Trigat development programmes is £259 million at 1994–95 prices. Of this, £185 million has been spent on the long-range version and £74 million on the medium-range version.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 242, if he will name the local authorities which own the zoos listed. [15169]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The zoos are owned by the following authorities:

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland from what date (a) the chairmen of the new water authorities in Scotland will be paid and (b) the offices for the new water authorities in Scotland will be available; and if he will make a statement. [15859]

Mr. Kynoch: The chairmen will be paid from the date of establishment of the new water authorities. In the meantime, they are being retained on a consultancy basis by the Scottish Office.

Temporary accommodation will be available to the new authorities within the Scottish Office in Edinburgh. It will be for the authorities, once established, to decide on their permanent locations and also on what use to make of local authority premises transferred to them on 1 April 1996.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money will be made available for expenses, incurred on water authority business, to be paid to members of the new Scottish water authorities in its first year of operation; and how much he estimates will actually be paid out. [15990]

Mr. Kynoch: Provision for the three new water authorities in Scotland in 1995–96 is shown in their respective grant in aid tables at chapter 4 of the Scottish Office departmental report, Cm 2814. No specific provision has been made for members' expenses, but the following amounts have been allocated for the salaries and expenses of the members and staff of the authorities.

Authority	£
North of Scotland Water Authority	800,000
East of Scotland Water Authority	800,000
West of Scotland Water Authority	900,000

No estimate has been made of the actual expenses likely to be paid to members.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what possible performance bonuses will be made available to the chief executives of each of the new water authorities in Scotland in the first year of operation. [15901]

Mr. Kynoch: The terms of chief executive appointments have not been finalised. It is unlikely that the maximum bonus attainable in the first year will exceed 10 per cent. of basic salary.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members he will appoint to (a) the North of Scotland water authority, (b) the East of Scotland water authority and (c) the West of Scotland water authority. [15902]

Mr. Kynoch: Schedule 7 to the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 provides that each authority shall comprise between eight and 12 members, including the chairman and chief executive.

Water and Sewerage Committees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many councillors, by region and island authority, serve on each of the water and sewerage committees in Scotland's councils. [13904]

Mr. Kynoch: This information is not held centrally.

Local Government Reforms

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to allow the shadow unitary authorities a say in the duration and value of any contracts awarded after 6 April by regional and district councils in Scotland. [15857]

Mr. Kynoch: Section 55 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 requires existing authorities from a date or dates to be specified by my right hon. Friend not to dispose of land for a consideration in excess of £250,000 or to enter into certain contracts without the consent of the relevant successor authority. Factors which will be taken into account by my right hon. Friend in determining the appropriate date or dates will be the need to ensure continuity of existing services, the legitimate interest of shadow authorities in matters which will have a possible bearing on future services, and the ability of the shadow authorities to respond expeditiously to issues described in section 55 on which they might be consulted.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what criteria three-year operators' licences are being awarded to LECs; and how many such licences have been granted. [16142]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1995]: None.

Health Care International

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he received the National Audit Office's report on its investigation into the public funding arrangements for Health Care International at Clydebank; if he will arrange for its publication; and if he will make a statement. [14704]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 March 1995]: I understand that the Comptroller and Auditor General, head of the National Audit Office, has not yet finalised his report on this subject. My Department and others will be consulted about the report, and I understand that the accounting officers involved have been invited to give evidence to the Public Accounts Committee at a hearing scheduled for 3 May 1995. Any publication will be a matter for the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances patients can be de-registered by their dentist; what procedure governs this process; and for what reasons a patient would cease to be registered with a dentist. [15530]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 March 1995]: General dental practitioners are independent contractors who are free to choose whether to provide NHS treatment to individual patients. Dentists may decide to de-register patients for a variety of reasons, including debts owed by the patient, when the dentist leaves the practice, or when a dentist chooses to stop offering NHS treatment. Regulations lay down that a dentist who wishes to end a patient's registration prematurely without the patient's agreement must give three months' written notice and complete any outstanding treatment before the patient may be de-registered. A dentist may end a registration at less than three months' notice only with the agreement of the health board. A patient's registration lapses automatically if they do not visit their dentist within a set period of the previous visit—two years for adults and between one and two years for children.

Prisoners

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons were detained in (a) Her Majesty's prison, Greenock, (b) Cornton Vale prison and (c) other prisons in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 24 March 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question relating to the number of persons detained in HM Prison, Greenock, HM Prison Cornton Vale and other prisons in each of the past ten years.

Information on the total number of persons received to each of the establishments is not available over this period because information on first receptions (those people with no existing custodial sentence) was collected only from 1991. In addition, those people received on remand and as sentenced prisoners cannot be added together to produce a total number of "persons detained" because of the considerable overlap between these two categories. The table below therefore gives the average daily prison population.

Average daily prison population 1984–1993

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	[2]1994
Cornton Vale	172	189	183	168	144	133	138	155	167	173
Greenock[1]	–	147	178	167	158	167	189	218	246	239
Other prisons	5,101	5,252	5,085	4,894	4,684	4,424	4,512	4,884	5,224	5,173
Total	5,273	5,588	5,446	5,229	4,986	4,724	4,839	5,257	5,637	5,585

[1] Greenock was a female establishment until 1975. From 1976 it was not in use until March 1986 when it reopened as a male establishment.

[2] Provisional.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for reducing suicides and attempted suicides amongst prisoners and those held on remand in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 24 March 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about reducing suicides and attempted suicides by prisoners.

The Scottish Prison Service has commissioned Dr. Kevin Power and Dr. Joseph McIlroy of the Department of Psychology at the University of Stirling to undertake a comprehensive evaluation (currently in progress) of the operation of the SPS suicide prevention strategy. In addition, I have asked Professor John Gunn, Professor of Forensic Psychiatry at the Institute of Psychiatry in London, to consider the appropriateness of the current strategy against developments in the care of 'at risk' people in other jurisdictions. Professor Gunn is an internationally renowned figure in the care of the mentally disturbed offender in prison.

A new design of supervision cell was introduced at HMP Aberdeen last year and is being progressively introduced throughout the prison estate. Additionally, new forms of clothing and bedding for 'at risk' prisoners are in use and a rolling programme of training in dealing with such prisoners is underway for prison nursing staff.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study is made of the findings of fatal accident inquiries into self-inflicted deaths of prisoners and those held on remand in prisons; and if he will make a statement. [15667]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stewart to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 24 March 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked the Chief Executive of the Scottish Prison Service to reply to your Question about what study is made of the findings of fatal accident inquiries into self-inflicted deaths of prisoners and those held on remand in prisons. I am replying in his absence.

The Executive Steering Group, comprising senior prison management and representatives of psychiatric and psychological services, has responsibility for continuing oversight of the implementation of the Scottish Prison Service suicide prevention strategy. The Group considers all fatal accident findings on suicides in prisons with a view to determining whether any changes to the strategy are required and how best they may be implemented within operational constraints.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Disability Discrimination Bill

Mr. Berry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) which Minister in his Department has responsibility for the Disability Discrimination Bill in respect of the provision of goods and services; [16366]

(2) what discussions he or his ministerial colleagues have held with Ministers in other Departments in respect of the Disability Discrimination Bill; [16364]

(3) what is his Department's policy in respect of the Disability Discrimination Bill; [16365]

(4) what consideration his Department has given to the effects of specific clauses of the Disability Discrimination Bill in respect of (a) small businesses, (b) medium-size businesses and (c) large businesses; [16363]

(5) if officials in his Department have at any point been involved in discussions concerning any aspect of the Disability Discrimination Bill; [16362]

(6) what future role he expects his Department to play in respect of the Disability Discrimination Bill; [16361]

(7) what discussions his Department has held with non-Government bodies in respect of the Disability Discrimination Bill; [16360]

(8) what role his Department played in the development of the cost compliance assessment for the Disability Discrimination Bill; [16359]

(9) what assessment his Department has made of the effects of the Disability Discrimination Bill on industry; [16358]

(10) what discussions his officials have held with other Departments in respect of the Disability Discrimination Bill. [16357]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. and noble Friend Earl Ferrers has responsibility for all aspects of consumer affairs. As well as my responsibility for corporate affairs, I have the responsibility, as deregulation Minister, for leading, under the authority of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, the Government's deregulation initiative, ensuring, across all Departments, that any proposals that may impose burdens on business are properly appraised. DTI Ministers and officials play and continue to play a full part in collective and bilateral discussion with their Government colleagues in developing the Government's policies in areas such as disability, consulting as necessary representative bodies, businesses and consumers on the affects such measures may have and their impact on business compliance costs.

The Government's assessment of the impact of the Disability Discrimination Bill on business is set out in the compliance cost assessment "Ending Discrimination against Disabled People", issued in January 1995 by the Department of Social Security, which has the policy lead in Government on disability issues. The role of the DTI deregulation unit in relation to CCAs is to monitor their quality, coverage of smaller firms, and ensure a consistent approach across Government. The unit provides guidance and acts as a source of advice to those requiring help with the preparation of CCAs.

Pembroke Power Station

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to hold a public inquiry into National Power's plans to burn orimulsion fuel in Pembroke; and if he will make a statement. [16631]

Mr. Page: National Power plc submitted an application on 5 January 1995 under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 for the President of the Board of Trade's consent to retrofit flue gas desulphurisation plant at the Pembroke power station in order to use emulsified hydrocarbons as the fuel.

Should a relevant planning authority object to the application, my right hon. Friend would be obliged to hold a public inquiry before reaching his decision on it.

If there is no objection from a relevant planning authority, my right hon. Friend may still call for a public inquiry to be held at his own discretion.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a list of the measures his Department has taken to encourage greater use of renewable energy following the Government's acceptance of the conclusions and recommendations of the United Nation conference on the environment and development. [15655]

Mr. Wallace: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department proposes to encourage greater use of renewable energy in pursuance of the Government's support for the declarations and undertakings made at the Rio climate summit in 1992. [15518]

Mr. Page: The Government are stimulating the development of new and renewable energy sources and industrial and market infrastructure through a market enablement strategy. The strategy was published as "Energy Paper 62" in March 1994.

The strategy's principal measure involves stimulating an initial market for electricity-producing technologies close to commercial competitiveness via renewables orders made under the non-fossil fuel obligation. Other measures are aimed at assessing and developing technology options, ensuring that the market is fully informed, removing inappropriate market barriers and encouraging internationally competitive industries to develop.

The first and the second renewables orders set an obligation of renewables-sourced electricity for approximately 600 MW. The Government announced a third renewables order, for 626.92 MW, in December 1994. They expect this to lead to a further 300 to 400 MW of new capacity.

The Government intend to work, through the NFFO, towards a figure of 1,500 MW of new renewable electricity generating capacity in the UK by the year 2000, thus contributing to the UK's international environmental commitment.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department is taking as a result of the declaration of Madrid "An Action Plan for Renewable Sources in Europe", 16 to 18 March 1994; and if his Department is taking part in the proposed EC discussions on renewable energy. [15966]

Mr. Page: A Department of Trade and Industry representative attended the conference on renewable energy in Madrid in March 1994 and my Department is monitoring developments with regard to the establishment of the EU's European Forum on Renewable Energies—EUFORES.

The Government are stimulating the development of new and renewable energy sources and industrial and market infrastructure through a market enablement strategy. The strategy was published as "Energy Paper 62" in March 1994.

The strategy's principal measure involves stimulating an initial market for electricity-producing technologies close to commercial competitiveness via renewables orders made under the non-fossil fuel obligation. Other measures are aimed at assessing and developing technology options, ensuring that the market is fully informed, removing inappropriate market barriers and encouraging internationally competitive industries to develop.

The first and the second renewables orders set an obligation of renewables-sourced electricity for approximately 600MW. The Government announced a third renewables order, for 626.92MW, in December 1994. They expect this to lead to a further 300 to 400MW of new capacity.

The Government intend to work, through the NFFO, towards a figure of 1,500MW of new renewable electricity generating capacity in the UK by the year 2000, thus contributing to the UK's international environmental commitment.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have been held with Turkey about increasing trade and the customs union with the EU; and what links have been made to human rights abuse in Turkey. [16682]

Mr. Ian Taylor: We have a continuing dialogue with our Turkish partners on a wide range of trade issues; there is no direct linkage between customs union and Turkey's record on human rights. However, the Turks are well aware of the importance that we and our EU partners attach to a raising of standards to western norms.

Business Links

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the funding of Business Links and the progress they have made. [15184]

Mr. Heseltine: Business Links have been designed to increase the effectiveness and improve the quality of local business support services by bringing together their delivery and avoiding overlap and duplication.

Each Business Link is a private sector company which receives part of its funding from my Department, part from local partner organisations, and part from charging for its services. My Department is providing £38.5 million in 1995–96 towards the start-up costs of Business Links and is committed to providing on-going funding after the three-year start-up phase to contribute towards the cost the services offered by Business Links. In 1995–96 our contribution towards services will amount to around £50 million.

The Business Link programme continues to make good progress with 75 Business Links now open and over 50 more due to open by the end of April. The programme is well on course to reach its target for a national network of 200 Business Links by the end of 1995.

Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the bids for VSEL by GEC and British Aerospace; and how soon after the receipt of that report he will be in a position to announce the Government's decision. [16160]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has allowed a single extension of time, to 12 April 1995, for the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to report on the bids for VSEL by GEC and British Aerospace. The Department aims to publish MMC merger reports, along with the decision of the President of the Board of Trade on any action which he considers necessary in the event of the MMC finding that a merger is against the public interest, within 20 working days of receipt.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment the Post Office has made of the impact of franchising of Crown post offices on the services offered to postal customers with particular reference to rural areas. [16308]

Mr. Page: The Post Office believe that the franchising of Crown post offices has a beneficial effect on the services offered to customers in rural areas. When a Crown post office is converted, it is located in the same general vicinity, if not in the same premises, and offers the same range of services. Additional facilities such as longer opening hours are often also provided. The lower costs to the Post Office of providing services through franchise offices assist in maintaining the network of rural post offices.

Companies (Complaints)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in how many cases in England in each year in the period 1984 until 1994 the official receiver has been unable to pursue an in-depth investigation into complaints against companies because of expenditure restrictions; and if he will make a statement. [15828]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not maintained centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Lindane

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what prohibitions exist for companies that wish to export products containing lindane, gamma HCH, or gamma BHC to (a) Switzerland, (b) Germany and (c) the United States of America; and if he will make a statement. [15513]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Products containing lindane, gamma HCH or gamma BHC require an export licence, under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, only if the exporter knows or suspects that the goods might be used for purposes connected with weapons of mass destruction. If an export licence is required, it will be required for any destination including Switzerland, Germany or the United States of America.

Parliamentary Space Committee

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussion his Department has had with the parliamentary space committee; and if he envisages further consultations in the run-up to the European Space Agency ministerial conference. [16686]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I held a meeting with the parliamentary space committee on 16 March, at which we had a fruitful discussion of a range of issues, including Earth observation activities, satellite-based telecommunications and broadcasting, and satellite navigation. At the meeting, I announced additional Government funding of £2.612 million for the European Space Agency GNSS satellite navigation programme, £1.5 million for the ESA ARTES4 telecommunications technology programme and £1 million to cover the cost of delay to the launch of ESA's ERS2 remote sensing satellite. I would be glad to hold further consultation with the committee in the run-up to the ESA ministerial conference.

Fireworks

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the effect of the revocation of the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1986/1323 on the supply of fireworks to children under 16 years. [15818]

Mr. Ian Taylor: After revocation of the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1986 it will remain illegal to supply fireworks to those aged under 16 as such supply would breach section 31 of the Explosives Act 1875, as amended by the Explosives (Age of Purchase) Act 1976. Breaches of this prohibition are triable by a magistrates court and currently may result in a fine of up to £5000. The 1986 regulations are being repealed as they reproduced the provisions of the 1875 Act as amended and also empowered the courts to impose a custodial sentence of up to six months for those convicted of the sale of fireworks to persons under 16. I understand the courts have neyer imposed a custodial sentence. Bearing in mind the scale of the fines which may now be imposed, the Government believe that it is no longer necessary to provide for a custodial sentence.

Post Office

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to give the Post Office the commercial freedom it seeks. [16379]

Mr. Eggar: The Post Office operates several businesses. We are actively engaged in widening the opportunities for Post Office Counters and are helping to automate its services.

We will announce any plans to change the present arrangements governing the remainder of the Post Office in due course.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15567]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: One of the principal aims of the Department is to work to reduce regulatory and administration burdens on business. Each Minister has to pursue this objective in the policy areas for which he or she is responsible. There is also a Minister with particular responsibility for promoting deregulation in the Department.

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15551]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Under the deregulation initiative, which is co-ordinated by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, over 1,000 regulations have been targeted by Departments for amendment or repeal to remove unnecessary burdens on business. Other prime targets are:

ensuring that new regulations, whether UK or EC, are introduced only if they are needed and have the minimum possible compliance costs; making enforcement procedures more business friendly—one aim is to see 100 local business partnerships established by March 1996; and promoting a deregulatory approach in the European Union.

National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much funding his Department is giving to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux in 1995–96; how much it would have been if the 1994–95 level had been fully increased to reflect the change in the cost of living; and what assessment he has made of the effect of this change in funding in real terms on the number of regional offices sustained by the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux. [14670]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Funding from my Department for the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux for 1995–96 will be £11,916,000. Core funding for 1994–95 was also £11,916,000. Based on the adjusted gross domestic product deflator given in the Treasury Red Book, annexe A to chapter 6, this figure would have increased to £12,297,312. It is for the association to decide how best to use the resources which are available to it, and it would not be appropriate for the Department to intervene in operational decisions such as the number of regional offices which are sustained by the association.

Argentina

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the value of (a) exports to and (b) imports from, the Argentine in each of the past five years. [16232]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information is published by the Central Statistical Office in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", available in the Library of the House.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Lord Present of the Council (1) if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department; [15569]

(2) what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15561]

Mr. Newton: The objectives in question are not applicable to the Privy Council Office, which does not itself generate regulations.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Mohd Ashfaq

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal has been granted to the Home Office in the case of Mr. Mohd Ashfaq, Ref: TH/1740/94;IMM/C2021. [L16629]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The application by the Home Office is currently being considered by the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at interdepartmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15620]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not currently employ any specialist advisers.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15621]

Mr. John M. Taylor: There have been no political advisers appointed to the Lord Chancellor's Department since May 1992.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Political and Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992; [15637]

(2) what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at interdepartmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15636]

The Attorney-General: There are and have been no such political or specialist advisers in any of the Departments for which I have been responsible since May 1992.

HEALTH

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of redundancy payments to national health service staff (a) in each of the regional health authorities, and (b) for the national health service as a whole for each of the last 10 years. [15366]

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library.

Private Practice

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimates her Department has made as to the cost to public funds of providing private health care within the NHS including the costs of capital investment and training of medical staff. [15767]

(2) if her Department will commission an independent inquiry to establish the full costs of providing private health care within the NHS; including the costs of capital investment and training of medical staff. [15766]

Mr. Sackville: Private practice in the national health service results in further funds being made available to improve services for all patients and reduces the burden on public funds. Private patients are charged at a commercial rate. The availability of private practice in the NHS increases choice for patients. An independent inquiry would divert resources unnecessarily from patient care.

Nurses

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of all (a) C grade, (b) D grade, (c) E grade, (d) F grade and (e) G grade nursing posts remained vacant as at 1 April on each of the last 10 years for each regional health authority. [15769]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Figures on nursing vacancies collected by the Office of Manpower and Economics are available in the annual report of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine. Copies of the review body's report are placed in the Library each year.

Dental Services

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct family health services to stop the practice of allowing dental contractors to take early retirement other than for genuine medical reasons. [16390]

Mr. Malone: Under the limited early retirement scheme agreed with the dental profession, decisions on which applicants to accept are taken centrally on the advice of a selection panel. Full account is taken of the need to maintain the accessibility of general dental services.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on the long-term effects on health of exposure to fluoride; [16336]

(2) if she will indicate the ways she has considered of delivering fluoride to its target population other than through the main water supplies; and if she will make a statement; [16335]

(3) what has been the incidence of caries in (a) fluoridated areas and (b) unfluoridated areas, for each year since 1990; and if she will make a statement. [16337]

Mr. Malone: Information, by year, about the incidence of caries compared between fluoridated and non-fluoridated areas is not readily available. However, epidemiological evidence in general continues to support the Government's position on the positive benefits of fluoridation. Studies which have been carried out contrasting comparable fluoridated and non-fluoridated areas have consistently shown that the reduction in dental decay is between one third to one half greater in the fluoridated than in the comparable non-fluoridated area.

The long-term health effects of fluoride have been a widely considered aspect of this issue over the 50 years since water fluoridation began. No significant long-term ill effects have ever been found to exist as a result of domestic water fluoridation at the optimum level of one part per million.

There may be a number of alternative ways of delivering fluoride to the target population, and we are considering what these are, but it is generally held that fluoridation of domestic water is the most efficient means of delivery, and offers the best cost benefit.

The Government remain convinced that fluoridation of drinking water is a safe, effective and cost-effective public health measure and will continue to support the introduction of such schemes, particularly where the dental health of the population is known to be poor. In 1994 the Government agreed to help with the capital funding of seven schemes in the north of England which would bring fluoridation to 1.7 million more people.

Road Accident Victims

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order the South Birmingham health trust to cease soliciting payments, under the Road Traffic Acts, from road accident victims. [16247]

Mr. Sackville: Health service hospitals are empowered to collect the emergency treatment fee under section 158 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. The fee must be covered by motor vehicle insurance policies and is payable by vehicle users, in respect of each person given immediate treatment or examination arising from a road traffic accident.

Overseas Health Care Companies

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department has received from health care firms from abroad seeking to expand into the United Kingdom health sector. [16889]

Mr. Sackville: Ministers and officials receive representations from health care firms from abroad on a regular basis. As such representations can take the form of visits, telephone calls or letters and can be made at ministerial or official level no figure on the number of representations is kept or can be estimated.

Lindane

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence or research is available from (a) within the United Kingdom, (b) the USA and (c) other countries in respect of any correlation between aplastic anaemia and bone marrow failure with the use of lindane, gamma HCH or gamma BHC; and if she will make a statement. [15497]

Mr. Sackville: In 1992 the Advisory Committee on Pesticides reviewed the substantial number of worldwide reports, published in the open literature as well as unpublished reports, on lindane exposure and aplastic anaemia. The ACP review focused particularly on cases of people in the United Kingdom who had been diagnosed as having aplastic anaemia and who had been exposed to lindane in pesticidal products. The committee concluded that the weight of evidence suggested that lindane does not cause aplastic anaemia in man. On the basis of the information available, the ACP recommended that no regulatory action on this aspect was justified.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of skin complaints being caused by lindane, gamma HCH or gamma BHC; and if she will make a statement. [15496]

Mr. Sackville: In the United Kingdom lindane is used mainly as an agricultural pesticide. Its only other use in the UK is in some products licensed under the Medicines Act 1986 for the treatment of scabies and crablice, and available only from pharmacies. There are no veterinary uses of lindane in the UK.

The London poisons unit undertook a review of suspected cases of lindane poisoning reported to the unit between 1969 and 1988. The results were submitted to the Advisory Committee on Pesticides for evaluation during its review of lindane in 1991–92. Data were available on 110 cases, in six of which skin irritation was reported. Details of this review were published in December 1992 in the document "Evaluation on Gamma HCH (Lindane 2," copies of which are available in the Library.

Dermatoses can be caused by an allergic reaction to any chemical, whether naturally occurring or manufactured, and some people may be especially sensitive to ingredients of pesticides or medicines. Apart from these very rare cases, no adverse effects should be expected in the short, medium or long term if the product is used in strict accordance with the recommendations on the label and accompanying literature, which give dose and safety precautions.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence is available from the World Health Organisation regarding the rates of breast cancer in countries where the use of lindane or gamma hexachlorocyclohexane is banned or restricted. [15502]

Mr. Sackville: Lindane is used in many countries. In developed countries, the use of pesticides is regulated by the conditions of approval, and is to that extent restricted. Conditions of approval vary from country to country. Since 1984 lindane, or gamma hexachlorocyclohexane, has been withdrawn from use as a pesticide in Indonesia, Kuwait, Morocco, New Zealand, St. Lucia and two European Union countries, Sweden and Finland.

There are several known risk factors involved in the development of breast cancer but no convincing evidence that exposure to lindane is one. Breast cancer rates alone, in countries in which lindane is banned, give no indication of whether or not there might be a causal relationship.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect of exposure to lindane gamma HCH or gamma BHC on pregnant women and their foetuses. [15493]

Mr. Sackville: The information on humans is very limited. Adverse effects have been reported in spray operators or workers involved in the manufacture of gamma HCH. These include an increased incidence of spontaneous abortions and stillbirths. However, in all cases exposure to other pesticides or chemicals involved in the manufacture of gamma HCH occurred, therefore it is not possible to conclude that these effects are related to exposure to gamma HCH.

The Advisory Committee on Pesticides has reviewed both published and unpublished data on the effects of lindane on human and animal reproduction and fertility. It did not conclude that, used under the terms of approval, there is a risk from lindane to pregnant women or their foetus.

Full details were given in the document "Evaluation of Gamma HCH (Lindane 2)", December 1992, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which EU countries lindane, gamma HCH and gamma BHC are banned or restricted; and if she will make a statement [15506]

Mr. Sackville: The use of lindane is restricted in the United Kingdom and all other European Union countries. Approval for the use of lindane as a pesticide has been withdrawn in Sweden and Finland.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has that lindane, gamma HCH or gamma BHC causes or contributes to CHARGE syndrome; and if she will make a statement. [15494]

Mr. Sackville: In 1994 the subcommittee on pesticides reviewed data from the CHARGE Association family support group, and cases of CHARGE syndrome linked with pesticide exposure which had been reported to the Health and Safety Executive. The SCP agreed that no conclusions could be drawn from the reports available, but that the situation be reviewed on a periodic basis.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which products designed to kill lice on children contain lindane, gamma HCH or gamma BHC; and if she will make a statement. [15495]

Mr. Sackville: Medicines Control Agency records show that quellada application is the only product currently licensed in the United Kingdom containing lindane—alternatively known as gamma HCH or gamma BHC—which is indicated to kill lice on children.

The Medicines Control Agency ensures that all medicines on the UK market meet acceptable standards of safety, quality and efficacy.

Organochlorines

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has that organochlorines may be a contributory factor in the cause of breast cancer; and if she will make a statement. [15510]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health's independent expert advisory committee on the carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment reviewed the available epidemiology data on breast cancer in women and levels of lindane in serum and breast fat tissue at its meeting on the 16 March 1995. The committee concluded that there was no clear evidence of an association between serum and fat levels of lindane and breast cancer at the present time, and recommended that the matter be kept under review.

Well Woman Centres

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each well woman centre and indicate which are currently part-funded by individual health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given to fundholding general practitioners regarding purchasing from well woman centres. [15754]

Mr. Malone: None.

It is for national health service purchasers, both fundholding general practitioners and health authorities, to decide whether, and to what extent, they purchase services from well woman centres. Not all services which are provided by well woman centres are included in the fundholding scheme.

"Handle with Care" Leaflet

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what age of child is dealt with in the "Handle with Care" leaflet, sponsored by her Department. [15752]

Mr. Bowis: Babies and toddlers.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 March, Official Report, columns 41–42, if the figures for clinical negligence include legal costs; and if she will itemise those costs. [15750]

Mr. Malone: All the figures include legal costs. The new method of estimating total costs of clinical negligence is not broken down between legal costs and damages paid.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which management consultants have been employed by her Department to assist in the assessment of applications for NHS units for trust status; how much each was paid; and how many assessments they undertook in each wave. [15846]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the replies the then Minister for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), gave him on 3 November 1993, Official Report, column 225, and on 12 July 1994, Official Report, column 528. The information for the fifth wave of national health service trusts is as shown.

Lead management consultants	Number of assessments	Cost £
BDO Consulting	17	15,139
KPMG Peat Marwick		52,139

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that her ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for her Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for her and (b) for each of the Ministers within her Department. [15564]

Mr. Sackville: The need to avoid unnecessary regulatory burdens on business and on others is identified as an objective in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's statement of aims, goals, priorities and key challenges for the Department of Health for 1994–95, and subsequent years, which was published on 18 April 1994 and placed in the Library. Each Minister has to pursue this objective in the policy areas for which he or she is responsible. There is also a Minister with particular responsibility for promoting deregulation in the Department.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets she has for withdrawing regulations within her Department. [15545]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs today.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at interdepartmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in her Department. [15624]

Mr. Sackville: Special advisers are members of the civil service, have the same conditions of service as civil servants and are subject to the same rules of conduct as other civil servants, with certain limited exceptions. They have facilities appropriate to their duties.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to her Department since May 1992. [15625]

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not appointed a special adviser since May 1992.

Children's Homes (Lay Assessors)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that appropriate police checks are undertaken in respect of lay assessors who have access to children's homes. [16043]

Mr. Bowis: Police checks are generally available for those who have substantial unsupervised access to children in children's homes. Lay assessors do not fall into this category. It is the responsibility of local authorities to satisfy themselves about the suitability of people they engage as lay assessors, for example by checking CVs and taking up references.

Hepatitis

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many died as a result of infection with the hepatitis C virus in the NHS for (a) 1992, (b) 1993, and (c) 1994. [16583]

Mr. Sackville: The current international classification of diseases, 9th revision, does not allow us separately to identify the hepatitis C virus.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people currently have the hepatitis C virus in the United Kingdom. [16585]

Mr. Sackville: There have been no large population seroprevalence studies in the United Kingdom which could give precise estimates of the numbers infected.

Small studies in transfusion centres at the time of introducing HCV testing estimated the prevalence in blood donors to be 0.06 per cent. This would be an underestimate of the numbers in the United Kingdom population as a whole because the group at most risk of infection, those who have injected drugs, are asked to self-defer from blood donation. There is evidence to suggest that perhaps between 50 and 80 per cent. of intravenous drug users have been infected with hepatitis C. Rates vary with geographical area.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with haemophilia died as a result of infection with the hepatitis C virus in the NHS in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994. [16630]

Mr. Sackville: We understand from the United Kingdom haemophilia directors that, of 119 haemophilia patients known to have died in 1992, 10 showed the cause of death as liver disease of which hepatitis C may have been the cause. In respect of the 1993 figures, I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 1 December 1994, column 830. I understand that figures for 1994 are not yet available.

Haemophilia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department carried out since 1989 on haemophilia; and if she will make a statement. [16582]

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not carried out any such research. The main agency that the Government support for biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current mortality rate for women with breast cancer in England, for each health authority. [16580]

Mr. Sackville: The latest available data on incidence to mortality ratios are published in table 15 of cancer statistics, registration, 1989, series MB1, No. 22, HMSO, 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women have died from breast cancer in the United Kingdom in each year since 1989. [16581]

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Number of women who have died from breast cancer—ICD[1] 174—in the United Kingdom, 1989–1992.

1989: 15,667
1990: 15,179
1991: 15,403
1992: 15,221

[1] International classification of diseases, 9th revision.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many men were diagnosed with breast cancer in the NHS for (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994 respectively; and if she will make a statement. [16579]

Mr. Sackville: The latest available data on male breast cancer registrations are published in table 2 of cancer statistics, registrations, 1989, series MB1 No. 22, HMSO, 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

Asthma

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of asthma, and asthma-related disorders for (a) 1992, (b) 1993, and (c) 1994. [16584]

Mr. Sackville: The net ingredient cost of national health service prescriptions for asthma medication was £305.2 million in 1992, £348.6 million in 1993 and £381 million in 1994. The net ingredient cost is the basic price of a drug before discounts and the addition of dispensing costs or fees. Information on the cost of other NHS services for asthma is not available for the years requested. In 1989–90, excluding community health services, they cost an estimated £72 million.

Wakefield Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role is played by the chair of the Yorkshire and Northern health region in the strategic planning of health care within the area covered by Wakefield health authority. [16350]

Mr. Sackville: District health authorities are directly accountable to regional health authorities. The regional health authority provides the strategic framework for regulating the relationship between purchasers and providers and ensures that local services are developed within the context of national guidelines. The authority also seeks to ensure that the most comprehensive and cost-effective balance of primary and secondary services is secured at a local level.

Strategic Decisions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms exist to resolve disagreements on strategic decisions at local level between purchasers and providers and community health councils. [16348]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities are expected to consult health care providers about local health strategies and to make every endeavour to resolve differences locally. Disagreement between health authorities and providers can be referred to the regional health authority for arbitration as set out in EL(91)11, "NHS Contracts: Guidance on Resolving Disputes." Health Authorities are required, under regulation 19 of the Community Health Council Regulations, as amended, to consult the community health council on proposals for substantial developments or variations in the provision of health services in the district. Copies of EL(91)11 are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the extent to which the strategic planning of health provision at local level may be affected by the decisions of private investors of capital. [16351]

Mr. Sackville: The strategic planning of health provision is undertaken by the national health service. It is not affected by the decisions of private investors of capital.

Chorionic Villus Sampling

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information she has on the link between chorionic villus sampling intrauterine tests and subsequent deformities in babies subjected to the test; [16341]

(2) if she will launch an investigation into the links between chorionic villus sampling and deformities in babies; [16343]

(3) what follow-up of mothers and babies who have been subjected to chorionic villus sampling tests her Department undertakes; [16342]

(4) how many cases of deformities in babies subjected to the chorionic villus sampling test her Department knows of. [16344]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 22 March, columns 207–208.

A further article in The Lancet in 1994[1] considered the risks associated with chorionic villus sampling undertaken between 56 and 72 days' gestation.

The follow-up of mothers and babies is a matter for local clinical decision. The continuing surveillance and monitoring of babies' health to detect any deviation from normal health is accepted as good clinical practice in the national health service. The recent report of the Advisory Group on Congential Limb Reduction Defects published in February 1995 drew attention to the need for a hypothesis-driven study of the putative causal link between chorionic villus sampling and limb reduction deformity. The Department is awaiting the results of a major study carried out in the United States before taking this forward. It seems most likely that this study will address many of these questions.

Newchurch and Company Database

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the NHS executive of setting up the private finance database run by Newchurch and Company. [16522]

Ms Sackville: The cost to the Department of Health national health service executive of setting up the private finance database run by Newchurch and Company and operating it to date has been £70,000 plus £12,250 value added tax.

Internal Market

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what objective assessment of the operation of the internal market in health in any particular locality is undertaken on her behalf. [16352]

Mr. Sackville: The main way in which the operation of the internal market is assessed is through the monitoring of the performance of trusts and district health authorities against targets and objectives which are set to ensure the national health service delivers good-quality, responsive services in an efficient manner.

These include: performance against the patients charter standards which have recently been expanded; position on waiting times; extent of efficiency gains measured through the efficiency index; and progress towards achievement of "The Health of the Nation" targets. These are available at a district level.

Waiting Times

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information she has on requests by general practices to hospitals to delay to come in—TCI—dates for non-urgent patients until the commencement of the new financial year for financial reasons; [16680]

(2) what guidelines she has given to general practices concerning the information to be supplied to patients, whose non-urgent TCI dates have been delayed as the request of their general practice until the commencement of the new financial year for exclusively financial reasons; and if she will make a statement. [16676]

Mr. Malone: Fundholding general practitioners, like other national health service purchasers of health care, are required to assess the needs of their population and establish contracts for services accordingly. All emergency cases will be seen immediately and urgent cases are placed on a common waiting list. For non-urgent cases, national or local patients charter standards apply. The patients charter makes it clear that health authorities and general practitioners should give detailed information to patients on local health services, including quality standards and maximum waiting times.

Pinderfields Hospital

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure that Pinderfields hospital, Wakefield, remains open as a district general hospital maintaining regional specialisms. [16349]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Greetham CBE, chairman of the authority, for details.

Local Health Provision

Mr. Hincliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors determine whether she would intervene in the proposals of an individual health authority with regard to future health provision at local level. [16347]

Mr. Malone: It is for health authorities to determine health provision for their area taking account of local needs. Normally, Ministers are involved only in cases where, following consultation by the health authority, plans to close or significantly change the use of health service facilities are contested by the community health council.

WALES

European Union Funding

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table giving the total amount of European Community money that has been awarded in grants for each financial year from 1986–87 to the present to (a) each local authority in Wales, (b) the Welsh Development Agency and (c) other organisations, giving the total annually of all such EC grants to Wales. [15346]

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 March 1995]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at interdepartmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15602]

Mr. Redwood: Special advisers are members of the civil service, have the same conditions of service as civil servants and are subject to the same rules of conduct as other civil servants, with certain limited exceptions. They have facilities appropriate to their duties.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15548]

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15577]

Mr. Redwood: One of the most important objectives which I have set for my Department is the encouragement of the growth, efficiency and competitiveness of Welsh industry and agriculture. The removal of unnecessary regulatory and administrative burdens, together with improved practice in enforcement and future legislation, is central to the achievement of this objective, which is naturally supported by my Welsh Office ministerial colleagues. Most regulations are United Kingdom or England and Wales regulations where the Welsh Office is not the lead department.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15603]

Mr. Redwood: The answer is:

Mr. Michael McManus

Mr. Hywel Williams

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which management consultants have been employed by his Department to assist in the assessment of applications for NHS units for trust status; how much each was paid; and how many assessments they undertook in each wave. [15845]

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 1 November 1993 by the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff North, (Mr. Jones), Official Report, column 51.

In addition, Secta Consulting Ltd. was appointed to assess five applications for NHS trust status from April 1995 at a cost of £17,625.

NHS Waiting Times

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to family health services authorities and fundholding general practices concerning information to be given to their non-urgent patients whose TCI—to come in—dates have been delayed until the commencement of the new financial year for exclusively financial reasons; and if he will make a statement. [16675]

Mr. Redwood: I have not issued any guidelines on this subject.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has regarding general practitioners' requests to hospitals to delay the TCI dates for non-urgent patients until the commencement of the new financial year for exclusively financial reasons. [16679]

Mr. Redwood: I have no details of any requests from general practitioners to hospitals to delay planned admissions until the new financial year.

Health Promotion Authority for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of States for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 22 March Official Report, column 258, how many of the board members of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales whose terms are expiring on 31 March have been informed that they are not being reappointed. [16677]

Mr. Redwood: One.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been his Department's expenditure on TECs in 1994–95; and what are the plans for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [16338]

Mr. Redwood: Negotiations are continuing with TECs on their contracts for 1995–96. When these negotiations are completed I will write to the hon. Member.

Final outturn figures for 1994–95 will not be available until the appropriation accounts are approved. When I write to the hon. Member on TEC contracts, I will let him also have the latest provisional outturn figures available at the time.

Expenditure in 1996–97 will be dependent on TEC contract negotiations which will take place early in 1996.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the publication by the Countryside Council for Wales's action plan for 1995–97 period will take place. [16678]

Mr. Redwood: I hope to publish the action plan shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Prescribed Disease D4

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 825, if he will place in the Library a copy of the paper on prescribed disease D4, mucous membrane, prepared by a senior medical adviser of the Department of Social Security in January 1995. [15824]

Mr. Hague: A copy of the paper has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when David Towler of the Sunderland TUC unemployed centre may expect to receive a reply to his letter dated 6 February regarding the case of Mrs. Jackson and the training arrangements for medical boarding doctors addressed to Dr. S. M. Reed of the Benefits Agency medical section. [15825]

Mr. Hague: Following several telephone conversations with Mr. Towler, it was assumed that the matter had been dealt with. Dr. Reed wrote to Mr. Towler on 23 March to clarify the position.

Compensation Recovery Scheme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to conduct research into the impact of the compensatory recovery unit on the lives of those who are obliged to pay back DSS benefits to the CRU. [15986]

Mr. Roger Evans: The compensation recovery unit recovers benefits attributable to an injury or disease from the compensator rather than the plaintiff. It performs this function effectively. We have no plans to mount the research to which the hon. Member refers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the extent of the practice of awarding £2,500 to those seeking compensation as victims of illness, accident or disease so as to avoid claw back of benefit to the compensation recovery unit. [15987]

Mr. Roger Evans: The level of settlement is a matter for the plaintiff and defendant, so no such assessment has been conducted. I understand, however, that a study of the level of settlement in some 10,000 compensation awards was recently completed on behalf of the Association of British Insurers. This study was conducted in support of evidence recently given by the association on the subject of compensation recovery to the Social Security Select Committee. The study concluded that the incidence of awards of £2,500 was not disproportionate.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he keeps on the impact of the compensation recovery unit upon the lives of those who have to pay DSS benefits to the CRU. [15985]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Department keeps such information as is necessary to discharge its responsibilities.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at inter-departmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15610]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15553]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary for Corporate Affairs.

Income Support

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the level of (a) over-payments and (b) under-payments of income support in each year since its introduction; and what sums have been recovered. [15751]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables. Information is not collected on underpaid amounts. These are paid to claimants as soon as they are discovered.

Table 1—Losses due to irrecoverable and unrecovered overpayments of Income Support

1992–93	19,431
1993–94	32,830

Note:

Information on the totals of recoverable overpayments is not collected centrally.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15573]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This Department's deregulation objectives are set out on pages 2, 47 and 48 of the 1995 departmental report, "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1995–96 to 1997–98", published on 9 March 1995. One of our key tasks for the next three years is to reduce the burdens on business wherever possible, particularly by dealing with the differences in national insurance and Inland Revenue procedures.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15611]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 891.

Child Support

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances child maintenance payments can be obtained from service men posted abroad; what plans he has to review this issue; and if he will make a statement. [15544]

Mr. Burt: Child Support rules apply equally to service personnel and civilians. Where service men are posted abroad the Child Support Agency retains jurisdiction where it appears that the absent parent maintains sufficient links with the United Kingdom to be considered habitually resident here. This applies in the overwhelming majority of cases. There are no plans to review these arrangements.

Incapacity for Work Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the numbers and proportion of claimants of an incapacity benefit who have been assessed as capable of their usual occupation or an alternative who have lodged an appeal against this decision in each of the last four quarters. [16704]

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested.

Available information is in the tables.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will receive the £10 per week supplement to disability working allowance for those working more than 30 hours a week. [16705]

Mr. Hague: We estimate that around 2,000 of the current 4,752 disability working allowance recipients will benefit from the new £10 per week additional allowance.

Source: Disability Working Allowance monitoring statistics for the month ending February 1995.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of States for Social Security what are the numbers of people currently receiving attendance allowance by main disabling condition, broken down by (a) entitlement to the highest rate and (b) entitlement to the lowest rate of the allowance. [16703]

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table. This shows separately the disabling conditions that apply to at least 2 per cent. of the total recipients:

The figures in this table comprise all duties administered by the Inland Revenue, value added tax and all other duties administered by Customs and Excise.

The figures for 1994 are not sufficiently complete to allow the necessary comparison to be made and consequently the information is not available in the form requested. Therefore, the figures are expressed in accordance with the 1993 prices.

Insolvencies, where the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise have very little control over the amount recoverable, account for the vast majority of remissions of tax.

Tax Planning and Avoidance

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he distinguishes between tax planning and tax avoidance. [15583]

Sir George Young [holding answer 23 March 1995]: In broad terms, the Government regard tax planning as the organisation of a taxpayer's affairs to secure the mitigation of tax liabilities in a manner consistent with the intentions of Parliament. Tax avoidance centres around attempts to frustrate the wishes of Parliament, either by way of escaping tax on transactions, or obtaining tax relief, in circumstances other than those intended by Parliament.

Mr. Nelson: According to the Bank for International Settlements, loans by UK banks to eastern Europe as at the end of June 1994, stood at $4,209 million. Of this, the Bank of England estimates that $796 million was lent to the non-bank private sector. Total lending by Germany to eastern Europe as at the end of June 1994 was $42,733 million. Neither the Bank of England nor the Treasury has access to information on the breakdown of this figure.

Construction Industry Review

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response his Department has made to the Latham review. [14432]

Mr. Nelson: The Government's response to the Latham review was contained in the speech of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Construction and Planning to the Latham conference on 25 July 1994. Her Majesty's Treasury has an interest in Sir Michael's recommendations in terms of value for money in public procurement and the efficient contribution of the construction of industry to the economy. The Treasury has therefore been involved in the follow-up work on the review.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much sterling has appreciated or depreciated against all the other currencies of Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries since April 1992; and by how much sterling has been devalued in overall terms since that date. [15984]

Mr. Nelson: In April 1992 sterling's exchange rate index averaged 100.2 per cent. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16557]

Mr. Nelson: Seven press officers are currently employed in the Treasury. Information for 1979 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Genome Research

38. Mr. Enright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of his budget will be allocated to research into ethical, legal and social issues arising out of genome research. [14217]

Mr. Horam: The Medical Research Council expects to spend £15.5 million on the genome initiative in 1995–96. Ethical, social and legal issues will be one aspect of this research, but it is not possible to provide separate figures. The Economic and Social Research Council sponsors social research on the human genome worth around £200,000.

Science (Children)

41. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to encourage more children to develop an active interest in science; and if he will make a statement. [14221]

Classes have been invited to submit by 31 July video films of up to five minutes duration, or photo-essays, saying why theirs is the best science school in the country. Each of the winning primary and secondary schools will receive £1,000 for new scientific and technological equipment. The winners and two runners-up in each category will receive a day trip to the museum or hands-on centre of their choice, sponsored by the Office of Science and Technology. I shall announce the results during the week of the British Association's science festival in September.

Select Committees

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what new guidance his Department has issued to civil servants giving evidence to, or appearing before, Select Committees. [15970]

[15641]

Mr. David Hunt: Special advisers are members of the civil service, have the same conditions of service as civil servants and are subject to the same rules of conduct as other civil servants, with certain limited exceptions. They have all the facilities listed in the question to the extent necessary for the performance of their duties.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15574]

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what funding has been made available to Liverpool Blue Coat school for the improvement of physical education and changing facilities; when the local education authority was asked to provide information about the project to her Department; when approval was given; and when the work must commence and be completed in order to qualify for funding. [16340]

Mr. Robin Squire: Liverpool LEA applied on 18 May 1994 for a supplementary credit approval of £150,000 to enable the Blue Coat school to rationalise its PE provision. This followed a letter from the then Secretary of State dated 19 April 1994 to the chairman of governors of the Blue Coat school explaining that if the LEA were unable to meet its liability from within existing resources, it was open to the LEA to apply for an SCA. The LEA was informed on 10 March 1995 that its application had been successful. The SCA may be used in respect of expenditure defrayed or credit arrangements entered into or varied during financial year 1994–95.

Students with Disabilities

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the review of further and higher education announced in the White paper "Ending Discrimination Against Disabled People".

Mr. Boswell: The Government introduced in 1992 as part of the Further and Higher Education Act comprehensive provisions covering students with disabilities in further and higher education. We shall be considering carefully the points raised in debates on the Disability Discrimination Bill. Additionally, as promised, we will be reviewing the effectiveness of education legislation in meeting the needs of these students.

This review builds on the achievements of colleges, universities and the funding councils in increasing provision for students with disabilities in further and higher education. It offers us a chance to work with the funding councils, representative bodies for higher education and organisations for the disabled to ensure that the legislative framework meets the needs of students with disabilities, and to consider appropriate proposals for practical action.

The review will be wide ranging including:

—in higher education, how the new flexibility in capital spending can be used to improve facilities for students with disabilities.

—ways in which the arrangements for increasing further education college staff's awareness of the needs of students with disabilities can be improved and whether inspections of the quality of provision for these students can be strengthened.

—considering whether any further funding incentives could be given to colleges to encourage the enrolment of students with disabilities and if any related guidance could be offered.

—the administration of the disabled student's allowances to see whether more needs to be done to raise awareness of their purpose and availability.

—the advice and information service provided by Skill—the National Bureau of Students with Disabilities.

—considering whether the charters for further and higher education can be improved in respect of availability of information to students with disabilities.

Copies of the review programme have been placed in the Library.

Special Educational Needs

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action she is taking to implement the findings of the Audit Commission report on special needs pupils. [16592]

Mr. Forth: The Audit Commission/HMI report "Getting in on the Act" was published in June 1992 and made several recommendations to enhance clarity and accountability in schools and LEAs to ensure better provision for pupils with special educational needs.

The recommendations have been the subject of revised legislation in part III of the Education Act 1993; and in guidance within several circulars covering the organisation of special educational provision, pupils with problems, and local management of schools. The Government have also issued a code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs, which came into force on 1 September 1994.

A subsequent Audit Commission report "The Act Moves On: Progress in Special Educational Needs" acknowledges that the code of practice has been warmly welcomed by almost all those involved in education and indicates that the Government have acted promptly to address those deficiencies in the national framework which were suggested by the 1992 report.

Sex Education

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to monitor the parental right of withdrawal in relation to sex education; and how this right is reflected in the revised version of the framework for the inspection of schools; [16088]

(2) if guidance for inspection of sex education policy and implementation in schools' programmes will be included in the revised version of the framework for inspection of schools; [16090]

(3) how many and which organisations have responded to the consultation carried out by Ofsted on the proposed revision of the framework for the inspection of schools; [16089]

(4) what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure the effectiveness of schools' governing bodies for health education and sex education; and how these are reflected in the revised version of the framework for inspection of schools. [16087]

Mr. Forth: The new statutory requirements for sex education, under the Education Act 1993, came into force on 1 September 1994. The Department's circular 5/94 offered guidance on the implementation of the new arrangements, including the role of school governors and the exercise of the parental right of withdrawal. We have no plans at present to monitor specifically the right of withdrawal.

Questions on the framework of inspection are a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, Chris Woodhead. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools she has been notified will be unable to meet the requirements of the national curriculum because they have been refused the necessary capital by the Funding Agency for Schools. [15525]

Mr. Robin Squire: A number of schools have expressed serious disappointment that, as a result of constraints on the total available for capital grants next year, they will not be able to develop their curriculum in the way they had hoped. However, my right hon. Friend has not received notification that any school will be unable to meet the minimum requirements of the national curriculum for this reason. Decisions on capital grants for individual schools are a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools.

[16060]

The Prime Minister: This book has only just been published. The Government will study the contents and consider what, if any, action needs to be taken.

SCOTLAND

Registers of Scotland

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the financial performance of the Registers of Scotland executive agency for each year since 1990; what profits have been generated; how much of such profits has been paid to the Treasury; and if it is his policy that the agency should continue to generate profits in this way. [15527]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Registers of Scotland agency. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. A.W. Ramage, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan W. Ramage to Mr. John Home Robertson, dated 27 March 1995:

I refer to your question about the financial performance of Registers of Scotland Executive Agency in each year since 1990.

The Agency is required by statute to cover all expenditure by fee income. Income in excess of expenditure, in terms of cash-based Vote accounting, is surrendered to Treasury at the end of each financial year. The information relating to the financial years from 1990–91 to 1993–94 is shown below.

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Surplus/Deficit (£000s)	(276)	1,346	5,291	5,819

It may be helpful if I explain that the comparatively large surpluses in 1992–93 and 1993–94 arose from the processing and elimination of backlogs of work which had built up as a result of the very high level of activity in the Scottish property market during the preceding five years. Accounts prepared on an accruals basis reflect more accurately the Agency's trading position and show, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, trading surpluses of £2.823m and £0.149m respectively.

Projections of future property market activity allied to more flexible working systems indicate that it will be possible to match income more closely to expenditure in the years to 1997–98. The Agency's forecasts for 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 are that income will exceed expenditure by approximately £100,000 (or less than 0.5% of expenditure) in each of these years.

Quangos

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 25 November 1994, Official Report, column 338–39, if he will list quangos which have been abolished since April 1993. [15801]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 March 1995]: Between 1 April 1993 and 1 April 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, one non-departmental public body was abolished. This was the Scottish Health Service Advisory Council, which ceased to exist in June 1993.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown by week of pregnancy of the number of abortions performed upon women in Scotland in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993 under the grounds of (i) risk to life of woman, (ii) to prevent grave permanent injury to physical or mental health of woman, (iii) substantial risk of child being born seriously handicapped, (iv) to save the life of woman and (v) to prevent grave permanent injury to physical or mental health of woman. [15961]

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Crown Office has sought to interview David Lovejoy about his advice to the Iranian chargé d'affaires in Beirut, Hussein Niknam, concerning the arrival of Charles McKee and Matthew Garnam in Beirut to obtain information on the locations of hostages. [16149]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the number of (i) male and (ii) female employees, (b) the number of officials employed at each of the principal grades and the numbers and percentages of women employed at these grades and (c) the numbers of staff employed of administrative grades and the number of these staff that are women in his Department for each year since 1985. Sir Paul Beresford: The Building Research Establishment has for a number of years conducted research into many aspects of the behaviour, fate and efficacy of lindane when used as a wood preservative. The results of much of this research have been published, either in professional journals or in the research establishment's publications. Some information on the non-agricultural uses of lindane appeared in the review which was published in December 1992—"Evaluation on Gamma HCH (Lindane II; Evaluation No. 64)", a copy of which is lodged in the Library of the House.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the extent of pollution of the North sea by lindane, gamma HCH, gamma BHC or comparable pesticide products; and if he will make a statement. [15512]

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on the North sea distribution of organochlorines such as lindane—gamma HCH—is given in the 1993 "Quality Status Report on the North Sea", with more detailed information in six sub-regional reports produced by the UK. Copies of these reports are in the Library of the House. The highest concentrations of lindane in North sea waters were found in the southern North sea and German bight. Monitoring by UK fisheries departments, reflected in the quality status report, has found little indication of serious organochlorine contamination of fish tissue in our North sea estuaries. Similarly, concentrations of organochlorines in marine mammals stranded on the UK North sea coast are generally low.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the similarities between DDT and lindane or gamma hexachlorocyclohexane. [15511]

Sir Paul Beresford: Both lindane and DDT are organochlorine insecticides. However, lindane is less persistent than other organochlorine pesticides and, as it is excreted rapidly from mammals, has less potential to accumulate in man or wild animals.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the (a) household, (b) garden, greenhouse or park and (c) pet care products in which lindane or gamma hexachlorocyclohexane are used. [15508]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is already in the public domain for all products containing lindane registered by the Health and Safety Executive or the pesticides safety directorate of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and all these products must indicate that they contain lindane. For products registered up to October 1994, this information is listed in "Pesticides 1995, Reference Book 500"—the Blue Book—a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Any products containing lindane registered since then are listed in the monthly "Pesticides Register" which is produced by the Health and Safety Executive and pesticides safety directorate and published by HMSO. I understand that there are no pet care products containing lindane licensed in the UK at present.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ban the use of lindane, gamma HCH, and gamma BHC in wood preservatives. [15509]

Sir Paul Beresford: Under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, Ministers established an independent committee, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, to provide them with advice on the approval of pesticides. Current policy on the approval of lindane is based on the advice of this committee. In 1992, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides considered a substantial body of evidence on the toxicology and behaviour of lindane when it reviewed its use as a non-agricultural pesticide, including as a wood preservative. The advisory committee recommended that approvals should continue as there was no evidence of an unacceptable risk to human health from use of lindane as a wood preservative. The Ministers of the pesticide approving Departments accepted these recommendations.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice is issued by the Building Research Establishment in respect of the number of hours people should stay out of enclosed areas sprayed with lindane, gamma BHC or gamma HCH; what information he has to the comparable advice given to customers by the producers of this product; and if he will make a statement. [15503]

Sir Paul Beresford: Guidance on re-entry periods for occupants of buildings treated with wood preservatives appears on product labels. As such it is a statutory condition for the approval of use of a product, recommended by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and agreed by Ministers. In the case of lindane, unprotected persons and animals should not re-enter treated buildings for a minimum period of 48 hours and only then if the timber is dry.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he is giving to local authorities who use lindane fumers with insecticide smoke to clear houses of insects and other pests. [15504]

Sir Paul Beresford: Adequate requirements and advice are already in place. Work with lindane is covered by the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994—COSHH. COSHH requires employers to inform, instruct and train their employees about: the nature of the substances they work with; the risks created by exposure to those substances and the precautions to be taken. Under the provisions of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, conditions of approval and instructions for use appear on lindane pesticide products.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the use of lindane in lofts inhabited by bats. [15505]

Sir Paul Beresford: Bats are protected animals under schedule 6 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. All wood preservatives containing lindane carry the statement that: before treating any structure used by bats, English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage or the Country Council for Wales should be consulted. The conservation bodies have lists of products which are acceptable for use in roosts; products containing lindane are not recommended for this purpose.

DDT

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if DDT is soluble in body fat and tissue of (a) animals and (b) humans. [15514]

Sir Paul Beresford: DDT is soluble in the fatty tissue of man and other animals.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underlie the banning of DDT. [15507]

Sir Paul Beresford: In the United Kingdom, concern over the environmental effects of DDT led to reductions in use from the 1960s culminating in a complete ban by 1986. Because of its properties and widespread use, DDT accumulated in the environment, exposing animals higher up the food chain to concentrations which produced various toxic effects. DDT was implicated in the decline in populations of a number of these animals, most notably birds of prey through egg-shell thinning.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15563]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs earlier today.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15570]

Sir Paul Beresford: The aims and objectives for the Department of the Environment are set through its management information system for Ministers—MINIS. The Department's commitment to the deregulation initiative is reflected in the aims and objectives for the relevant policy areas.

Empty Homes

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority area (a) the number of empty homes and (b) the proportion of empty homes in (i) the private sector, (ii) the local authority sector and (iii) the housing association sector. [15686]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities in England report the numbers of their own dwellings that are vacant at 1 April on their annual housing investment programme—HIP1—return. The latest figures for individual local authorities can be found in section A of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library; figures are given separately for vacant dwellings inside and outside the authority's area.

Housing associations report the numbers of their own dwellings vacant at 31 March on their annual HAR10/1 return. I have today placed in the Library a table giving the reported numbers of vacant housing association dwellings in each local authority area. The listed figures are incomplete as there are an estimated 700 vacant dwellings in England—3 per cent. of vacant dwellings—for which an analysis by district is not available.

In addition to providing information on those of their own dwellings that are vacant, local authorities are also asked to provide estimates of the number of private sector and other public sector vacant dwellings in their area on their annual HIP1 returns. The reported information for each local authority can also be found in section A of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Print".

There are doubts about the quality of some of the estimates of these vacants provided by authorities. Information from the 1991 English house condition survey suggests that the England total for the private sector may be an over-estimate, and data from central Government Departments on their own vacant dwellings, for which no geographical breakdown is readily available, indicate that there is under-reporting of public sector vacant dwellings.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at inter-departmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15628]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right. hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster earlier today.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers in his Department since May 1992. [15629]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is as follows:

Name	Period
Mr. Patrick Rock	Joined on 1 May 1992, left on 27 May 1993.
Mr. James Gray	Joined on 3 June 1992. Still with the Department.
Mr. Keith Adams	Joined on 28 May 1993. Still with the Department.

Housing

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of newly built housing tenancies required to meet demand annually; and how this figure is calculated. [15919]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) on 1 February, Official Report, columns 685–86.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to fund housing associations in accordance with the 1992 autumn statement. [15920]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Housing Corporation funds housing associations under its approved development programme. My hon. Friend the Minister of S[illegible] for Housing announced the ADP allocations for 1995 [illegible]n 15 December 1994. Details were placed in the Library of the House. These allocations supersede those made following the 1992 autumn statement.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the housing and non-housing debt for the London boroughs of Lambeth, Hackney, Islington, Southwark, Newham, Haringey, Camden, Waltham Forest, Lewisham, Tower Hamlets and Greenwich; and if he will make a statement; [16346]

(2) what is the housing and non-housing debt for Birmingham, Leeds Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Bradford and Sheffield; and if he will make a statement. [16345]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave on 2 March 1995 to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North-East, (Mr. Congdon) Official Report, column 692.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the value of the housing and non-housing assets of Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Bradford and Sheffield; and if he will make a statement; [16356]

(2) what is the value of the housing and non-housing assets of the London Boroughs of Lambeth, Hackney, Islington, Southwark, Newham, Haringey, Camden, Waltham Forest, Lewisham, Tower Hamlets and Greenwich; and if he will make a statement. [16355]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This information is not collected by the Department.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much is owed in (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge and (c) council tax to the London boroughs of Hackney, Islington, Southwark, Newham, Haringey, Camden, Waltham Forest, Lewisham, Tower Hamlets and Greenwich; and if he will make a statement; [16354]

(2) how much is owed in (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge and (c) council tax for Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Bradford and Sheffield; and if he will make a statement. [16353]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information on uncollected domestic rates and community charge for each local authority is not available centrally. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy regularly publishes estimates for individual authorities: figures for 31 March 1994 are available in its "Revenue Collection Statistics 1993/94" publication, and are given in the table:

Housing Association Tenancies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what number of housing association tenancies were built in each year since 1988. [15918]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The available figures are shown in the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for housebuilding by housing associations in England between 1988 and 1993 are in table 6.1(a) of the annual edition for 1983–93; table 7.1 shows corresponding figures for dwellings renovated. Figures for housebuilding in 1993 and 1994 were shown in table 1.2(a) of the December 1994 edition of part 1 of this publication. The figures for renovations during the first part of 1994 are shown in table 2.15 of the September 1994 edition of part 2 of this publication.

Copies of theses publications are in the Library.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for implementing Council directive 91/689/EEC on hazardous waste. [16872]

Mr. Atkins: My Department has today issued for public consultation draft special waste regulations and accompanying guidance, together with an assessment of compliance costs and a paper on charging proposals. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The existing regulations date from 1980, and set out additional controls over the most dangerous wastes designed to ensure that they are monitored and safely managed from "cradle to grave". The new proposals implement the 1991 hazardous waste directive, and the EC list of hazardous wastes adopted by the Council of Ministers in December. They also introduce other desirable changes. The key details are:

—A new definition of special waste which embraces both the EC List of hazardous waste and any other waste which is special under the current regulations. New technical guidance will be the subject of a separate consultation exercise later in the spring.

—Pre-notification to waste regulation authorities of waste movements will be simplified. Wasteholders will be able to prenotify a series of repetitive movements, and carriers will be able to prenotify collection rounds. Where movements cross authority boundaries, wasteholders need no longer notify both authorities. A redesigned consignment note should help wasteholders provide descriptions of their waste and its associated hazards so as to assist sound management.

—Fees will be payable when movements are pre-notified, as part of the policy of charging for local authority services, and in line with the "polluter pays" principle. The fees should recover authorities' supervisory costs.

—Restrictions are introduced on mixing by carriers and consignees, of different special wastes and of special with non-special wastes.

Subject to the outcome of public consultation, our aim is to introduce the new regulations and associated guidance this summer. The Government believe that the proposals will introduce a useful measure of deregulation, with no diminution of the controls which help to minimise the risk these wastes can pose to human health and the environment.

Neighbour Noise

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans are there to deal with neighbour noise. [16871]

Mr. Atkins: Inconsiderate noisy neighbours can cause extreme distress and suffering to many. My concern about the steeply rising complaints about domestic noise and the effectiveness of the current legislation to deal with these problems resulted in the formation last October of a working party to review the situation.

I am today placing in the Library of the House and publishing a consultation paper which sets out the conclusions and recommendations of the working party. The key recommendations are:

—Good practice guidance should be made available to local authorities on the management of noise services.

—Local authorities should be encouraged to provide information to residents about their authority's noise complaints service and to increase public awareness of neighbour noise issues. Government should consider supporting publicity initiatives to increase awareness of what constitutes unacceptable noise.

—Consideration should be given to issuing general guidance on the sorts of noise problems which might constitute a statutory nuisance.

—Local authorities should be encouraged to provide services which respond to complaints outside working hours wherever such services are required.

—Local authorities should be encouraged to establish streamlined local arrangements for obtaining warrants to enter domestic premises to temporarily confiscate noise-making equipment or silence intruder alarms.

—A code of good practice should be issued jointly by the professional representative bodies to police forces and local authorities to encourage effective local arrangements for dealing with noise complaints.

—A specific power of temporary confiscation of noise-making equipment—to provide a stronger legal base for existing practice—should be introduced, with the power for local authorities to levy an administration charge for its return.

—Local authorities should be encouraged to seek, where appropriate, deprivation orders for the permanent confiscation of noise-making equipment following prosecution.

—Consideration should be given to the creation of a criminal offence, separate to the statutory nuisance regime, to apply to night time neighbour noise disturbance.

The paper invites comments in particular on the options for creating a new criminal offence, including a direct noise offence based on the World Health Organisation guidelines of 35dB(A) for acceptable indoor night noise levels. Such an offence has the potential to provide a swifter remedy than the current statutory nuisance regime for some of the most disturbing neighbour noise problems.

Copies of the consultation paper are being sent to all district, borough and island councils in England, Wales and Scotland, representative bodies for local authorities and the police, voluntary noise groups and a wide variety of other organisations. The consultation period lasts until 30 June.

Wherever possible, attempts should be made to resolve problems informally. However, it is vital that effective legislation is in place to deal with situations where a formal remedy is the correct course. I am grateful to the working party for producing what I believe is a worthwhile package of proposals which, if implemented, will strengthen current neighbour noise controls, improve the management of local authority noise services and improve liaison between local authorities and the police.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at interdepartmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15622]

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15558]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A reply by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs, in response to a similar question today from my hon. Friend, sets out the targets across the Government. In the Home Office our targets for deregulation include the following:

Liquor licensing

Abolish the compulsory afternoon break in licensing hours on Sundays, Christmas day and Good Friday for both on-licensed and off-licensed premises and for registered clubs, and permit of-licensed sales from 10 am on these days, through the Licensing (Sunday Hours) Bill; abolition of "the long-pull offence" by the repeal of section 165 of the Licensing Act 1964; amend the rules for special hours certificates so that discotheques and other places where public dancing takes place do not effectively have to close an hour early when the clock goes forward to British summer time in the spring.

Gambling

Issue a consultation paper on removing restrictions applying to casinos and bingo clubs; extend the duration to three years, from one, and provide for simplified renewal procedure for bookmakers permits and betting office licences, contained in the Betting Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963;

relax existing controls over greyhound racing contained in the Betting Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963; removal of certain restrictions on betting offices facilities under the Betting Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 concerning the supply of refreshments, displays of information and television screens; increase the number of jackpot machines allowed in casinos, licensed bingo clubs and registered members clubs under section 31 of the Gaming Act 1968; allow all-cash amusement-with-prizes machines in adult premises, including betting shops.

Charities

Following up proposals made by the charities and voluntary organisations task force.

Others

Abolition of the licence to kill game contained in the Game Act 1831 and 1860; abolition of pedlars certificates by the repeal of the Pedlars Acts 1871 and 1881.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15623]

[15764]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 27 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many prisoners who are serving sentences for violent crime are former members of the armed services, with particular reference to those who were previously involved with active combative duties; and if these figures are equal in proportion with the percentage of the United kingdom non-prison population who are members of the armed services.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for asylum were outstanding at the date the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 came into force; [15145]

(2) how many of the asylum applications outstanding at the date of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 came into force were determined during the period 1 August 1993 to 31 December 1994; and of these how many were granted refugee status, how many were granted exceptional leave to remain, and how many were refused. [15146]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: At the date the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 came into force—26 July 1993—there were an estimated 42,500 applications for asylum outstanding.

During the period 1 August 1993 to 31 December 1994, 25,740 decisions were made on applications for asylum. Of these, 5,485 decisions were made on applications which were outstanding at the date the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 came into force. Some 345 were grants of refugee status, 1,275 were grants of exceptional leave to remain and 3,865 were refusals of asylum and exceptional leave to remain.

Correspondence

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter of 23 February from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill concerning Mr. Levin Larkin and Mrs Marie Petit; and if he will make a statement. [16339]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State replied to the hon. Member on 24 March.

Prisoners Transfer

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to relocate prisoners convicted to terrorist offences from prisons in Great Britain to Prisons in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. [16635]

Mr. Howard: The Criminal Justice Act 1961 contains provision for prisoners sentenced to imprisonment in one United Kingdom jurisdiction to request transfer to another United Kingdom jurisdiction. Requests are considered on their individual merits against criteria announced to Parliament on 23 November 1992. There are no plans to change these provisions.

It is not possible for prisoners to transfer between United Kingdom jurisdictions and the Republic of Ireland. The Republic has not joined the United Kingdom in ratifying the Council of Europe convention for the transfer of sentenced persons or otherwise sought an international agreement with the United Kingdom to provide for such transfers.

Whitemoor Prison

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the outcome of Sir David Yardley's disciplinary investigation following the escape of prisoners from Whitemoor prison on 9 December 1994. [17025]

Mr. Howard: Sir David Yardley has submitted the report of the investigation he conducted under the Prison Service code of conduct and discipline to the permanent under-secretary of state for the Home Office. He has recommended that no disciplinary charges should be laid against any individual member of staff. These recommendations have been accepted by those responsible for taking disciplinary decisions under the code. However, Sir David Yardley's report also identifies serious performance shortcomings on the part of a number of individuals in respect of whom appropriate management action will be taken. Final decisions on that action will be taken after those concerned have been given the opportunity to make representations. This action will be in addition to the extensive management action relating to staff, recommended in Sir John Woodcock's report, which is already in progress.

Refugees

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the concessionary policy which he operated until January 1994 applied to relatives other than spouses and minor children of Somali nationals with refugee status in the United Kingdom. [17026]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The terms in this concession were spelt out in a Home Office letter to interested parties dated 17 May 1990, and the relevant provisions remained unaltered throughout its lifetime. Our normal policy on family reunification for those recognised as refugees in the United Kingdom is to allow immediate reunion with spouse and minor children. When we announced the concession for Somali nationals we said that we would be willing to consider admitting others on a similar basis if they could show that they had been a dependent member of the refugee's immediate family unit before the refugee came to the United Kingdom and that there were exceptional circumstances. The concession was withdrawn in January 1994.

Prison Security

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what terms of reference or guidelines he has given to General Sir John Learmont for the inquiry he is conducting into prison security. [16571]

Mr. Howard: On 19 December 1994, Official Report, columns 957–58, I announced to the House that I was appointing General Sir John Learmont to review security throughout the Prison Service. The terms of reference for the review are:

> In the light of the report of the inquiry into the attempted escape from HM prison Whitemoor on 9 September 1994, to review physical security and security procedures in the Prison Service in England and Wales, and to make recommendations.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16575]

Mr. Howard: The Home Department's records do not contain a breakdown between press officers and paid publicity staff before 1983. There are currently 15 press officers, including the director and deputy director of information.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department has given to establishing special prisons for seriously mentally ill prisoners, staffed by personnel who are trained to deal with them. [15763]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 27 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what consideration has been given to establishing special prisons for seriously mentally ill prisoners, staffed by personnel who are trained to deal with them.

It is Government policy that mentally disordered offenders needing care and treatment should, wherever possible, receive it from the appropriate health and social services, rather than through the criminal justice system. Any prisoner suffering from a serious mental illness would be likely to fulfil the criteria for transfer to hospital set down in the Mental Health Act 1983.

Section 47 of that Act confers on the Secretary of State power to issue a warrant directing the transfer to hospital of any sentenced prisoner, if he is satisfied, by reports from two doctors, that the prisoner is suffering from mental illness, psychopathic disorder, mental impairment or severe mental impairment of a nature or degree which makes it appropriate for him/her to be detained in a hospital for medical treatment. In a case of psychopathic disorder or mental impairment, such treatment must be likely to alleviate or prevent a deterioration of the condition concerned.

Section 48 of the 1983 Act makes similar provision in respect of unsentenced and certain other categories of prisoners who are suffering from mental illness or severe mental impairment and in urgent need of treatment.

Such transfers are often to one of the three special hospitals or to NHS medium secure units.

It would be inappropriate for people in this group to be treated in prison, except on a voluntary basis pending imminent transfer. There has been a marked increase in the number of transfers from prison to hospital under sections 47 and 48 in recent years from 115 in 1983, through 206 in 1988, to 776 in 1993. At present the provisional total for 1994 is 746.

Mr. Roger Levitt

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours of community service Roger Levitt has served; and what tasks he has undertaken. [155601]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Mr. Levitt's 180-hour community service order was completed in September 1994. In his case, the unpaid work included carpentry, building work and site clearance.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Educational Broadcasts

17. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on his future plans for broadcasts of educational value. [14195]

Mr. Dorrell: In our White Paper on the future of the BBC we said that the BBC should continue to broadcast educational programmes of all kinds. The Broadcasting Act 1[illegible]0 includes a number of provisions to ensure that the other terrestrial broadcasters provide educational programmes, for schools, adult education and general consumption.

Football Stadiums

18. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for further legislation to improve safety facilities in football stadiums which are already all-seater. [14196]

Mr. Sproat: None.

Cross-media Ownership

19. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to change the law on cross-media ownership. [14197]

Mr. Dorrell: The ownership rules are currently under review. I will make an announcement about the outcome once the Government have determined the way ahead.

Public Libraries

20. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met the Library Association to discuss the funding of public libraries. [14198]

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend met the Library Association on 3 October last year. Discussions were wide ranging, around an agenda of topics provided by the Library Association itself. I met members of the association on 10 October, at the launch of London Libraries Week.

National Lottery

22. Dr. Sprink: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received about the consultation on priorities for distribution of funds from the national lottery. [14200]

Mr. Dorrell: My Department consulted on the arrangements for the distribution of national lottery proceeds to the arts, sport, the heritage and millennial projects in spring last year, when a number of representations were received from interested bodies. The National Lottery Charities Board is consulting on its funding strategy. Representations on the NLCB's consultation are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which organisations his Department has consulted since the commencement of the national lottery to discuss the impact of the lottery on charity donations and other existing fund raising schemes. [14201]

Mr. Dorrell: My Department has carried out no such consultation since the commencement of the national lottery. The views of a number of charitable organisations were taken into account in the preparation of the national lottery legislation.

28. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage to what extent he now calculates income from the national lottery in the first year of operation will exceed his first estimate. [14206]

Mr. Dorrell: Camelot's application for the section 5 licence to run the national lottery forecast that in the first full year of operation, to March 1996, around £750 million would be raised for the good causes. No formal forecast of the income to the national lottery distribution fund has subsequently been made, but it is widely accepted that the launch of the national lottery has been highly successful and that the proceeds to good causes have exceeded expectations. I am confident that the forecast of £750 million for good causes in the first full year of operation will be met.

British Hotels

24. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what encouragement he is giving to improve standards in the British hotel sector. [14202]

Mr. Sproat: On 1 March my Department published "Tourism—Competing with the Best" which sets out a number of measures aimed at revitalising the accommodation sector. The English tourist board has begun work to strengthen the Crown classification and grading scheme and my Department is working on a benchmarking initiative which will complement the work being done by the CBI.

Holidays

25. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to encourage more United Kingdom residents to take their holidays in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [14203]

Mr. Sproat: On 1 March my Department published "Tourism—Competing with the Best" which identifies short breaks and additional holidays in the UK as markets with particular potential for growth. The document sets out a work programme including action to improve the ease with which holidays in the UK can be booked and measures to help improve quality and value for money in the accommodation sector, which will be of benefit to all parts of the domestic market.

Hall i'th' Wood Museum

26. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will visit the Hall i'th' Wood museum when he next visits Bolton. [14204]

Mr. Dorrell: I shall bear in mind the invitation to visit Hall i'th' Wood museum for when I am next in the area.

Millennium Fund

27. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what he expects his major proposals for the use of the millennium fund to be; and if he will make a statement. [14205]

Mr. Dorrell: Decisions on the distribution of national lottery proceeds to projects which mark the year 2000 and the beginning of the new millennium will be made by the Millennium Commission on the basis of the merits of individual applications received. The commission expects to be able to make announcements about the first successful applicants in July this year.

Regional Offices

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many regional offices English Heritage has; what is the current total complement of staff employed; and if he will make a statement. [14190]

Mr. Dorrell: English Heritage has six main regional offices with a total 144 of staff and 13 sub-offices, which are bases for 34 regional technical and curatorial staff. In addition, English Heritage has 15 staff based in four regional offices administering historic properties restoration works operations. These figures exclude directly employed craftsmen and staff employed at English Heritage's historic properties.

Regional Orchestras

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what initiatives he will take to assist regional orchestras. [14199]

Mr. Dorrell: The Arts Council and the BBC are responsible for formulating policy on regional orchestras. The council has set up a new challenge fund of £450,000 for 1995–96. The fund will help secure the financial position of the regional orchestras and enhance musical provision around the country.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent discussions he has had, and with whom, about the future of Battersea power station; and if he will make a statement. [14188]

Mr. Dorrell: Discussions continue between Wandsworth council, English Heritage and the owners, Parkview International, on a master plan for the whole of the Battersea power station site. The Government are not party to the discussions, but hope that the future of this important historic building will be satisfactorily resolved with a minimum of further delay.

Chess

Mrs Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what administrative procedures are involved in the transfer of the responsibility for chess from the Department for Education to his Department;

(2) when he expects responsibility for chess to be transferred from the Department for Education to his Department.

Mr. Sproat: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Under-Secretary of State for Further and Higher Education on 15 March 1995, Official Report, column 620, on the current nature and extent of the Department for Education's interest in chess. I am currently considering whether it would be appropriate and practicable for my Department to take an interest in sponsoring chess.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government Reform

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary for Northern Ireland if he will list all proposals for reform of the government of Northern Ireland which have been publicly announced by the Government since 1979; and if he will place in the Library a summary of how each of these schemes of devolved government would have been financed. [14802]

Mr. Ancram: Since 1979, the Government have made the following proposals for reform of the government of Northern Ireland

The 1982 White Paper: Northern Ireland: A Framework for Devolution (Cmnd 8541 April 1982)

The Northern Ireland Act 1982

The "Frameworks for the Future" Document

A copy of the proposed financial arrangements have been placed in the Library as requested.

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible, for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation—-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000. [14607]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 17 March 1995]: The detailed information requested for expenditure on all forms of publicity, publications and pamphlets within the NI Departments, the Northern Ireland Office, agencies and public bodies is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, details of publicity costs by public expenditure programme for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments are given in table 12.8 of the Northern Ireland departmental report, Cm 2816, a copy of which is available in the Library.

[14507]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 20 March 1995]: A list of surveys carried out for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments by polling or public survey organisations during 1993–94 and 1994–95 has been placed in the Library.

Quality Management Initiatives

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will (a) list in detail the total quality management initiatives implemented by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland and (b) supply evidence of the success of these initiatives since their implementation. [15425]

Mr. Ancram: Initiatives introduced by the Department of Agriculture are based upon the citizens charter, including chartermark. There are early signs that these initiatives are beginning to achieve the desired results.

The Department of Agriculture, in association with local industry bodies, has been instrumental in implementing a range of quality assurance schemes. These, along with success criteria, as determined by the number of businesses and level of production covered by each, are as follows:

Initiative	Launch Date	Businesses Approved	Quality assured Output as percentage of Total Output
Farm QA Scheme (Beef)	April 1991	6,143	50
Farm QA Scheme (Lamb)	April 1992	2,000	27

[15413]

Mr. Ancram: For information on pupil numbers and funding, I refer the hon. Member to the LMS budget statements for controlled and maintained schools published by the five education and library boards and to the financial statements for grant-maintained integrated and voluntary grammar schools published by the Department of Education. Copies of these are available in the Library.

Information on the number of teachers employed at each school is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Agriculture Courses

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students are currently attending courses for each agricultural college (a) on a full-time basis and (b) on a part-time basis; and how many are employed at each of the colleges. [15430]

Mr. Ancram: The number of students currently attending courses at the three colleges operated by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, on a full-time and on a part-time basis, is as follows:

	Enniskillen	Greenmount	Loughry	Total
a) Full-time	51	315	295	661
b) Part-time	86	237	167	490

In addition, the colleges expect to deliver approximately 11,000 trainee days to people working in the Province's agri-food industry during the present academic year via short courses covering management and technical topics.

As well as providing education and training, the colleges are responsible for the Department's technology services and certain other aspects of agri-food industry development. The total number of staff engaged in providing all services are:

Enniskillen	Greenmount	Loughry	Total
31	146	125	302

These figures include support staff such as farm workers, cleaners, administration staff, in addition to the teaching staff and technologists.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students are currently pursuing courses at the faculty of agriculture and food science at Queen's university, Belfast at degree level and at postgraduate level; and how many of them have opted for modules within the courses which cover environmental issues. [15431]

Mr. Ancram: The number of students currently pursuing courses at the faculty of agriculture and food science, Belfast is 231 at degree level and 168 at postgraduate level.

All undergraduate students cover a range of environmental issues as integral parts of core modules within each of the degree courses. In addition, 21 undergraduate students and 30 postgraduate students are taking optional modules which specifically cover environmental issues.

European Regional Development Fund

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons there is a planned increase of £14 million in ERDF-Trade, Industry, Employment from 1995–96 to 1996–97 in Northern Ireland referred to in Northern Ireland expenditure plans and priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97, table 6.1. [1540[illegible]]

Mr. Ancram: The 1996–97 forecast represents the anticipated level of ERDF receipts based on the expenditure proposals submitted by Government to the European Commission in November 1993, in connection with the 1994 to 1999 round of European structural funds assistance. These figures have already been revised in our 1995 public expenditure plans to reflect the contents of the Northern Ireland single programme document, which was agreed with the European Commission on 29 July 1994.

Agriculture and Fishing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will describe the two schemes which provide grants for investments within agriculture and the fishing industry, as mentioned in Northern Ireland expenditure plans and priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97, section 5.21; and if he will give a breakdown of the 15 agricultural projects within which received aid from these schemes in 1993 and of the 11 projects within the fishing sector which received aid from these schemes. [15429]

Mr. Ancram: Grants for processing and marketing of agricultural products are made under European Commission Regulation No. 866/90, which is designed to improve the agricultural processing and marketing infrastructure in member states. Aid is given towards the cost of capital investments—new and refurbished buildings and new equipment. In Northern Ireland, the scheme provides grants at the rate of 35 per cent. of eligible expenditure, up to a limit of £1 million. The minimum eligible project size is £70,000 eligible costs.

Total project costs must not be less than £25,000 and not more than £6 million.

Farming Community (Suicides)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many suicides there have been in the Northern Irish farming community in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [14259]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 23 March 1995]: Deaths in the farming community caused by suicide are a cause for concern.

The number of deaths registered as suicides in relation to farmers and farm labourers in Northern Ireland in the five year period to 1993 are set out in the table. Deaths are recorded according to date of registration and not by date of occurrence.

1989: 2
1990: 3
1991: 8
1992: 3
1993: 10
1994: 6 (to September)

Specialist Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at inter-departmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15616]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15616]

Mr. Ancram: Yes. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland ensures that Northern Ireland Ministers seek to further the aims and objectives of the deregulation initiative in the areas for which they are responsible.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I appointed Mr. Jonathan Caine as my special adviser in June 1992.

Irish Language

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new plans he has to increase the numbers of parents who can choose Irish language tuition as a second language at all Irish schools. [16634]

Mr. Ancram: None. At present, any school may offer a course in the language, and pupils may choose Irish to fulfil their modern language requirements as part of the compulsory curriculum at post-primary level.

Most of the schools which currently offer Irish as part of their language studies provision have a tradition of doing so. However, as with any other course, schools planning to provide Irish will take into account factors such as demand for it from parents and pupils, the availability of qualified teachers and space for it within the timetable.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if all inspectors responsible for reporting in all Irish schools are fluent Irish speakers; and if he will make a statement. [16633]

Mr. Ancram: Generally, members of inspection teams who report on Irish medium schools are fluent in, or have a good working knowledge of, Irish.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made recently of the adequacy of the resources available for second language teaching of Irish in all schools and for teaching Irish in all Irish schools. [16636]

Mr. Ancram: It is a matter for individual schools within their delegated budgets to decide what resources they should devote to any aspect of the curriculum—including Irish. In addition to mainstream budgets, the Department of Education also makes available a grant of some £40,000 per annum to assist the Irish medium schools with production of curricular materials. The teaching of Irish in schools is assessed by the inspectorate on the same basis as any other subject.

Mr. Gerry Adams

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if Mr. Gerry Adams is or has been in receipt of income support or any other social security benefit. [16367]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Toby Jessel, dated 23 March 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent question about Mr. Gerry Adams.

I should first explain that information on a person's entitlement to social security benefits, including whether or not they are claiming or getting benefit, is confidential. I am therefore unable to comment on individual cases. However, I can assure you that all claims to benefit are assessed and regularly reviewed by independent adjudication officers, strictly in accordance with social security law and payment is made only where there is a valid entitlement.

I hope this letter sets out the position for you.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constitute.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The information has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in rank order the acreage under sugar beet in (a) each county and (b) each region. [15501]

Mr. Jack: The information requested has been compiled from the June 1994 agricultural census of England and Wales and is as follows:

June 1994 Agricultural Census Sugar Beet Coverage

Lindane

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if lindane or gamma hexachlorocyclohexane is used in agricultural production, with particular reference to crop spraying, and if he will make a statement. [15500]

Mrs. Browning: Lindane is approved for use on a number of crops. The independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides is currently reviewing the agricultural uses of lindane. I expect the committee to report its conclusions later this year.

Farm and Food Prices

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much (a) farm prices and (b) food prices have increased in the United Kingdom since September 1993. [15822]

Mr. Jack: The index of producer prices of agricultural products increased by 8.6 per cent. between September 1993 and January 1995. Over the same period, the retail prices index for food increased by 2.4 per cent.

Common Agricultural Policies

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total budget of the common agricultural policy in each year since 1973; what proportion of the EC's total budget this accounts for; and what proportion of the common agricultural policy was allocated to the United Kingdom. [15790]

Mr. Jack: For the years 1973 to 1992, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 9 March 1994, Official Report; column 275. The information in respect of 1993 and 1994 is as follows:

	Total CAP expenditure (EAGGF Guarantee) (mecu)	As percentage of total EC expenditure	Total UK receipts as percentage of total EC CAP expenditure

1994	32,924	50	8.5

1993 annual financial report of the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund and Commission working doc. VI/72/94—15.12.94

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for (a) the total value of moneys illegally abstracted from the common agricultural policy's export refund and price support schemes and (b) how much the common agricultural policy has lost through the evasion of customs duties and farm levies; and if he will estimate the proportion of defrauded funds that are recouped. [15794]

Mr. Jack: The information is in table 2, page 40, of the Commission report titled "Protection of the Community's Financial Interests: The Fight Against Fraud—1993 Annual Report", which was published on 23 March 1994. A copy was placed in the library.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the proportion of common agricultural policy spending that does not go to farmers but is (a) paid to middlemen who store unwanted surplus food and (b) is used to subsidise this surplus for export onto world markets. [15795]

Mr. Jack: Information on EC expenditure up to 1993 on intervention storage and on export refunds in contained in annexe 9 and annexe 5, respectively, of the annual financial reports of the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. These have been deposited in the Library of the House of Commons. For 1994, intervention storage accounted for 3.4 per cent. of total expenditure, and export refunds for 24.8 per cent. The corresponding figures for 1995, based on the draft supplementary and amending budget, are 3.5 per cent. and 19.6 per cent. respectively.

Cereal Farmers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cereal farmers in the United Kingdom last year received cash benefits in excess of £40,000 from the common agricultural policy; and what proportion received these benefits without growing anything. [15793]

Mr. Jack: Statistics on the distribution of payments under the arable area payments scheme are not yet available as the final oilseed payments are still being made. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures that he has requested are available.

EC Fresh Meat Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each member of the European Community the domestic legislation equivalent to the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992. [15640]

Mrs. Browning: I am placing the information in the Library.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at interdepartmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15638]

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15554]

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15572]

Mr. Jack: One of the principal aims of the Department is to work to reduce regulatory and administrative burdens on business. Each Minister has to pursue this objective in the policy areas for which they are responsible. My noble Friend the Earl Howe has particular responsibility for promoting deregulation in the Department.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15639]

Mr. Waldegrave: Since May 1992, the following political advisers have been appointed to my Department:

	Dates
Mr. Keith Adams	April 1992 to May 1993
Dr. Elizabeth Cotterell	May 1993 to July 1994
Mr. David Rutley	July 1994 to date

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of BSE cases in cattle born in each year since 1979. [15907]

Mrs. Browning: The following is a table which gives the contribution of BSE cases by year of birth. The data includes only cases with known dates of birth, cases with estimated dates of birth are therefore excluded.

Year	Number of cases
1980	102
1981	256
1982	1,381
1983	4,446
1984	7,994
1985	10,856
1986	19,122
1987	34,640
1988	19,494
1989	6,859
1990	1,070
1991	22

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the proportion of cattle and BSE has changed by age, and if this follows his Department's projections. [15908]

Mrs. Browning: The table shows the age specific incidence of confirmed cases of BSE in herds with homebred cases. The figures are in line with the Government's projections, and clearly show the impact of the action taken to prevent recycling of infection through feed. The increasing incidence in animals six years of age and older is as expected as these were predominantly born before July 1988.

[1] Herds with cases accumulateed by 5 January 1995.

[2] Partly influenced by feed ban.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the peak age of BSE detection in cattle born after the feed ban. [15909]

Mrs. Browning: The peak age of onset of BSE in cattle born after the ban is four years of age.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has to show the likelihood of a herd with a BSE case in one year developing another case the year after compared with herds unaffected by BSE. [15910]

Mrs. Browning: In 1993 17,201 herds had one or more cases of BSE confirmed of which 8,102 of these herds also had one or more cases confirmed in 1994. The likelihood of a herd with a BSE case one year developing another case the year after was therefore less than 50 per cent.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of (a) reported and (b) confirmed BSE cases by age group for 1994. [15911]

Mrs. Browning: The distribution of cases restricted and subsequently confirmed, by age at clinical onset is:

Age	Reported	Confirmed
0–1	3	0
1–2	43	0
2–3	274	12
3–4	984	429
4–5	4,256	3,502

18–19	1	0

The data include only cases with known dates of birth, cases with estimated dates are therefore excluded.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of British cattle, by age group, were tested for BSE in 1994; and what proportion of each herd were tested in 1994 for BSE. [15912]

Mrs. Browning: No cattle were tested for BSE in 1994. No test is yet available to identify BSE in the live animal.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of reported cases of BSE, the number of reported cases tested and the number of cases confirmed for each month from June 1988. [15913]

Mrs. Browning: It is not possible without incurring disproportionate costs to detail the number of reported cases of BSE and the number of confirmed cases of BSE for each month from June 1988. Information on the number of suspect cases reported and placed under restriction each week since the disease was made notifiable until 28 September 1994 is, however, contained in table 2 of the Government's latest BSE progress report.

No reported cases were tested during this period as no test is yet available to detect BSE in the live animal.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of compensation per bovine reported with BSE for each year since 1988. [15923]

Mrs. Browning: BSE compensation is not paid in respect of bovines reported with BSE. Compensation is paid in respect of animals suspected of being infected with BSE and which are compulsorily slaughtered under the Animal Health Act 1981 which requires the Government to compensate farmers for animals slaughtered at their behest.

It is not possible, without incurring disproportionate costs, to provide the level of compensation for each BSE suspect compulsorily slaughtered. However, the total amount of compensation paid in respect of BSE suspects slaughtered since 1988 is:

1988: £527,142
1989: £2,826,788
1990: £9,030,752
1991: £15,741,463
1992: £28,205,613
1993: £36,290,273
1994: £22,546,902

When a BSE suspect is compulsorily slaughtered the amount payable is an amount equal to the lower of either the market value of the animal or the appropriate monthly indicative market price.

The figures given do not include ex-gratia payments.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of herds, in each year since 1988, had reported cases of BSE in cattle aged (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four and (e) five years. [15925]

Mrs. Browning: It is not possible without incurring disproportionate costs to detail the percentage of herds in each year since 1988 which had reported cases of BSE in cattle aged one to five.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation he has made of the incidence of BSE in siblings of infected cattle compared with siblings of uninfected cattle. [15915]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 19 July 1994, Official Report, column 142.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has to identify BSE occurrence in cattle exported from the United Kingdom to Portugal. [15915]

Mrs. Browning: Portugal has reported six cases of BSE in cattle imported from the United Kingdom. Most of the Portuguese cases were born in that country.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of BSE cases in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, and (c) 1994; and what were his Department's projections for this period. [15916]

Mrs. Browning: Of the cases reported and placed under restriction in the calendar years 1992 and 1993, 36,680 and 34,371 cases respectively were confirmed. So far for 1994, 23,661 cases of BSE have been confirmed; there are, however, still some cases outstanding.

We do not make projections on the likely number of confirmed BSE cases. Projections are, however, made, for financial purposes only, on the number of BSE suspects that are likely to be slaughtered. The projections made for the financial years in question are:

Financial year	Estimated slaughterings	Actually placed under restriction	Of which slaughtered	Of which confirmed
1992–93	37,889	45,569	43,814	37,115
1993–94	40,000	40,501	38,589	32,050
1994–95	33,475	[1]25,119	[1]24,024	[1]17,586

[1] As at 23 March 1995. There will be further cases in all categories.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what comparisons his Department has made between the tissue distribution of spongiform encephalopathy in cattle and spongiform encephalopathy in sheep. [15922]

Mrs. Browning: The comparative distribution of infectivity in the tissues of cattle with BSE and sheep with scrapie is covered in detail in chapter 5, and specifically in table 5.2, of the spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee's September 1994 report "Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies—A Summary of Present Knowledge and Research", HMSO London, ISBN 011 242 9874. A copy of this report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his projection for the number of cattle detected with BSE at age five years in 1997. [15924]

Mrs. Browning: Estimates of the future number of cases are made for submission to the public expenditure survey to secure the necessary budget for compensation payments and the incineration of carcases. It is not possible to predict the occurrence of cases in birth cohorts which have not yet been affected, or to produce precise estimates of the details of future cases born in years such as 1991 for which there have been only a small number of cases. However, because BSE has already been confirmed in some animals born in 1991, it is likely that more 1991 born animals will succumb at five years of age during 1997.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the in-herd BSE rate and the national rate; and if he will make a statement. [15926]

Mrs. Browning: The national rate of BSE compared with the in-herd rate since 1988 is:

Year	National Percentage	Within herd Percentage
1988	0.08	1.78
1989	0.18	1.91
1990	0.35	2.16
1991	0.63	2.44
1992	0.92	2.72
1993	0.86	2.43
1994	0.59	2.05

Figures are not available for years prior to 1988.

The decline in incidence since 1993 reflects the effect the ruminant feed ban is having on the BSE epidemic. The absence of a rise in the in-herd incidence is a further indicator that horizontal transmission is not playing a significant role in the epidemic.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what comparison he has made of the incidence of (a) scrapie information in sheep and (b) BSE in cattle between 1979 and 1994. [15928]

Mrs. Browning: None. There is no direct link between scrapie infection in sheep and BSE in cattle.

BSE and scrapie were made notifiable in 1988 and 1993 respectively. Prior to this date, data on the incidences of these diseases were either not available or incomplete and cannot therefore be compared. By the time scrapie was made notifiable in 1993, the incidence of BSE was declining in response to the ruminant food ban which also applies to sheep. Any comparison of the subsequent incidences of the disease is, therefore, meaningless.

Epidemiological investigations into BSE did take into account the presence or absence of sheep on the farm, and indeed whether scrapie was present in any sheep flocks with which cattle came into contact either directly or indirectly. There was no evidence of a direct association between scrapie in sheep and BSE in cattle on the same farm.

Ruminant Protein Feed Ban

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has to quantify the amount of food banned to cattle which was previously fed to sheep. [15927]

Mrs. Browning: The ruminant protein feed ban prohibited the use of both bovine and ovine protein in feeds intended for bovines, ovines and other ruminants at the same time. The Government have no data on the amount of ant protein fed to sheep prior to the introduction of the ban. However, the industry has estimated that the amount of concentrated feed containing ruminant protein which was fed to sheep prior to the ban was in the region of 410,000 tonnes per annum. Meat and bone meal was included far less frequently in sheep rations than in feed intended for cattle.

MV Caroline

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what time the MV Caroline arrived at Brightlingsea port on 3 March; what time it docked and what time it was due to dock; what happened to the livestock whilst they were waiting for the MV Caroline to dock; if the animals were unloaded from the lorries, fed watered and rested in this period; if the 15-hour journey rule was adhered to; and if he will make a statement. [16002]

Mrs. Browning: On 3 March, the Caroline berthed at Brighlingsea at 23.10 hours. The animals—four truckloads of sheep and one of calves—had been conveyed to the port earlier because the police had been informed, incorrectly as it turned out, that the vessel would arrive on the previous tide.

The animals could not be returned to lairage, as the police could not guarantee safe passage through the crowd of protesters. Feeding of the lorryload of calves was successfully accomplished on the lorry. The attempt was made to unload the four truckloads of sheep, truck by truck, into a bunker area where they could be offered hay and water. However, this attempt had to be abandoned after reloading of the first lorry—completed at 19.30—because of the severe stress being caused to the sheep by their proximity to the noisy crowd of protesters who had broken through the outer gate.

The sheep were loaded into pens on board the Caroline, where hay and water was immediately available to them, between 23.45 and 01.20 hours. The 15-hour period since they had previously been fed and watered expired at 22.00 hours.

DEFENCE

Disposal Sales Agency

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) of 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1197, if he will make a statement on the progress of the Disposal Sales Agency towards the meeting of its targets. [15810]

Mr. Freeman: The Disposal Sales Agency is progressing well in meeting its targets. The agency's achievements will be published in its 1994–95 annual report, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the publications produced by his Department or the Disposal Sales Agency to assist in the sale of surplus equipment; and if he will place a copy of these in the Library. [15785]

Mr. Freeman: Brochures for specific items, usually describing a particular ship, produced by the Disposal Sales Agency are classified and cannot, therefore, be placed in the Library. General brochures, which publicise the availability of various commodities coming up for sale in the near future, are unclassified; I will be arranging for copies of these to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number and location of staff serving the Disposal Sales Agency; if he will give the staff budget for the current financial year; and if he will express the staff costs as a percentage of the operating costs. [15807]

Mr. Freeman: At the end of financial year 1994–95, the number of staff serving in the Disposal Sales Agency will be 65 in the UK and 30 in Germany. The sales function in Germany has recently been contractorised, and staff numbers will reduce to 12 by 30 September 1995.

The staff budget for the current financial year is £2.94 million; staff costs amount to 50 per cent. of the operating costs.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the costs expended and (b) the receipts accrued by the Disposal Sales Agency from the start of the 1994 financial year to the last month for which figures are available. [15783]

Mr. Freeman: The answers are:

Costs expended 1 April 1994 to 28 March 1995: £3.3 million

Receipts accrued 1 April 1998 to 28 February 1995: £63.5 million

Surplus Equipment Sales

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the procedures for the sale of surplus Ministry of Defence equipment through auctioneers, term contractors and joint venture partners; and if he will give a statement. [15809]

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General, report 557—"Disposal by Sale of Defence Surplus Equipment and Stores", and to the minutes of evidence taken before the Committee of Public Accounts on 26 January 1994.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list, by volume and type, the surplus (a) furniture or household items, (b) clothing, (c) plant, machinery or tools, (d) electrical goods, (e) electronic goods, (f) computer equipment, (g) ships, (h) aircraft, (i) tanks and (j) vehicles sold to preservation groups in the last year for which information is available; if he will identify the groups involved; and if he will give the total receipts for each category of item; [15805]

(2) if he will list, by volume and type, the surplus (a) furniture or household items, (b) clothing, (c) plant, machinery or tools, (d) electrical goods, (e) electronic goods, (f) computer equipment, (g) ships, (h) aircraft, (i) tanks, (j) vehicles and (k) other items sold to commercial companies in the last year for which information is available; if he will identify the companies involved; and if he will give the total receipts for each category of item; [15804]

(3) if he will list, by volume and type, the surplus (a) furniture or household items, (b) clothing, (c) plant, machinery or tools, (d) electrical goods, (e) electronic goods, (f) computer equipment, (g) ships, (h) aircraft, (i) tanks, (j) vehicles and (k) other items sold to private individuals in the last year for which information is available; if he will identify the companies involved; and if he will give the total receipts for each category of item. [15806]

Mr. Freeman: The Disposal Sales Agency currently has around 4,000 interested parties on its trades lists, covering 51 main commodity ranges further segmented into commodity types. In addition, several thousand customers attend auction sales throughout the country where approximately 40,000 lots are sold annually.

To break this information down by volume and type, to identify the purchasers and to give total receipts for each category of item would incur disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the auctioneers, term contractors and joint venture partners currently involved in the sale of surplus Ministry of Defence equipment. [15808]

Mr. Freeman: The list is as follows:

Mr. Freeman: The answer is as follows.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the percentage share of the world market for surplus military equipment enjoyed by the United Kingdom; and if he will publish a table showing, in order, the top 10 nations that export surplus military equipment. [15812]

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom enjoyed a 4 per cent. share of the world market for surplus military equipment over the five years 1990–94.

Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 25 January, Official Report, columns 285–86, if he will list the location of overseas staff employed by the Defence Export Services Organisation; if he will list the number employed in each country; what is the total annual cost of keeping staff overseas; and if he will make a statement. [15786]

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

In addition, there are 54 Disposal Sales Agency staff based in Germany, whose costs are not separately identified from UK-based DSA staff, and 83 project management staff whose costs are paid by the overseas customer on whose behalf the project management work is undertaken.

Army Base Repair Organisation Ashford

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement on the future of ABRO, Ashford; and if he will make a statement. [15756]

Mr. Freeman: The decision on the future of support from ABRO facilities has been delayed due to the complex nature of the issue it raises and to allow for a very full consultation process. I hope to announce a decision shortly.

Specialist Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at inter-departmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15634]

Mr. Soames: Special advisers are members of the civil service, have the same conditions of service as civil servants and are subject to the same rules and conduct as other civil servants, with certain limited exceptions. They have facilities appropriate to their duties.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15635]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is given below:

Perry Miller (already in post May 1992)
Crispin Blunt (appointed February 1993)

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15562]

Mr. Freeman: The MOD does not have any targets for withdrawing regulations because it is not a regulator of business or responsible for any primary or secondary legislation under which regulations are made with a significant impact on business.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15568]

Mr. Freeman: The MOD is not a regulatory department but is playing a full part in the Government's deregulation initiative, principally by simplifying its dealing with industry wherever possible. The MOD's departmental report contains a standing objective to meet Government requirements, such as deregulation.

Official Service Residences

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the findings of Sir Peter Cazalet's investigation into official service residences. [15962]

Mr. Soames: Sir Peter's Cazalet's report on "Representational Entertainment in the Forces" is expected to be submitted to the Ministry of Defence shortly after Easter. I shall make a further statement when it has been received and my Department has had an opportunity to consider it.

Service Personnel (Suicide)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 522 to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), what consideration he gave to including in his answer a reference to Sergeant Robin Feddon, as raised in his statement on 26 July 1993, Official Report, column 976-80; and if he will reconsider his Answer in respect of other claimed cases of suicide of Gulf war veterans serving in Germany. [14933]

Mr. Soames: My answer of 14 March about the number of Gulf war veterans who have committed suicide was unfortunately incorrect since it did not take account of the suicide of Sergeant Feddon. Our records are being checked and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) as soon as possible to set the record straight.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United Kingdom forces or logistical back-up have been made available to Turkey to support (a) internal and (b) external military operations; and if he will make a statement. [16684]

Mr. Soames: Turkey is a NATO ally. Along with other allies, the UK gives support in a number of ways, including through NATO collective funds which support a range of military facilities in all NATO nations to meet NATO operational requirements.

Ballistic Missile Defence

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the pre-feasibility study on ballistic missile defence; and when he expects to receive a copy of the report. [16539]

Mr. Freeman: Work progresses on the pre-feasibility study for ballistic missile defence. A report will be made available to Ministers in the autumn of 1996 and will include the results of the pre-feasibility and associated studies.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procurement plans he has for ballistic missile defence; and if he will make a statement. [16538]

Mr. Freeman: It is too early to make a statement on procurement plans for BMD. However, the results of the BMD pre-feasibility study programme will inform UK BMD policy and thus UK procurement plans. Announcements will be made as data become available and the options for BMD become clearer.

TRANSPORT

British Rail

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total sum refunded by British Rail following claims under the citizens charter.

Mr. Watts: The latest BR figures show that, up to 12 November 1994, £8.6 million has been paid to passengers claiming compensation under BR's passengers charter.

M25

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what explanation he has received from the Highways Agency for its delay in submitting a scheme for motorway link roads between the Chertsey and Wisley junctions on the M25. [14901]

Mr. Watts: The Highways Agency is looking at a range of options for providing additional capacity between junctions 10 and 12 of the M25 motorway. It will submit its recommendations on the scheme following completion of this work.

Rail Modernisation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold discussions with Railtrack about the time remaining before modernisation; and how the Government can help in the process. [15683]

Mr. Watts: I meet Railtrack regularly to discuss west coast main line modernisation and other important projects. On 21 March 1995 I announced approval for the letting of a contract for the development of the signalling system for the WCML project.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of Railtrack's feasibility study team analysis of whether to modernise the rail network; when the work began; what studies have been completed in this time; and what factors governed the time scale of the inquiry. [15682]

Mr. Watts: The feasibility study for the modernisation of the west coast main line was started on 24 March 1994. This study was completed, on time, in December 1994. The time scale for the study was driven by the scale of the task involved. The cost of the study is a commercial issue for Railtrack.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what factors led to the granting to Railtrack of permission to study the west coast main line; what consideration was given to asking an independent body to undertake the study; to what supervision Railtrack is subjected in the course of the study; and what independent study will be carried out before the franchising director adopts Railtrack's recommendation; [15685]

(2) what has been the involvement of (a) the franchising director and (b) the Secretary of State in Railtrack's recent study of rail modernisation. [15684]

Mr. Watts: The project was awarded to a consortium of private sector organisations following a competition. Ministers and the franchising director have been kept closely in touch with progress on the study. The franchising director is currently discussing its conclusions with prospective franchisees.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at interdepartmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15606]

Dr. Mawhinney: Special advisers are members of the civil service, have the same conditions of service as civil servants and are subject to the same rules of conduct as other civil servants, with certain limited exceptions. They have facilities appropriate to their duties.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15576]

Dr. Mawhinney: One of the aims of this Department is to work to reduce the burden of unnecessary regulation. Each Minister has to pursue this objective in the policy areas for which he is responsible. There is also a Minister with particular responsibility for promoting deregulation in the Department.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15549]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs.

Road Tunnels

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the location, length in metres and cost of all road tunnels (a) constructed by his Department in each of the past 10 years and (b) proposed for construction in future with estimated cost. [15681]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Robert Key, dated 27 March 1995:

As you know, Mr. John Watts, the Minister for Railways and Roads has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will list the location, length in metres and cost of all road tunnels (a) constructed by his Department in each of the past 10 years and (b) proposed for construction in future with estimated cost. This is attached.

You will understand that any simple cost comparisons, based on tunnel length, could be very misleading given the many differing factors which will apply in each case—tunnel location (urban/rural region), geological and groundwater conditions, total lane width and construction method (bored NATM or cut and cover etc).

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15607]

Dr. Mawhinney: Mrs. E. F. Laing was appointed as political adviser from 13 April 1992 to 20 July 1994. Mr. M. G. E. Simmonds has been appointed as political adviser since 24 October 1994.

Delayed Rail Journeys

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions during each of the last four years rail journeys have been delayed as a result of either poor weather or criminal activity affecting overhead electrical power supply. [15749]

Mr. Watts: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

A303

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up a round table conference to consider improvements to the A303 at Stonehenge; and if he will make a statement. [15929]

Mr. Watts: I hope to do so and will announce the arrangements later in the year.

Ship Loading Hours

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many hours a day it is (a) possible and (b) permissible for a ship the size of the MV Caroline to be loaded with goods brought in by heavy lorries at Brightlingsea docks. [16001]

Mr. Norris: The statutory powers of the Brightlingsea harbour commission do not specify hours within which vessels have to be loaded with goods.

Bilateral Aviation Agreements

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made on UK/USA bilateral aviation agreements; and if he will make a statement. [16673]

Mr. Norris: Formal UK/USA aviation talks took place in London from 22 to 24 March. Various proposals designed to increase competition in air services between the two countries were discussed. The talks are due to continue in Washington on 10 April.

British Transport Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the Home Office on extending the powers and jurisdiction of the British Transport police; and if he will make a statement. [16301]

Mr. Watts: None.

Scottish Rail Services

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of representations which he has received from Highlands and Islands Enterprise in respect of the highlands to London sleeper and Motorail services; if he will place in the Library a copy of the economic assessment which he has made of the impact of the withdrawal of such services; and if he will make a statement. [15142]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend has recently received a letter from the chairman of Highlands and Islands Enterprise. A copy of that letter has been placed in the Library.

The withdrawal of the London-Fort William sleeper and Motorail service with effect from 28 May is a commercial decision by the British Railways Board. The franchising director will take account of any representations on the economic impact of the withdrawal of this service within the context of his consultation with the Scottish regional councils and the rail users consultative council on the draft passenger service requirement for ScotRail later this year.

Roads (Co-ordination)

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who is responsible for co-ordinating road openings by local authorities, utilities and the Highways Agency. [15510]

Mr. Watts: The duty of co-ordination, under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, falls on the relevant street authority—the Highways Agency, on behalf of the Secretary of State, for motorways and trunk roads, the local highway authority for all other roads maintainable at public expense, and the street managers for private streets. The duty extends to co-ordination with other street authorities when the works affect roads for which those authorities are responsible.

Southend Lane, London

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department will approve the funding for the bridge works at Southend lane, London SE26, and when he expects the road improvement scheme to commence and finish. [16175]

Mr. Norris: A scheme including the reconstruction of the bridge was not successful in Lewisham's transport policies and programme bid for 1995–96. The Government office for London is discussing with Lewisham how the proposals might be modified for consideration in next year's submission. Nothing definite can be said at present about the funding or timing of the scheme.

Trans-European Road Network

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if United Kingdom roads designated trans-European road network roads may benefit from EU funding. [15977]

Mr. Watts: Schemes to upgrade existing UK roads or construct missing links designated part of the trans-European road network may benefit from EU funding under the trans-European networks budget line, when the draft financial regulation currently under discussionis adopted. The draft regulation provides for support up to a maximum of 10 per cent. of total investment costs.

Roads (Recycled Materials)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what use is made in new road building of recycled material from old roads. [15890]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 27 March 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for the Environment, what use is made in new road building of recycled material from old roads.

It is government policy to encourage conservation and facilitate the use of reclaimed materials to reduce pressure on sources of primary aggregates and obtain environmental benefits. Wherever practical the Highways Agency provides the opportunity in trunk road contracts for including recycled materials from old roads in new road construction. Our requirements for materials are set out in the Specification for Highway Works published by HMSO. material from old roads can be used in a variety of ways. it can be incorporated within road foundations as a fill material, be used as an aggregate within either bituminous or cement bound layers, or as in the case of bituminous planings be mixed with new bitumen and aggregate for use in road construction or maintenance.

Since 1992 up to 10% of new surfacing can be drawn from reclaimed bituminous material such as planings from old roads. Following the results of further research, this summer we are raising the percentage allowable to 30% for certain bituminous materials,. We also permit a wide range of options for reuse and recycling of old concrete roads, indeed crushed concrete is highly valued as an aggregate by the construction industry. The Highways Agency is shortly to publish new advice on the conservation and use of reclaimed materials in road construction and maintenance which highlights the scope for reuse and recycling and is aimed at encouraging a greater awareness of the opportunities available.

No central records are kept of actual quantities of old road material used in new roads. However, the DOE's Mineral Planning Guidance MPG6, published in April 1994, indicated that 80% of road planings, for example,were recycled in some form. Not all of this will be in roads as planings are in great demand for use on parking areas, footpaths and farm accesses. Estimates suggest that there are around 7–8 million tonnes of bituminous road planings produced each year.

Marchioness

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up a public inquiry into the sinking of the Marchioness in order to resolve issues of public importance which have not been settled either by criminal or civil proceedings or by inquest procedures. [15906]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 March 1995]: We do not believe that it would be appropriate or necessary to set up a public inquiry into the loss of the Marchioness. The marine accident investigation branch has carried out a full and thorough investigation into the disaster and its report has been published. The inquest into the deaths of those who died in the disaster has not yet been concluded.

Speed Limiters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to act upon excessive speeds of commercial vehicles reported under section 11 of his "Road Traffic Statistics Great Britain 1994". [16250]

Mr. Norris: Speed limiters will be fitted to coaches and new heavy goods vehicles by 1 January 1996.

Insurance Policy Discs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require all vehicles to display a current insurance policy disc on the windscreen in addition to tax discs. [16270]

Mr. Norris: As explained in answers given by my predecessor on 23 June 1993, Official Report, columns 171–72, and 1 February 1994, Official Report, column 628, there would be practical problems associated with a windscreen insurance disc system. However, we continue to take the problem of uninsured driving very seriously and are discussing with the industry various possible measures, including windscreen discs which might reduce the level of evasion of insurance requirements.

Stansted Airport

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if people living near Stansted airport can continue to rely on the assurances given in the 1985 White Paper that a second main runway would not be constructed. [16381]

Dr. Mawhinney: The 1985 White Paper stated that, on demand forecasts at the time, it was not possible to justify such a runway in the foreseeable future. On current demand forecasts, I do not see a second runway as a realistic prospect and that is why my response to the runway capacity in the south-east group made no reference to it.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16548]

Mr. Norris: The number of press officers in the Department is currently 11. This compares with 10 in 1984. Before that date the information division was a common service of the Department of Transport, Department of Environment and Property Services Agency. Figures prior to 1984 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 28 March 1995

TREASURY

Russia (Loans)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the sizes of current and projected International Monetary Fund loans to Russia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Special drawing rights 719 million was drawn under a first credit tranche stand-by arrangements approved in August 1992. Loans totalling SDR 2,156 billion were made in the form of purchases under the systemic transformation facility in July 1993 and April 1994.

The IMF board will shortly be considering a request from the Russian Federation for a stand-by arrangement equivalent to SDR 4,313.1 million.

Schedule D

Mr. Berry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the yearly gross taxation revenue, and net tax yield after allowance under schedule D from 714s and SC60s over the last five years. [16394]

Sir George Young: It is impossible to provide details of the tax revenue, gross or net, from 714-holding subcontractors. But deductions made by contractors from payment to subcontractors, on account of tax and national insurance contributions, which are paid over to the Revenue under the SC60 system have been running at about £1 billion per annum over the last five years. Part of this will be repayable to the subcontractors, although the amount is unquantifiable.

South Thames TEC

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue proposes to petition for the compulsory winding-up of South Thames training and enterprise council. [16298]

Sir George Young: The normal rules of Inland Revenue confidentiality preclude provision of information about the affairs of named individuals and entities.

Bank of England

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what part is played by the Bank of England in determining monetary policy; and if he will make a statement; [16987]

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that public pronouncements by officials of the Bank of England purporting to state or interpret Government policy are submitted to his office for prior approval. [16989]

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England is an important source of advice to the Government on monetary policy. The advice the Governor gives at his monthly meeting with my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor is now open to parliamentary and public scrutiny through publication of the minutes. The bank also publishes its own independent inflation report. However, all monetary policy decisions are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions Her Majesty's Customs and Excise investigated the importation of obscene material in the five years prior to 1993–94; and in how many of these cases prosecutions resulted. [16798]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is not available in that form. Centrally collated statistics for the period prior to 1991–92 do not distinguish between cases detected and cases where, following a detection, a full investigation was undertaken. In many cases when the detection involved only very small quantities of prohibited material a full investigation would not be justified and offence action is confined to the seizure of the offending goods.

Between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1993 the following numbers of individuals were prosecuted by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in connection with importation of indecent or obscene material:

April 1988—March 1989: 105
April 1989—March 1990: 98
April 1990—March 1991: 88
April 1991—March 1992: 52
April 1992—March 1993: 48

From 1 April 1991 records have been kept centrally on the numbers of full investigations which have followed from Customs detections and the following information is available. Between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1993 Customs launched full investigations in the following numbers of cases of importation of obscene or indecent material:

April 1991—March 1992: 106
April 1992—March 1993: 94

National Fund

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present value and status of the national fund; and what was the effect of the recent collapse of Barings on the valuation of the fund. [16802]

Mr. Nelson: The value of the national fund at 16 March 1995 was £114 million. The trustees of the fund are Baring Brothers and Co Ltd. The valuation of the fund has not been affected by the recent collapse of Barings.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the last White Paper was produced which covered the latest position of the national fund. [16804]

Mr. Nelson: The last White Paper which covered the latest position of the national fund was produced in December 1984, giving a statement of the progress of the fund during the years ended 31 March 1982 and 31 March 1983.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what fee or other monetary benefit is obtained periodically by the trustees of the national fund. [16806]

Mr. Nelson: A management fee is paid annually to the trustees. In the financial year 1992–93 the fee amounted to £118,719.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the trustees of the national fund, following the takeover of Barings by ING Bank of the Netherlands. [16801]

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor has no powers to change the trustees of the national fund. The trustees were chosen by the original donor who provided anonymously the gift which established the fund in 1927.

Tax Fraud

Mr. Pope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue staff are currently employed in the prevention of tax fraud; and what was the financial benefit of such work in the last financial year for which figures are available. [16824]

Sir George Young: It is not possible to identify the number of Inland Revenue staff engaged purely in the prevention of tax fraud. But about 4,500 staff were involved in counter-evasion work—including the investigation of suspected fraud—during the year 1993–94. The total yield from this work was approximately £1.5 billion.

Smuggled Drugs

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of smuggled drugs seized by Customs officers in Wales in each of the last three years. [16843]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs officers operate within geographically-based Executive units called collections. Wales is covered by two collections: South Wales and Borders; and Liverpool. It is therefore difficult to give accurate statistics for Wales as a whole. However, the street level value of seized drugs for the Welsh locations in these collections for each of the past three years is:

Year	1992 £	1993 £	1994 £
Value	768,261	15,385,870	38,926,638

National Debt

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the value of the national debt for each year since 1965. [16805]

Mr. Aitken: The table shows the national debt, in nominal terms and as a percentage of GDP, at the end of each financial year since 1965.

Trusts

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to amend the Trustee Investments Act 1961 to relax the proportion of wider to narrower range investments for all trusts in line with the change announced for charities. [17105]

Mr. Nelson: I am able to announce that the Government intend to undertake a consultation exercise to establish the views of trustees, and other interested parties, on the proposal to amend the Trustee Investments Act 1961 to increase the proportion of wider to narrower range investments from 50:50 to 75:25 for all trusts. A consultation document has been issued for this purpose.

Bank of England Deputy Governor

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he intends to consult with members of the official Opposition on the appointment of a replacement deputy governor of the Bank of England; [16302]

(2) what account is taken of conflicts of interest in appointing a replacement deputy governor to the Bank of England; [16304]

(3) if the contract for the appointment of a replacement deputy governor of the Bank of England will preclude severance, redundancy, or ex-gratia payments for termination of appointment for loss of earnings during any remaining contract period after the next general election; [16303]

(4) if he will publish the terms and conditions of the contract in the case of the appointment and employment of the replacement deputy governor of the Bank of England. [16305]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The appointment and employment of the deputy governor is covered by the Bank of England Act 1946 and the bank's charter. The deputy governor is required to give his exclusive services to the bank. The terms and conditions of employment of the deputy governor are matters for the bank's court of directors who act on the advice of the remuneration committee of non-executive directors. It is not the bank's practice to publish details beyond what is included on remuneration in the bank's annual reports and accounts.

It is not the practice to consult members of the official Opposition about appointments of deputy governors of the Bank of England.

Advice Centres

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 240, what factors led him to decide against considering relief on VAT on fuel for advice centres. [16637]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 27 March 1995]: As a general principle, selective reliefs from VAT, such as that suggested for advice centres, would complicate the operation and administration of the VAT system; create borderlines which would be difficult to define and so become matters of ambiguity and dispute; and cause inequity of treatment. Selective reliefs of this sort are therefore an unwelcome feature of any tax system.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15560]

Sir George Young [holding answer 27 March 1995]: Inland Revenue's and Customs and Excise's current management plans give the Department's deregulation objectives which are also reflected at all planning levels within each department. Copies are available in the Library.

The Treasury's latest departmental report—Cm 2817—sets out the department's mission and strategic objectives. These include strengthening the long-term performance of the economy by improving the use of resources and the efficiency of markets. Deregulation is a key ingredient.

Each Treasury Minister pursues deregulation in the policy areas for which he is responsible. I am the Minister with special responsibility for promoting deregulation across all the Chancellor's Departments.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15557]

Sir George Young [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 27 March 1995, Official Report, column 435, by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many press officers there are in (a) his Department, excluding the Overseas Development Administration, and (b) the Overseas Development Administration currently; and what the figures were in 1979. [16562]

Mr. Goodlad: There are currently nine press officers employed in the FCO news department compared with 11 in 1979.

The comparable figures for the ODA press office are three and three.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16292]

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO diplomatic wing spent £17.6 million in 1993–94 on various forms of publicity about Britain, almost entirely for use overseas. Virtually all this sum was for products and services supplied either by the Central Office of Information or the private sector.

Only £390,000 was for publicity material intended primarily for distribution in the United Kingdom, of which consular advice and information accounted for £295,000. Contracts with the private sector were for the printing and production of booklets ad leaflets.

The ODA spent £448,000 in 1993–94 on editorial work, publications and exhibitions. £105,000 of this was for private sector contract for set-up costs and organisation of the mobile exhibition as part of a regional campaign to promote awareness of overseas development issues.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16273]

Mr. Goodlad: This Department has not issued guidance in respect of the employment of public relations companies.

The FCO diplomatic wing's agency—the Wilton Park conference centre—uses the FCO's standard guidance on purchasing and supply and its senior staff have participated in relevant FCO training courses. The aid wing's agency—the National Resource Institute, uses similar guidance from the Overseas Development Administration. The FCO has not provided its public bodies with guidance on tendering.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the exact dates of ministerial visits to Indonesia since 1 January 1990 (a) naming the Ministers and (b) the reason for the visit in each case. [16508]

Mr. Goodlad: As part of our efforts to promote good bilateral relations with the Governments of south east Asia, Foreign Office Ministers visited Indonesia from 14 to 18 June 1990—Lord Brabazon—28 April to 2 May 1991—Lord Caithness—12 to 15 October 1992—Mr. Goodlad—3 to 5 April 1993—Secretary of State—and 6 to 7 April 1994—Mr. Goodlad.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Indonesia about the arrest of three non-Governmental organisations activists from the Alliance of Independent Journalists and one from PIJAR, between 10 March and 17 March in Jakarta; and when he next intends to raise these cases with the Government of Indonesia. [16504]

Mr. Goodlad: Our embassy staff in Jakarta are following developments in these cases closely. Once we are fully aware of the facts, we will decide, in consultation with EU partners, whether an approach to the Indonesian authorities would be appropriate.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had on the issue of the human rights record of Indonesia, with particular reference to East Timor when he last met Senator Gareth Evans, Foreign Secretary of the Federal Government of Australia. [16416]

Mr. Goodlad: It is not our practice to disclose details of such discussions.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the judges for the international tribunal for Rwanda are to be selected; and what United Kingdom involvement there will be at (a) the judicial and (b) any other level. [16602]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary General has invited states to nominate candidates as judges of the trial chambers of the international criminal court for Rwanda. Nominations will be forwarded to the Security Council which will draw up a shortlist of between 12 and 18 candidates. From that list the General Assembly will elect six judges.

We are currently seeking to identify a candidate for a judge's position. We are also looking for personnel to work within the prosecutor's office.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which states have indicated their willingness to accept responsibility for the custody of convicted persons from the Rwanda genocide tribunal. [16600]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The statute of the international criminal tribunal for Rwanda states:

> "Imprisonment shall be served in Rwanda or any of the States on a list of States which have indicated to the Security Council their willingness to accept convicted persons, as designated by the International Tribunal for Rwanda."

States have not yet been called upon to indicate whether they are willing to detain convicted persons.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the UN authorities to prevent the training of Hutu militiamen in or near Rwandan refugee camps in Zaire. [16599]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is working in partnership with the Government of Zaire to ensure security in the camps. We have contributed £0.5 million towards the costs of the international liaison group established to oversee the agreement. The United Nations has no mandate to take further action within Zaire as the Government of Zaire are responsible for the governance of their own territory.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Governments have made contributions to the trust fund for the international tribunal for Rwanda. [16601]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Contributions to the trust fund for the international tribunal for Rwanda have been pledged or contributed by Switzerland, New Zealand, Chile, Norway, the USA, Israel and Lebanon.

The United Kingdom has pledged £200,000 towards the cost of seconding British personnel to the tribunal.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16646]

Mr. Goodlad: Publication and marketing of the FCO's—including the ODA—1995 departmental report, cover price £16.70, are the responsibility of HMSO.

Some 2,000 copies of the report were distributed directly by the FCO to the House of Commons Foreign Affairs Committee, key contacts within Government and aid organisations overseas, the media and members of staff. The FCO and ODA spent £33,023 on art work for the 1995 report.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16647]

Mr. Goodlad: Publication and marketing of the FCO's—including the Overseas Development Administration—Departmental report are the responsibility of HMSO.

Departmental Reports were published for the first time in 1991. The cost in real terms of art work for the last three years of publication was as follows:

1993: £17,524
1994: £26,333
1995: £33,023

Figures for previous years are not available.

Iraq

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress the Government of Iraq has made in identifying the fate of Kuwaitis missing since the Gulf war. [16607]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraq has submitted its initial findings on a number of the 607 International Committee of the Red Cross case files on the detainees passed to Iraq over two years ago. The response has not been sufficient to enable any of the files to be closed. We have made clear to the Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister that the lack of progress to date is unacceptable. The United Kingdom will continue to play a role in the tripartite commission and its technical sub-committee set up last December to speed up the review of ICRC case files.

Stability Pact

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU conference on regional stability held in Paris. [15687]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The stability pact concluding conference which took place in Paris on 20–21 March was attended by all participating States of the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe. The Pact's aim has been to help nine prospective members of the EU—Czech Republic, Slovakia, Poland, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania—resolve problems, especially concerning frontiers and minorities, before enlargement, by promoting good neighbourliness on the basis of OSCE principles. The conference adopted the stability pact and transferred it to the OSCE which is entrusted with its implementation. The EU joint action under the common foreign and security policy has now been successfully completed.

Mr. Stephen Crouch

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 February what was the nature of the discussions which took place with Mr. Stephen Crouch at the British Embassy in Amman in September 1994. [16722]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No discussions were held at the British embassy, Amman in September 1994 between officials and Mr. Stephen Crouch. A member of the embassy staff encountered Mr. Crouch at a reception in honour of Qatar's national day. No issues of substance were discussed.

Foreign Affairs Council

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held in Brussels on 6 March 1995. [17205]

There was a further discussion of EDF VIII. No agreement was reached.

Agreement was reached on the abolition of quotas for ACP light rum and rum from the overseas countries and territories—OCT. A reduction of excise tax was also approved for exports of rum from the French overseas departments to metropolitan France. A quota on ACP traditional rum was set at 58,000 hectolitres, rising by 3,000 hectolitres each year before abolition in the year 2000. A declaration proposing support for Spanish sugar producers was remitted to COREPER for further discussion.

The Council agreed by qualified majority, with only Spain voting against, to increase the Community quotas on imports from China, to take account of the Community's enlargement. Some of the quotas were redefined, to exclude products not made in the Community such as work gloves and certain sports footwear. The quotas on toys were further increased as originally proposed by the Commission in July 1994.

The Council confirmed its support for Signor Renato Ruggiero's candidature for the director-generalship of the World Trade Organisation, and issued a declaration urging others to support him in the current round of consultations in Geneva.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) of 17 March, Official Report, column 726, relating to legal aid provision, how the merits of the case are assessed; and in what ways and by what process the relevant guidelines can be modified. [16797]

Mr. John M. Taylor: An applicant for civil legal aid must satisfy the board that he has reasonable grounds for taking, defending or being a party to the proceedings. It must also be reasonable in all the circumstances of the case for legal aid to be granted. This second test permits legal aid to be refused if, for example, the potential financial benefits of litigation seem unlikely to outweigh the probable cost to public funds. The basic merits test is set out in section 15 of the Legal Aid Act 1988, supplemented by the Civil Legal Aid (General) Regulations 1989. In addition, the Legal Aid Board issues guidance on the merits test which is published in the "Legal Aid Handbook". The guidance is amended by the Legal Aid Board when this seems appropriate.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much money has been paid in legal aid for persons whose cases (a) are being considered and (b) are in the stages prior to being considered by (i) the European Court of Justice and (ii) the European Court of Human Rights; and if he will list the number of (1) cases and (2) people involved. [16809]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the amount of legal aid paid to Mr. Gordon Foxley. [15448]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total amount of legal aid paid to lawyers acting on behalf of Mr. Gordon Foxley was £160,228, including VAT. This amount also includes disbursements and other expenses necessarily incurred by the solicitors acting in this case.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if Mr. Gordon Foxley disclosed assets held overseas in his aplication for legal aid. [15449]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Applications for legal aid in criminal proceedings are considered by the court. Section 38 of the Legal Aid Act 1988 prevents the disclosure by the court of any information given to it in connection with a legal aid application.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Financial Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cost to the benevolent fund of donations for charitable purposes in (a) England and (b) Great Britain in the last 10 years. [16905]

1985: £31,554

1992: £161,318
1993: £149,436
1994: £168,293 (subject to audit)

Payments were made to charitable causes in Lancashire, Greater Manchester or Merseyside or those with Duchy connections in the remainder in England. The figures for Great Britain are the same.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what deductions were made to cover the Duchy's Palatinate and special costs from the total sums paid to the Duchy of Lancaster in the last four years. [16903]

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

1991: £406,882
1992: £474,933
1993: £564,367
1994: £580,322

The Duchy solicitors costs of administering devolutions were included in the costs of Palatinate administration and historical obligations in the figures in the parliamentary accounts in 1991 and 1992. In 1993 and 1994 they were shown separately and have therefore been added to the costs for those years.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the income to the Duchy of Lancaster from devolutions in the last four years. [16902]

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

1991: £938,597
1992: £1,053,121
1993: £1,069,028
1994: £960,295

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the total amounts transferred to the benevolent fund in each of the last four years. [16906]

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

1991: £531,715
1992: £578,188
1993: £504,661
1994: £379,973

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cost to the benevolent fund of donations for charitable purposes in Lancashire in the last 10 years. [16904]

Mr. David Hunt: To calculate figures for the county of Lancashire for the last 10 years would involve disproportionate cost. However, figures for the Counties of Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside—the Duchy area—are as follows:

1985: £21,500
1986: £29,000
1987: £47,180
1988: £59,180
1989: £75,656
1990: £88,518
1991: £93,607
1992: £121,944
1993: £127,225
1994: £148,819 (subject to audit)

Central Office of Information

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the expenditure on behalf of Government Departments and agencies by the Central Office of Information for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices; and whether he will provide a breakdown to show the division between (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) all other advertising and publicity. [16725]

Mr. Horam: Expenditure by the Central Office of Information on behalf of Government Departments and agencies is set out in the following table. An analysis of expenditure in the form requested is not available for years prior to 1984–85.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the deterrent effects of reported charges by Government Departments or other public bodies in respect of applications for the release of information under the code of practice on access to Government information. [15991]

Mr. David Hunt: The great majority of requests for information under the code of practice have been answered without charge. Charges have been made only where requests have required significant additional work. These arrangements reflect the principle that charges should strike an appropriate balance between the interests of the applicant and those of the taxpayer.

The explanatory leaflet on the code of practice makes clear that charges will not be made without the applicant's being notified in advance and asked if they wish to proceed.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16554]

Mr. Horam: There are currently 10 press officers in my Department. This figure does not include press officers within the Central Office of Information.

My Department did not exist in any comparable format before May 1992 and figures for 1979 are, therefore, not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Astra plc

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of his officials, including Ministers, who have been in contact with the Ministry of Defence in relation to the attempt by directors to obtain their own copies of documents relating to Astra plc; and if he will list those Ministry of Defence Ministers or officials contacted. [16997]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I am not aware of any contact in this respect between Minister and officials in my Department and Ministers and officials in my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence's Department.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has received of former directors of Astra plc being denied access of their own copies of the board minutes of the Astra Group of companies during the course of his inspectors inquiry. [16996]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None.

Company Directors' Documents

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the policy of his Department in relation to the availability to directors of companies who are subject to a DTI inspectors investigation of their own personal copies of the board minutes and related documents; and if he will make a statement. [16995]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Inspectors appointed under the Companies Act 1985 are primarily concerned with company records. Where documents are referred to in the questioning by the inspectors of directors or others, the usual practice is for the inspectors to provide copies or allow sight of such documents. The inspectors might ask to see personal papers of directors if, for example, the company's records are incomplete or if they are considered otherwise relevant.

Deregulation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what potential he sees for the use of the order making power as set out in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to reduce the burden on small businesses. [16672]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government recognise that small businesses are particularly vulnerable to over-regulation, whether arising from legislative provisions, administrative requirements or enforcement. The deregulation order-making power provides a useful new means of reducing burdens arising form primary legislation.

A list of potential candidates for the use of the power was included in the publication "Cutting Red Tape", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. We would welcome any suggestions for further ways in which the power could be used to reduce burdens on business—and particularly small business—arising from primary legislation.

Rugby Radio Station

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many persons who have been employed at Rugby radio station are known to have developed cancer.

Mr. Ian Taylor: This is a matter for the board of British Telecommunications.

Classified Directory Advertising

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will consider referring "Thomsons Yellow Pages" and the market in directory advertising to the Director General of Fair Trading; [16484]

(2) what assessments he has made of the competitiveness of the market in directory advertising for small businesses; [16483]

(3) if he will insist on the introduction of compensation schemes for small businesses whose entries in advertising directories are published inaccurately. [16485]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The market for the supply of classified directory advertising services was referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission by the Director General of Fair Trading on 1 March. The MMC is due to report to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade by 29 December. It would be inappropriate for me to comment until the MMC has reported its findings. However, the hon. Member should bring any concerns to the attention of the MMC so that they may be taken into account during the inquiry.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons the chemical weapons convention has not yet been ratified. [14654]

Mr. Rooney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ratify the chemical weapons convention. [14649]

Mr. Heseltine: Legislation is required before the UK can ratify the chemical weapons convention. This will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time and the Government's other legislative priorities permit.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total value of regional selective assistance grants made in each assisted area since 1992 in (a) cash terms and (b) constant 1994 prices. [16404]

Mr. Eggar: Information on the amount of regional selective assistance paid is published in the "Annual Report of the Industrial Development Act 1982". GDP deflators to convert expenditure to constant prices are published in the public expenditure statistical supplement to the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". Both publications are available in the Library of the House.

Defence Diversification

Mr. McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of his Department's research into defence industries diversification and the sums of money spent on diversification research projects in each of the last 10 years and in total. [14639]

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry has undertaken no formal research into defence industries diversification during the last 10 years. It will, however, be participating in a NATO advanced studies institute on defence diversification to be held in Scotland in July this year, to which it is contributing £5,662 in support of costs.

Post Offices, London

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he or anyone in his Department has had on the future of (a) Crouch End and (b) Wood Green post offices with Post Office Counters Ltd. [16200]

Mr. Page: Decisions about the location and organisation of individual post offices are the responsibility of Post Office management, not the Government. Therefore, neither my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade nor any member of my Department has had any discussions with Post Office Counters Ltd. on the future of Crouch End and Wood Green post offices.

Accounts Service Agency

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the costs, in total, to his Department in relation to the contractorisation of the Accounts Service Agency; what is the breakdown of these costs between (a) the annual cost of the CSL Group Holdings Ltd. contract, (b) the annual cost of the contract monitoring unit, (c) the annual cost of the policy work transferred from the ASA to the finance and resource management division, (d) the annual cost of any other department overheads previously borne by the ASA and (e) the cost of the contracting-out process, written off over the contract period in respect of (i) redundancy or early retirement, (ii) solicitors' advice, (iii) consultancy fees and (iv) departmental costs. [15211]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The process of contracting out the services provided by the Accounts Services Agency has yet to be completed. At this stage therefore many of the associated financial details can only be estimated. Estimates for the various elements are:

a) the annual cost of the contract with CSL Group Ltd. cannot be determined in advance. It will be a volume contract where the price paid will be determined by the level of services demanded. The schedule of rates cannot be revealed because it is commercially confidential;

b) and c) the policy work to be transferred from ASA to the finance and resource management division of DTI will be undertaken by the accounts services management unit which will also manage the contract. The annual cost of ASMU, including overheads, will be £307,500 falling to £256,500 after the first year;

d) as a result of the contracting out of the Department's overhead attributed to accounts services will fall from £99,000 to £45,000 per annum; and

e) a breakdown of the costs of the contracting-out process could reveal information of a confidential nature, both commercial and personal. The estimated annualised total cost of the items requested is £163,000.

Defence Export Licences

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the items of surplus Ministry of Defence equipment for which an export licence was granted in the last year for which information is available, giving the total number of items involved and the recipient of the export licences in each case. [15811]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 27 March 1995]: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose details about export licences that have been issued. In any event, it would not be possible to identify all such equipment from records.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 March 1995]: I have asked the chief executives of the agencies to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Hobday to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 21 March 1995:

I refer to your recent question to the President of the Board of Trade concerning the loss of jobs in the Department of Trade and Industry over the past two years as a result of their being taken over by contractors and subsequently disappearing.

No jobs have been lost for this reason in the Accounts Services Agency.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question regarding the loss of jobs in agencies over the past two year as a result of contracting out of work.

In Companies House over the past two years there have been no jobs lost due to the employment of contractors.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about jobs which have been lost in The Insolvency Service in the past two years.

One post has been lost as a result of work being taken over by a contractor. Forty five posts have been saved through the introduction of a computerised local office information system in The Service's Official Receivers' offices (with a further forty five posts to be saved in 1995–96). Adjustments have been made in the grading of a small number of posts to reflect changing requirements of The Service's work.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply for the Laboratory of the Government Chemist to your question about jobs lost at Agencies in the DTI during the last two years.

The number of posts in LGC has reduced by 42 since 1 April 1993, of which less than half can be attributed to having been lost due to market tests by customers in Government. During this period, however, LGC has been successful in winning work in other areas.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

I would refer to your Parliamentary Question to the President to the Board of Trade concerning the number of jobs in this agency in the past two years which have been taken over by contractors or have disappeared. The only jobs which have been taken over by contractors are those associated with the reprographics unit, this resulted in the loss of 4 jobs. During the period from 1 April 1993 to the present time the reduction in staff numbers, in addition to those lost in the reprographic section has been 126. These staff reductions were found to be necessary to tailor the size of the organisation to match the market demand for our services.

Letter from Dr. Peter Clapham to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about jobs lost to agencies in DTI in the past two years. This reply concerns my Agency, the National Physical Laboratory (NPL).

The number of staff in NPL has reduced from 786 on 1 March 1993 to 666 on 1 March 1995. Over the same period the number of casual employees has increased from 18 to 54 and the Laboratory also currently uses 29 agency or other staff whereas the number was about 10 two years ago. Therefore some 65 posts have been lost in the last two years.

I trust this provides the information you require.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about jobs lost to Agencies in DTI during the last two years.

No job in this Agency has been taken over by contractors in this period, although the number of posts in NWML has been reduced from 48 on 1 April 1993 to 46 on the same date this year.

Letter from P.R.S. Harntack to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

I have been asked to reply (with respect to the Patent Office) to a question—number 94—which you recently tabled in The House.

Overall numbers in the Patent Office declined from 1,073 end of February 1993 to 964 at end February this year, so 109 posts have disappeared. These totals include staff not directly employed by the Office, but provided through clerical and IT manpower agencies. Their numbers increased from 53 to 76, so an additional 23 jobs have been 'contracted out'.

No other work has been taken over by contractors during this period.

I hope that this is helpful.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 28 March 1995:

As you know, I have been asked to answer, in relation to the Radiocommunications Agency, your question to the President of the Board of Trade about jobs lost to agencies in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared.

On 31 March 1993, the Agency had a complement of 565 with 524.5 staff in post. The comparable figures on 31 March 1994 were 580 and 534 respectively. At the present time, RA has a complement of 582 and 552.5 staff in post. During the period, following market testing, ships' radio licensing is being contracted out with effect from 1 April 1995 with the loss of 6 Agency posts.

I should emphasise that the Agency has succeeded in meeting demanding efficiency targets set by Ministers in each of the years in question. The figures reflect strongly growing demand for all the Agency's services and also delegations of management, IT and personnel functions from the Department.

Within the overall totals, posts have been moved in the Agency in response to changes in patterns of workload and in the interests of efficiency and customer service. For example, the licensing of private mobile radio has been decentralised from the Agency's headquarters to its local offices, which has improved service and been much appreciated by customers.

I hope this information is helpful to you.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Exhibitions

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to East Dorset Schools Art to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [16932]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 26 June to Friday 30 June 1995.

IT Training

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 283, whether on-site IT training for hon. Members will be provided by (a) employees of the House or (b) outside trainers brought in by hon. Members for non-PDVN training.

Mr. Waller: Details of the training have not yet been finalised. It is not expected that hon. Members will need to engage their own training staff, although it will be open to them—as now—to do so, using their office costs allowance.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 50, if he will place in the Library a copy of the 1994 survey of energy efficiency.

Mr. Ray Powell. : A copy of the report by the Director of Works entitled "Energy Conservation on the Parliamentary Estate" dated 20 June 1994 is available in the Library.

Media (Office Space)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) if he will make an assessment of the relationship between office space in the Palace and the direct reporting of parliamentary speeches and answers; [16992]

(2) if he will estimate the office space available to the media in the Palace in 1975, 1985 and 1995; and what policy considerations underlie this allocation; [16991]

(3) if he will arrange for the Committee to review the need for office space for the media and recommend whether the amount should be decreased. [16993]

Mr. Ray Powell: Office space currently available to the media in the Palace of Westminster is estimated to total some 700 sq m. Comparable figures for 1975 and 1985 are unavailable, but I do not believe that the amount of space occupied has changed markedly in recent years. The Committee currently has no plans specifically to review the requirements of the media, but a study is currently being prepared on the utilisation of space on the parliamentary estate to the end of the century. The offices occupied by the media will be included in that study, which will be considered by the Committee in due course.

Audio-visual Resources

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 284, if he will list the interested parties who are discussing the multi-media presentation of Parliament and British democracy.

Mr. Waller: I have been asked to reply. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it would not be appropriate to list the companies involved. I shall write to the hon. Member.

TRANSPORT

Trespass (Railway Lines)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions have been commenced during each of the past four years in cases of trespass on railway lines. [15757]

Mr. Watts: The information is as follows:

Year	Prosecutions commenced
1991	1,513
1992	788
1993	716
1994	691

Rail Users Consultative Committee

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the remit of the rail users' consultative committees in respect of the right to call public inquiries into the proposed withdrawal of any ferry service; and if he will make a statement. [16721]

Mr. Watts: The statutory powers of the central rail users consultative committee and the rail users' consultative committees in respect of ferry services are set out in sections 76 to 79 of the Railways Act 1993.

Uninsured Drivers

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the policy options he has (a) considered and (b) pursued to tackle the problem of uninsured drivers.

Mr. Norris: We are considering various options with colleagues in other Government Departments, the insurance industry and the police; these include the suggestion that drivers should be required to display a windscreen insurance disc. The changes we propose to the vehicle registration and licensing system will provide for a more effective regular check on vehicles and their owners. As well as other benefits they will contribute significantly to combating the problem of motor insurance evasion.

Impact Resistance (Cars)

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action Her Majesty's Government is taking to ensure that the recommendations of the European experimental vehicles committee are included in the European Commission's directive on the front and side impact resistance of cars. [16907]

Mr. Norris: We have taken every possible action to persuade the Commission to propose, and other European Union member states to support, the quickest practical implementation of the recommendations of the EEVC. To that end, we have carried out extensive research programmes and shared all the results with our European partners.

Continuous Agency

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when he expects the consultation exercise on continuous licensing to be completed. [16794]

Mr. Norris: I will be issuing consultation documents tomorrow, 29 March, outlining changes to the vehicle licensing and registration system. Copies will be placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

Bridge Works

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department will approve the funding for the bridge works at Southend lane, London SE26, and when he expects the road improvement scheme to commence and finish. [16175]

Mr. Norris: A scheme including the reconstruction of the bridge was not successful in Lewisham's transport policies and programme bid for 1995–96. The Government office for London are discussing with Lewisham how the proposals might be modified for consideration in next year's submission. Nothing definite can be said at present about the funding or timing of the scheme.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms; [16610]

(2) what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16609]

Mr. Norris: Departmental reports were first published in 1991. From 1994, the Department of Transport has published its report in conjunction with the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Office of the Rail Regulator. The cost to the Department of publication by HMSO is as follows:

	1993–94 prices £
1991	2,388
1992	3,214
1993	5,554
1994	5,354

Costs for 1995 have yet to be finalised. Figures do not include costs of circulation and other internal costs, which are not recorded separately.

There were 2,100 copies of the 1995 transport report—Cm2806, published 7 March—printed. Some 1,300 copies were produced for sale by HMSO at a price of £13.20. The remainder were circulated to Parliament and other Government Departments, and internally to staff within the Department, including its agencies.

Driving Tests

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on theory testing within driving tests with particular reference to motorway driving. [16502]

Mr. Norris: Questions on motorway driving can be included in the session at the end of the current driving test, and will also be among the topics covered by the theory test required by the second EC directive on driver licensing. An announcement on our proposals for the new theory test will be made shortly.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of drivers passing their test now take voluntary motorway driving tuition; and if he will make a statement. [16503]

Mr. Norris: Information is not held centrally on the percentage of newly qualified drivers who take motorway tuition. However, motorway driving is one of the elements included in the post-test driver training scheme, "Pass Plus". That scheme was introduced on 6 February and already over 500 certificates of completion have been issued.

Airlines (Overbooking)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action he intends to take to discourage airlines from overbooking passengers on flights; [16505]

(2) if he will discuss with British Airways its practice of overbooking passengers on flights. [16506]

Mr. Norris: It is for each airline, including British Airways, to determine its own policy on booking, according to its commercial judgment. A Council regulation provides for compulsory minimum levels of compensation to be paid to passengers with a valid ticket and a confirmed reservation on a scheduled flight departing from a Community airport who are denied boarding because the flight is overbooked.

Joint Aviation Authority

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the implications for the United Kingdom of adopting joint aviation authority requirements not embodied in present United Kingdom legislation through air navigation orders or other statutory instruments; [16294]

(2) what assessment he has made of the legal implications of the Civil Aviation Authority's proposals to adopt joint aviation authority regulations. [16293]

Mr. Norris: The joint aviation authorities are recognised by both the United Kingdom and the European Union as the appropriate body to harmonise European aviation safety requirements. The Civil Aviation Authority participates fully in the development of all joint aviation requirements and makes a thorough assessment of their implications. The UK will not approve a JAR unless the CAA is satisfied that it would enable the UK to maintain its very high level of aviation safety.

First Aid

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will consider legislation to require all cars to carry a first aid box; [16868]

(2) if he will bring forward proposals to require all first-time applicants for driving licences to have a basic knowledge of first aid before being passed for a driving licence. [16867]

Mr. Norris: We have no plans to make compulsory either first aid training for drivers or the carrying of first aid kits in cars. The "Highway Code" contains basic advice on what to do in emergencies and encourages drivers to learn about first aid from voluntary organisations and to carry first aid kits. However, basic training and equipment are of limited use for dealing with injuries in road traffic accidents and the best course of action is to summon skilled medical help as quickly as possible.

WALES

Family Services Grant Awards

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the grant awards for 1995–96 made under the child and family services grant scheme; what were the figures for 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [17149]

Mr. Richards: I am pleased to announce that grant offers totalling £2.635 million have been made for 1995–96. This compares with an equivalent figure of £2.1 million in the current financial year. This represents a 25 per cent. increase and reflects the Government's commitment to family life and values. Details of the 84 grant awards have been placed in the Library of the House.

Senior Management Review

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the senior management review of the Welsh Office will be completed. [17150]

Mr. Redwood: The review is now complete. The review report is being made available to Welsh Office staff today and I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

Historic Buildings Council for Wales

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to present to Parliament the next report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales. [17182]

Mr. Richards: The 38th report of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales has been presented to Parliament today. The report covers the financial year 1993–94 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Polling and Public Survey Organisations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the employment of polling or public survey organisations by his Department during the current and previous financial years, on the organisations employed by his Department, on the values of individual contracts for these services, on the total amounts of money spent and on the purposes of the research undertaken by these organisations.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The information requested is as follows:

Beaufort Research Ltd., contracted by Welsh Office 1993–94 Cost: £1,292.50—collection of data for inclusion in 1993 "Digest of Welsh Statistics".

Research and Marketing Ltd., contracted by Welsh Office 1993–94 Cost: £72,000[1]—to undertake the 1992 Welsh Social Survey.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Nearly 23 miles of motorway have been completed at a cost of some £220 million.

Crime Prevention Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent on a crime prevention scheme by his Department and the Home Office in the latest year for which figures are available. [15826]

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office has no formal policy responsibility for crime prevention, although some expenditure within the strategic development scheme is for crime prevention activity. In 1994–95, this amounted to £817,594.

There are also some schemes funded by the Welsh Office which include elements of crime prevention, but it is impossible to quantify the amount specific to it. These include grants to combat drug and alcohol misuse, and expenditure on the estates partnership scheme.

The level of crime prevention expenditure by the Home Office is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Government funding of the association, provided by the Department of Trade and Industry, was £11,916,000 in 1994–95. The same amount of Government funding will be made available in 1995–96. It is for the association to determine the allocation of funds to individual area offices.

Railway Lines (Road Bridges)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional finances he proposes to make available to county highway authorities in Wales to meet the cost of upgrading road bridges over railway lines; and if he will make a statement. [15892]

This will be taken into account, together with all other relevant factors, in determining future funding for local authorities.

Education Grants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total sum per annum being made available through his Department's grants for education support and training to help governors, headteachers and senior teachers develop effectiveness skills for the management of schools; and what criteria will be used in deciding how such GEST resources are distributed. [15946]

[15989]

Mr. Richards: TECs are being asked to discuss with local authorities and others how the action plan "People and Prosperity; an Agenda for Action in Wales" can be taken forward to meet local circumstances. The Welsh Office reviews TEC performance regularly.

(2) what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and what price. [16615]

Mr. Redwood: The first Welsh Office departmental report was issued in February 1991. That and subsequent reports have been published as Command Papers by HMSO which has borne the printing and publishing costs with the aim of recovering these from the sales revenue.

The report is produced bilingually in English and Welsh and the Welsh Office has made the following contributions towards the additional costs involved, expressed in 1994–95 prices:

1992: £5,831
1993: £5,220
1994: £4,497
1995: £3,500

Some 1,600 copies of the 1995 report, Cm 2815 were printed and published. In addition to those copies required by Parliament, Government Departments and agencies, just over 900 were produced to satisfy other sales at a price of £15.40 net.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16279]

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average delay between the initial request by parents for a statement of special educational needs for their child and its delivery in each of the counties in Wales in the latest available year. [16838]

Mr. Richards: The information is not collected centrally. The responsibility for the assessment of special educational needs and the preparation of statements rests with local education authorities; regulations made under the Education Act 1993 set out time limits for this process.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to point 7 of his letter of strategic guidance to the Welsh Development Agency dated 23 February, what representations he has had concerning the per diem consultancy fee paid to Mr. Stuart Ruben of KLR and Co. for his term was temporary chief finance officer of the agency; and if he will make a statement. [16911]

Mr. Redwood: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 906, what procedures exist for further intervention by his medical officer for complaints where additional complaints concerning sub-standard levels of care are made shortly after the completion of the six months probationary period for the implementation of any changes pursuant to an independent professional review. [16852]

Mr. Redwood: Additional complaints would be investigated in the normal way. The medical officer for complaints is independent from the Department and would be consulted only if the complaint was not resolved locally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 906, (1) what information he has received from the director of public health medicine of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the implementation of changes in the standard of geriatric care on ward B6 at the University hospital of Wales; and if he will make a statement; [16851]

(2) what representations the medical officer for complaints in Wales has made to the director of public health medicines of the South Glamorgan health authority in relation to the follow-up action required by that authority pursuant to the independent professional review carried out on 6 October 1994 in relation to complaints about ward B6 and the standard of geriatric care at the University hospital of Wales. [16853]

Mr. Redwood: In the first instance, it is for the health authority to consider and implement any changes that may be necessary in the light of the findings of the medical officer for complaints. The director of public health medicine will be asked by the Department's chief medical officer, what measures have been undertaken six months after the issue of the MO(C) report.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will specify the arrangements by which a part of his annual grant-in-aid to the Cardiff Bay development corporation is allocated for grant-aiding of the Cardiff Bay opera house trust by the corporation; if that part of the grant in aid is ring-fenced; what is the amount passed on to the trust; and in which financial years it occurred; [16908]

(2) if he will specify the arrangements for the grant aiding of the Cardiff Bay opera house trust by the Cardiff Bay development corporation on a matched basis with grants from Associated British Ports; and if he will make a statement. [16912]

Mr. Redwood: The corporation's detailed funding arrangements for the opera house trust is an operational matter. From its annual grant in-aid allocation, the corporation has financed the administration of the trust and the opera house design competition as follows:

	1992–93 £000s	1993–94 £000s	1994–95 £000s	1995–96 (Planned) £000s
Administration	—	200	840	200

Total	85	309	946	200

In addition, the corporation is planning to match an £80,000 funding contribution from Associated British Ports towards the trust's campaign to secure capital funding from the private sector.

Social Marketing

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and which non-governmental organisations are being funded to carry out social marketing programmes; in which countries they are based; what is the amount of funding granted; and for what length of time. [16086]

Mr. Baldry: ODA is currently funding three non-governmental organisations to carry out social marketing programmes. Details of which countries, the level and period of funding are given in the table:

NGO Social Marketing Programmes Funded By ODA

NGO	Country	Period	Total commitment (£ million)
Population services international (PSI)	Cambodia	1994–95	0.150
PSI	India	1995–98	1.020
PSI/Society for family health	Nigeria	1995–97	3.300
Marie Stopes international (MSI)	India	1989–95	0.519
MSI	Ethiopia	1991–95	0.207
Total commitment			5.196

Family Planning

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on social marketing of contraceptives in family planning programmes overseas. [16098]

Mr. Baldry: ODA supports the social marketing of contraceptives as an effective strategy to improve access to contraception and thereby promote "Children by Choice, Not Chance."

Currency Speculation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the proposal put forward by President Mitterrand at the world summit for social development for an international tax on currency speculation to fund assistance to developing countries for the eradication of poverty. [14928]

Mr. Baldry: We support the summit's conclusion that this type of taxation should not be promoted as a way of assisting developing countries. Taxation on international transactions essentially amounts to a barrier to trade which reduces global economic welfare.

The best way to help poorer countries develop is to allow them to trade freely. That is why my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development made clear in her address to the summit that full implementation of the general agreement on tariffs and trade is likely to generate more jobs worldwide than any other single international development.

Slovakia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the United Kingdom's financial or contractual responsibilities for investments made in nuclear power installations by the European bank for reconstruction and development in the event of future accidents. [16846]

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom Government would not assume any financial liability in the event of an accident at the Mochovce nuclear power station in the Slovak Republic, the only proposed EBRD investment in nuclear energy. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 21 February at column 129.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions the United Kingdom made in resources or policy creation in the decision of the European bank for reconstruction and Development funding of the Mochovce nuclear plant in Slovakia. [16847]

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom know-how fund has financed EBRD's engagement of consultants (i) to provide financial advisory services; (ii) to undertake an environmental impact assessment and (iii) to audit the public participation programme.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what calculation was made in assessing the 10 per cent. predicted decommissioning costs for the Mochovce nuclear installation made by the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. [16845]

Mr. Baldry: The cost estimates for Mochovce include an allowance of US$337 million for fuel storage and decommissioning. The Slovak Parliament passed a law in August 1994 whereby 10 per cent. of the revenues derived from the sale of nuclear power are to be transferred to a state fund. This fund is intended to finance all expenses relating to nuclear waste management, final waste and spent fuel disposal and decommissioning of all nuclear plants.

Mr. Baldry: The police management training project strengthens the central capacity of the Indonesian national police to respond more effectively to a wide range of management and public service issues. It has not dealt with crowd control techniques. The project has helped the INP to establish a consultancy unit which engages in active problem solving. Advice or assistance from the unit is available to all branches of the INP. The East Timor police authorities have not sought advice directly from the unit.

The Prime Minister: I share my hon. The group will monitor developments in the area of obscenity, with particular reference to emerging trends in child and computer pornography, and will identify any actual or potential difficulties in enforcement or weakness in the relevant law and consider possible ways of overcoming them.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 28 March 1995. [14934]

Mr. Howard: As I indicated in standing Committee B on 22 March at column 23 the Government will bring the final text of the external frontiers convention before Parliament before it is signed. If the convention is signed, the Government will not ratify it before the necessary legislation has been enacted by Parliament in accordance with the normal procedures.

The Home Office also incurs other miscellaneous costs including those of transcripts obtained and scientific tests carried out at its request, but no firm figures for these costs are available.

Green Housekeeping

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide results of the success of the green housekeeping action plan and the other schemes in (a) the Northern Ireland Office and (b) each of the other Government departments in Northern Ireland. [15422]

Mr. Moss: All Government Departments in Northern Ireland have adopted the green housekeeping approach and many measures have been implemented successfully.

Significant success has been achieved in the areas of energy efficiency and recycling.

Over the first three years of the UK-wide energy efficiency campaign to reduce energy consumption within the public sector by 15 per cent., Northern Ireland achieved an 8.12 per cent. improvement in energy performance £/m^2. Work will continue to implement fully the strategy for the public sector campaign.

Paper recycling has been introduced throughout the entire Northern Ireland civil service, with most offices now having introduced schemes for the recycling of normal "basket" waste paper and a single tender has been awarded for the shredding and pulping of classified material.

Other recycling schemes include the letting of a contract for the collection and recycling of ink/toner cartridges from personal computers.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set out the cost of implementing the green housekeeping action plan and similar environmental schemes in (a) the Northern Ireland Office and (b) each of the other Government Departments in Northern Ireland. [15421]

Mr. Moss: There are no separate budgets assigned to green housekeeping activities within the Northern Ireland Office and other Government Departments as these, to a large extent, formalise good management practice. Costs are absorbed within existing budgets for buildings repair and maintenance, and the purchase of equipment etc.

Green housekeeping measures do not always incur a cost since for example, the shredding and pulping of waste paper instead of incineration provides both financial savings and environmental improvements.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a list (a) of the Property owned by the Northern Ireland Office and leased out and (b) of the property leased by the Northern Ireland Office. [15419]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office either leases or owns various properties, most of which are used for official business but there are a number of residential properties.

The Northern Ireland Office does not lease out any of the property owned by the department.

Disclosure of the details of the properties is not considered advisable on grounds of personal security.

Residential Care

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what is the fully allocated cost for the provision of a continuing care bed for (a) a frail elderly person and (b) an elderly dementia sufferer in (i) an NHS hospital and (ii) a residential bed provided by social services. [15126]

Mr. Moss: This information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of goat pox were reported in each year since 1985. [15981]

Mr. Ancram: None. There has never been a case of goat pox in Northern Ireland.

Water and Sewerage Charges

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 63, regarding water and sewerage charges paid by his Department, if he will define disproportionate cost. [15931]

Mr. Moss: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury on 18 February 1993, Official Report, columns 313-14 to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns).

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which management consultants have been employed by his Department to assist in the assessment of applications by NHS units for trust status; how much each was paid; and how many assessments they undertook in each wave. [15847]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 19 July 1994 by my hon. Friend the Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) Official Report, column 194. There has since been a fourth wave of applications for health and social services trust status.

Two assessments were made by IHSM Consultants in the fourth wave, for which they were paid a total of £12,470.69. This includes fees and expenses.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the arts organisations with whom he has met since 1 January, together with dates. [16181]

Mr. Dorrell: I meet representatives of arts organisations very frequently. The specific information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

National Lottery

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what sum has accrued to Camelot Group plc in respect of its operation of the national lottery, arising from its percentage income agreed under its contract; [15653]

(2) what has been the initial outlay of Camelot Group plc on the establishment, administration and promotion of the national lottery since the date of the award of the contract; [15652]

(3) what was the total number of staff employed at the Office of the National Lottery; and what is the total annual cost to the Exchequer of the Office of the National Lottery. [15654]

Mr. Dorrell: The administration costs of the Office of the National Lottery are met from the national lottery distribution fund. The net cost to the Exchequer is therefore nil. I have asked the Director-General to write to the hon. Member on the other matters raised, placing copies of his letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will state Mr. Peter Gummer's term of office and salary as head of the Arts Council lottery committee; and what provision has been made for severence pay in the case of early termination of office. [16252]

Mr. Dorrell: Mr. Gummer has been reappointed as a member of the Arts Council of England for a three-year period from 1 April 1995. One of his responsibilities as a member of the Council is to chair the Arts Council's national lottery advisory board. No remuneration is attached to membership of the Arts Council or its advisory committees.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will require Messrs Camelot to publish, on a weekly basis, a statement of revenue, distribution, expenses and retained profit. [15862]

Mr. Dorrell: Camelot Group plc is subject to the provisions of the Companies Acts and is required to lodge accounts with Companies House annually. I have no powers to require Camelot to publish information regarding retained profit on any other basis.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the percentage of receipts from the national lottery being held by Camelot plc each week. [16193]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 March 1995]: This is a matter for the director-general of the national lottery. I have therefore asked him to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his letter in the Library of the House.

Mr Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage to whom each of the five lottery distributing bodies are accountable. [16670]

Mr. Dorrell: The 11 national lottery distributing bodies—including the four national arts councils and the four national sports councils—are accountable to Parliament and will be preparing annual reports and accounts which will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible after the end of the financial year.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the average period between national lottery competitions held so far and the payment of lottery duty to the Treasury. [15860]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

To date, there have been 15 national lottery competitions for which payment has been received. The average period between the date of the competition and the payment of lottery duty to the Treasury was 27 days.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will calculate the additional amount of revenue which would have accrued to the Treasury in interest if payments of lottery duty had been made within 10 days of each competition since the inception of the national lottery. [15861]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

To date, there have been 15 national lottery competitions for which payment has been received. If the lottery duty due on these competitions had been paid 10 days after the date of the competition the additional interest which would have accrued to the Treasury is approximately £200,000.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1992. [16547]

Mr. Dorrell: My Department currently employs seven press officers; the same number was employed in 1992.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16277]

Mr. Dorrell: My Department's public relations requirements are normally met in-house. During 1993–94, a public relations company was contracted to assist with a programme of events marking the 50th anniversary of D-day. The contract, which was in line with central Government guidelines, cost £62,500.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16211]

Mr. Dorrell: Central Government conventions for the use of public relations companies are set out in "A Working Guide For Government Information Officers", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Albert Memorial

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage from what part of his Department's budget the additional funding for the restoration of the Albert Memorial announced on 22 March came. [16669]

Mr. Dorrell: My predecessor announced on 30 November 1993 that funding of £2 million a year is planned in 1995–96 and 1996–97. No allocations have yet been made beyond then, but it is my hope that I shall be able to make £2 million available in the two subsequent years.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15026]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 March 1995]: I always do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

BBC

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if the annual analysis of hours and range of output made in different parts of the United Kingdom will include programme expenditure across the range of output; and if he will make statement. [15903]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 March 1995]: The BBC's "Statement of Promises to Audiences" will include quantifiable targets underpinning the undertakings in the new agreement regarding regional programme-making. In addition, we will expect the BBC to provide sufficient information in its annual report to allow Parliament and the public to assess how well the BBC has performed against these targets. We are discussing the details with the BBC.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefits

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of (a) severe disability allowance, (b) income support and (c) incapacity benefit who will be assessed as capable of work he estimates will appeal against this decision in each of the years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [16125]

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested, as estimates are not made for the individual benefits listed. Current planning assumptions are that the number of appeals which will be lodged on the question of incapacity for work will be in the region of 140,000 in 1995–96, 190,000 in 1996–97 and 90,000 in 1997–98.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he will be sending guidance about the assessment of the all-work test for incapacity benefits to (a) adjudication officers and (b) the Benefits Agency medical service. [16124]

Mr. Hague: The independent central adjudication service, which has responsibility for adjudication matters, has produced guidance on the application of the all-work test for incapacity benefits. The guidance was delivered to adjudication officers in the week commencing 20 March.

A programme of detailed and comprehensive training on the all-work test for Benefits Agency medical service doctors has been under way since January. Procedural guidance to supplement this training will be received by all those involved in the application of the test before it comes into force on 13 April.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will move from (a) severe disability allowance, (b) income support and (c) incapacity benefit in each of the years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to sign on as available for work. [16122]

Mr. Hague: No estimates have been made of the number of people leaving severe disablement allowance. The estimated number of people who will move from incapacity benefit and income support with the disability premium to sign on as unemployed earlier than would otherwise have been the case, as a result of the new medical test, is in the table.

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
From incapacity benefit to unemployment	160,000	120,000	60,000
From income support with disability premium to unemployment	50,000	30,000	10,000

Note:

Estimates rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will fail to qualify for (a) severe disablement allowance, (b) income support and (c) incapacity benefit in each of the years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 as a result of being assessed as capable of all work. [16118]

Mr. Hague: No estimates have been made of the number of severe disablement allowance claimants being found capable of all work. The estimated numbers of new and existing claimants of income support and incapacity benefit who will be found capable of work are in the tables.

New claimants found capable of work under the new medical test (Table shows the estimated number of people leaving benefit earlier than they would have done under current arrangements)

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	Total over 3 years
Incapacity benefit[1]	45,000	55,000	55,000	160,000
Income support with disability premium[2]	10,000	10,000	10,000	35,000
Total—invalidity benefit and income support[2]	55,000	70,000	70,000	195,000

Existing claimants found capable of work under the new medical test (Table shows the estimated number of people leaving benefit earlier than they would have done under current arrangements)

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	Total over 3 years
Invalidity benefit	140,000	80,000	20,000	240,000
Income support with disability premium[2]	50,000	30,000	5,000	85,000
Total—invalidity benefit and income support[2]	190,000	110,000	25,000	325,000

Notes:

[1] Figures for incapacity benefit relate to those who would have qualified for invalidity benefit under the current arrangements.

[2] Figures for income support do not include those also receiving invalidity benefit/incapacity benefit.

1. All estimates rounded to the nearest 5,000; totals may not sum due to rounding.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of (a) severe disability allowance, (b) income support and (c) incapacity benefit he estimates will be examined by the Benefits Agency Medical Service in each of the years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [16126]

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested, as estimates are not made for the individual benefits listed. Current planning assumptions are that the number of medical examinations relating to incapacity for work will be in the region of 625,000 in 1995–96, 660,000 in 1996–97 and 375,000 in 1997–98.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who will move off incapacity benefits during 1996–97 he estimates will fail to qualify for contributory jobseeker's allowance. [16120]

Mr. Hague: Around 70,000.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will qualify for (a) severe disability allowance, (b) income support and (c) incapacity benefit in each of the years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 because they fall within one of the groups exempt from the all-work test. [16123]

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. Estimates have not been made of the number of severe disablement allowance and income support claimants who will be exempt from the all-work test. It is estimated that around 50,000 new incapacity benefit claimants per year will be exempt from the test and that around 900,000 existing invalidity benefit claimants will be exempt.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will qualify for unemployment benefit or jobseeker's allowance he expects will need to claim an incapacity benefit on the basis that they are unable to work, in each of the years (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98. [16119]

Mr. Hague: It is not possible to make the estimate specified in the question, as data are not held on benefits received by claimants at the point of a claim for an incapacity benefit.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who will move off incapacity benefits during 1995–96 he estimates will qualify for unemployment benefit. [16121]

Mr. Hague: Around 95,000.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out full details of the procedures to be used under the Social Security (Incapacity for Work) Act 1994 by the Benefits Agency medical service agency in the assessment of severe mental health problems, and the criteria by which the Benefits Agency medical service doctors will assess each individual to decide who is, and who is not, to be exempt by reason of mental illness from the all-work test. [17011]

Mr. Hague: Before the all-work test is applied to any claimant with a diagnosis of mental health problems, a Benefits Agency medical services doctor will consider whether the claimant's mental health problem is a severe one. This consideration will be based on medical evidence already held and on further information from the Claimant's GP or other medical practitioner, which may be sought specifically to inform the decision. Where a claimant is certified by the Benefits Agency medical service doctor as suffering from severe mental illness, he will be found incapable for work automatically, without having to undergo the test.

The guidance for Benefits Agency medical service doctors in assessing severe mental health problems is as follows:

> Severe mental health problems are characterised by the presence of mental illness so adversely affecting a person's mood, behaviour or social or environmental awareness, including interpersonal relationships, that continued psychiatric care is essential. This care could include:
> sheltered residential facilities where the person receives regular medical or nursing supervision; or
> day care at least one day a week in a centre where qualified nursing care is available; and/or > long-term medication with anti-psychotic preparations including depot neuroleptics or mood-modifying drugs.

Family Credit

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims for family credit have been made in the period 1 April 1994 to 30 September 1994; [15947]

(2) how many claims for family credit and child care disregard there were for (a) one-parent and (b) two-parent families in the period 1 April 1994 to 30 September 1994;

(3) how many claims for family credit had a request for child care costs to be disregarded in the period 1 April 1994 to 30 September 1994. [15948]

Mr. Roger Evans: In the six-month period from 1 April to 30 September 1994, there were a total of 677,000 claims for family credit.

Child care charges were not a relevant factor in the determination of family credit entitlement until October 1994. Consequently, the family credit claim form did not ask for details of child care charges before that date. No information is available about any family credit claimant who may, nevertheless, have made a request for child care charges to be taken into consideration.

Ilford Park Polish Home

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received from the residents in the Ilford Park Polish home near Newton Abbot, Devon, about the market-testing exercise being mounted by his Department in relation to the home; [16172]

(2) when he expects to reach a decision about the operation of the Ilford Park Polish home and the market-testing exercise currently in operation there. [16161]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have received a number of written representations from the residents of Ilford Park Polish home. In addition, on 20 December 1994, my noble Friend the Minister of State also met with the residents' committee on his visit to the home.

The information necessary for us to make a decision on the award of the market-testing contract is to be presented by the end of September 1995.

Unemployment Benefit (Local Councillors)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reconsider the regulations which prevent serving local councillors from receiving unemployment benefit by virtue of being regarded as unavailable for work; and if he will make a statement. [15945]

Mr. Roger Evans: Availability for work is a long-standing and basic condition for the receipt of unemployment benefit. There are no plans to remove this condition in respect of local authority councillors.

Social Fund

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what gross budget will be set for the discretionary social fund in 1995–96. [17184]

Mr. Roger Evans: The social fund gross discretionary budget for 1995–96 will be £406 million. Some £97 million will be allocated to grants and £309 million to loans. The new allocations represent an increase of £38 million over the total gross budget for 1994–95.

At a time when we need to look very carefully at every aspect of public expenditure, I am pleased that we are once again able to sustain our record in increasing the social fund budget each year since it began.

The recycling of loans means that we are able to give more help to more people. The loans system is being widely used; between 1 April 1994 and 28 February 1995 well over 1.8 million non-repayable grants and interest-free loans were made. This is 100,000 more than during the same period last year—an increase of 6 per cent. The increase from April 1995 will allow even more people to be helped.

Details of individual district budget allocations have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number of applications for budgeting loans, (b) the number of applications for crisis loans, (c) the number of successful applications for budgeting loans and the percentage success rate expressed against the total number of applications, (d) the number of successful applications for crisis loans and the percentage success rate expressed against the total number of applications, (e) the total budget allowed for (i) budgeting and (ii) crisis loans and (f) the total amounts awarded for (iii) budgeting and (iv) crisis loans for each Benefits Agency district within Scotland for each of the financial years since their introduction. [16306]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Brian H. Donohoe, dated 27 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Social Fund in Scotland.

The information you have requested is at Annex A and a copy has been placed in the Library. There is no separate budgeting and crisis loans budget, but each district has an overall loans budget. Information has therefore been provided for the total loans allocations for each district.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Statutory Sick Pay

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to allow employers to opt out of the statutory sick pay scheme and what progress has been made towards simplifying the rules. [17205]

Mr. Lilley: I am issuing a consultation paper today which seeks views on allowing employers to opt out of the statutory sick pay scheme where their occupational sick pay schemes meet certain requirements. It would be in everyone's interest for sick pay arrangements to operate as simply and smoothly as possible.

Research carried out for the Department of Social Security in recent years shows that around 85 per cent. of employers make some form of short-term provision for sickness.

One of the main advantages for employers in opting out of SSP would be a reduction in the amount of records they are required to keep at present. They would no longer have to operate SSP rules and could keep simpler records of sickness absence, payments made to employees and transfers to state incapacity benefits.

Record keeping can be an administrative burden for every employer, not just for those with occupational sick pay schemes, so I am also seeking views on a significant reduction in the amount of mandatory records to be kept by all employers.

The proposals have been made by a working group of employers and payroll organisations which I set up to examine ways for cutting red tape in the SSP scheme.

The group has also identified a number of changes that would make the scheme simpler to understand and operate. It is now important to seek wider views including those of employee's representatives.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the group for the time they have given and the commitment they have shown in undertaking such a thorough review.

Copies of the consultation paper with the working group's report have been placed in the Library. Comments are sought by 30 June.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State of Social Security if he will list for each of the past five years, (a) how many people claimed housing benefit, (b) how much was paid in housing benefit, (c) how many claimants have had their housing benefit reduced due to the presence of a non-dependent adult in the household, (d) by how much the total housing benefit bill has been reduced due to the provisions on non-dependent lodgers, (e) by how much the housing benefit bill would be reduced if all single householders with spare bedrooms were assumed to be providing lodgings to a second non-dependent adult. [14926]

Mr. Roger Evans: The latest available information is set out in the table:

War Pensions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what actions he has taken in the last three years to encourage eligible persons to claim a war pension. [15917]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 27 March 1995:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about actions taken in the last three years to encourage eligible persons to claim a war pension.

The Agency, previously the War Pensions Directorate under the Benefits Agency, has actively publicised War Pensions through our own Welfare Service which has 29 offices located throughout the country; the War Pensions Committees which are also regionally based; the various ex-Service organisations with whom we have close and frequent dialogue, and with the Press.

Claims have risen in the last 10 years from 15,000 to an expected 120,000 for this year, and it is our aim to continue to raise awareness of the War Pensions Agency, the War Pensions Scheme and the service we provide, so that those with potential entitlement know of their right to claim.

Activities over the last 3 years include:

attending many exhibitions and, through our Welfare Service, providing seminars and advice days throughout the country which are advertised through the appropriate local press;

ensuring that welfare outlets and organisations (doctors hospitals etc) and advice centres (NACAB, Age Concern etc) know of our service, and to target places our potential customers are likely to visit; poster campaigns (a new one has just started);

providing information and factual articles for newspapers, magazines, television and radio programmes. We ensure wherever possible that the War Pensions Agency Helpline telephone number (01253 858858) is quoted which is proving successful, with calls to the Helpline now averaging over 9,500 per week;

British Telecom telephone directories now prominently mention War Pensions Agency in the form of a ½ column entry; following successful trials last year of a mobile office, we will continue this service;

establishing contact with new areas such as ex-service magazines and Regimental museums to discuss WPA publicity material and areas of common interest such as VE/VJ day;

providing information for servicemen on discharge for inclusion in a Benefits Agency pack;

the Agency will shortly be appearing on Charter Television which is aimed at hospital waiting areas.

I hope you find my reply useful.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the numbers of people requesting the DS2 claim pack for attendance allowance but failing to return it. [16072]

Mr. Hague: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 27 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about claims for Attendance Allowance (AA).

The claim pack DS2 is exclusively for use in AA claims. In the period April 1992 to January 1995 some 2,300,000 DS2 claim packs have been issued to Benefits Agency outlets. Though the vast majority of these have gone to customers, information is not available in respect of the number still held in stock.

Additionally, DS2A packs are issued to organisations such as Welfare Rights and Citizen's Advice Bureaux. Although 1,500,000 DS2A packs have been issued in the period April 1992 to January 1995 information is not available in respect of the number still held in stock.

DS2 packs, supplied to customers direct from BA offices, provide an opportunity for a customer to complete and return their claim within a 6 week period whilst maintaining their original date of claim.

The total number of AA claims received for the period April 1992 to January 1995 is 1,400,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

HEALTH

NHS Doctors

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the percentage of doctors still working in the NHS in each of the first 10 years after qualifying; and what were the figures for each of the last 10 years. [15770]

Mr. Malone: Data are not available in the form requested.

Evidence on doctors leaving the profession prematurely is based in studies published in 1991 by Professor James Parkhouse. These studies suggest that about 20 per cent. of doctors are not practising in the national health service five years after qualification. The majority of these however, are not lost permanently to medicine. Many are working in short-term postings overseas, to develop their skills further, while others are working in United Kingdom medical work outside the NHS, or taking short career breaks. The Department has commissioned further cohort studies to provide up to date estimates of wastage from the medical profession.

A recent study by Isobel Allen containing more up-to-date information, based on a sample of 200 doctors qualifying in 1986, found that very few young doctors had left medicine altogether six years after qualification.

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities in each regional health authority area have a policy on mixed-sex wards; and how many do not. [16100]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Clinical Outcome Indicators

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish health service clinical outcome indicators similar to those published in December 1994 by the Secretary of State for Scotland in respect of individual (a) health authorities and (b) NHS trusts in England; and what timetable is envisaged. [15866]

Mr. Sackville: Many of the indicators published in Scotland were published for individual health authorities in England in 1993. Existing indicators will henceforth be published annually as part of the public health common data set. Some of the indicators published in Scotland are dependent on linking patient records and this is not yet possible in England. As part of our longer-term plans we are currently working with the clinical professions on a programme to develop new outcome indicators.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make an urgent response to the consultations concluded on 30 November 1994 on the Green Paper, "Improving NHS Dentistry". [15983]

Mr. Malone: The Government are considering carefully all the contributions received during the consultation. An announcement will be made shortly.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 400, how many letters from the public mentioned concern with problems of gaining access to NHS dental services en passant; and how many letters from (a) hon. Members, (b) community health councils, (c) local authorities, (d) professional organisations and (e) patient groups have been received. [16400]

Mr. Malone: Since January 1994 some 209 letters in which the main point has been availability of general dental services have been received from hon. and right hon. Members. Additionally, two letters have been received direct from patient groups and one letter direct from a professional group.

Family health services authorities consistently report that they can help patients to find national health service dentists.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family health services authorities have been unable to provide emergency dental services in each month since April 1991. [16402]

Mr. Malone: General dental practitioners have an obligation under their terms of service to provide emergency cover to their registered patients. They may also offer emergency treatment to non-registered patients. Family health services authorities can make arrangements for emergency treatment for those patients who are not registered and are able to assist all those who inquire about emergency treatment.

Where there are already adequate emergency services available from general dental practitioners, or the community or hospital dental services, there is no need for FHSAs themselves to make arrangements.

Information on provision of emergency dental services by family health services authorities is available only for the period from July 1992 to July 1994. Data were received on a weekly rather than a monthly basis and are shown weekly in the table. Since 1 August 1994 more detailed data have been collected weekly on the number of patients referred to the emergency dental service, the community dental service, hospital dental service and salaried dentists instead.

Department of Health.

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which trusts regularly employ general practitioners to work in accident and emergency units; and what has been the effect on waiting times. [16099]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Paramedics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 498, if she will advise ambulance NHS trusts that they should not charge paramedics for their training. [16271]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for individual ambulance trusts.

NHS Pensions Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on plans to privatise the NHS Pensions Agency; and how pensioners will be protected. [16205]

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to privatise the national health service pensions scheme. A "prior options" review of the NHS Pensions Agency is currently under way which examines in the usual way the future of all of the agency's various functions of administering the NHS pensions and injury benefit schemes. We shall announce our conclusions on the agency's future in due course.

General Practitioners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received regarding general practitioners and their out-of-hours work commitment. [16425]

Mr. Malone: We are continuing to have regular discussions with representatives of the medical profession.

Hospital Security

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to improve hospital security. [15643]

Mr. Sackville: Hospital security is a matter for local management. The Government place great importance on the creation of a safe and secure environment in hospitals as part of quality health care. Guidance has been made available to hospitals by the National Health Service Executive.

Correspondence

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters have been received from (a) the public and (b) hon. Members in each of the last five years concerning (i) London's health service, (ii) hospital closures, (iii) long-term care of the elderly, (iv) mental health services, (v) increasing bureaucracy and (vi) in total on all NHS matters either exclusively or en passant. [16401]

Mr. Sackville: Detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The total number of letters replied to by the Department of Health in the last five years is as shown in the table:

Year	Letters replied to [1]By ministers	[2]By officials
1990	28,100	[3]34,000
1991	18,001	30,132
1992	19,704	48,543
1993	25,559	58,598
1994	22,341	44,518

[1] Letters received mainly from hon. and right hon. Members.

[2] Letters received mainly from the public.

[3] Estimated.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by her Department or its predecessors since 1965. [16097]

Mr. Sackville: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department and its predecessors since 1965, for any references of the type requested, could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state and occasional general references are made to persons who are Members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Market Testing

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 March, Official Report, columns 702-3, if she will list (a) the location and (b) the specific clinical or clinical support service for which there are 20 local plans to market test. [16403]

Mr. Sackville: The notified list of local plans to market test clinical support services with other national health service or independent provider units will be placed in the Library.

Hospital Doctors

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will define the role of hospital doctors before and after the reforms. [16405]

Mr. Malone: There has never been any precise definition of the role of hospital doctors. However, they have always been and continue to be responsible for providing high quality patient care.

Drug Expenditure

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average spending on drugs by (a) fundholders and (b) non-fundholders in the latest available quarter. [16406]

Mr. Malone: The average net ingredient cost expenditure on drugs prescribed during the quarter October to December 1994 was £18 per patient by fundholders and £19 per patient by non-fundholders.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have temporarily closed (a) their accident and emergency department and (b) any other acute services for any length of time in each of the past 24 months; and if she will list the hospitals, and give details of the length of closure and causes. [16638]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North (Sir J. Gorst) on 7 March at column 101.

Hospitalised Boxer (Security Costs)

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of security guards for the American boxer Gerald McClellan in the Royal London hospital; and on whom this cost falls. [16639]

Mr. Sackville: National health service trusts are free to take measures that they deem necessary to protect the safety or privacy of patients. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Derek Boorman, chairman of the Royal Hospitals NHS Trust for details.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors account for recent trends in lengths of waiting lists for NHS hospital treatment. [16947]

Mr. Malone: The number of people waiting for treatment has remained at around 10 per cent. of the number of patients treated for over 20 years. Our policy is to ensure that waiting times for treatment are reduced. Nearly half of patients have a waiting time of less than five weeks. In 1987 more than 200,000 were waiting over a year; in December 1994 fewer than 55,000 were waiting over a year. This success has been achieved by a combination of increased activity and better management of specialities with waiting lists.

Stress

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence her Department has that the stress under which (a) nurses, (b) doctors, (c) pharmacists, (d) physiotherapists and (e) ambulance women and other health care professions including dentists has increased or decreased in (i) the last year, (ii) the last four years and (iii) the last 15 years; and if she will make a statement on the suicide rates amongst the above professions. [16948]

Mr. Malone: We have commissioned Dr Toby Wall of the university of Sheffield to carry out a five-year study of the mental health of the national health service work force and the first results from this research are expected to be available later this year.

Trauma Unit Research Project

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give further details of progress on the trauma pilot scheme at the Staffordshire infirmary; and when she expects to receive the completed evaluation and make proposals for implementation of any recommendations for change throughout England and Wales. [16850]

Mr. Sackville: We now expect to receive the final report in June 1995. Copies will be placed in the Library when it is published. We will be considering our policy on trauma centres in the light of the report. Consideration of the report in respect of Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

GP Fundholding

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the total health budget per patient is held by GP fundholders, total fundholders and community fundholders. [14994]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 20 March 1995]: For 1994–95 general practitioner fundholders hold nearly 9 per cent. of the total national health service budget per patient. In addition to the four pilots which began in 1994–95, total purchasing pilots will begin on 1 April 1995. The 52 sites involved in the total purchasing pilot schemes will manage all hospital and community health services resources on behalf of their patients. Community fundholders will not hold a budget until 1996–97.

EDUCATION

Administrative Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the total number of administrative staff employed by each local education authority in England for each year since 1988. [16368]

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to the hon. Member.

Funding

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she intends to meet a cross-party delegation from Devon concerning education funding during March; [16397]

(2) when she expects to respond to the two recent letters from the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport, requesting an urgent meeting about education cuts in Devon; [16398]

(3) if she will list the names of Conservative hon. Members from Devon and Cornwall who have written to her regarding education cuts in those counties; and when she last met Conservative hon. Members from Devon and Cornwall to discuss education budgets. [16399]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend met cross-party delegations of Members from Devon to discuss education funding on 22 March and from Cornwall on 9 February 1995.

We are aware of one outstanding letter from the hon. Member to which my right hon. Friend will reply shortly.

My right hon. Friend and I have received letters on education funding in Devon and Cornwall from the following Conservative Members:

Computer Pornography

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the departmental advice for schools and parents on computer pornography will be published; how many leaflets will be available; and how they will be distributed. [16800]

Mr. Forth: An information sheet for schools and a leaflet of advice for parents were published by the National Council for Educational Technology in February. These are available to all schools and libraries which request them. It is for individual schools to decide how many copies of the parents' leaflet to distribute.

School Meals

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the amount of money spent by local education authorities in England on providing school meals other than those who are entitled to free school meals in the last year for which figures are available. [16792]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally in the form requested. Gross expenditure by local education authorities in England on their school catering services in 1993–94, covering both free and paid meals, is estimated to have been £685.2 million.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to review the arrangements for the ethnic monitoring of school pupils. [17067]

Mr. Robin Squire: We have today issued a consultation paper to local education authorities and other interested organisations, reviewing the current arrangements for the ethnic monitoring of school pupils and inviting comments on proposals to change those arrangements. Subject to the outcome of the consultation exercise we propose to replace the ethnic monitoring survey of school pupils in England with a combination of approaches:

a. to incorporate two additional questions within the schools' census in respect of (i) the number of minority ethnic pupils; and (ii) the number of pupils for whom English is a second language;

b. to obtain information about the progress of minority ethnic pupils in individual schools, by means of information gathered by Ofsted as part of its regular inspection process; and

c. to undertake ad hoc surveys and research, as necessary, to look in greater depth at particular issues.

These are designed to check that all minority ethnic groups have equal opportunities to achieve their full potential. Copies of the consultation paper are available in the Library.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to increase the number of people from ethnic minorities continuing to higher education. [16388]

Mr. Boswell: The Government are concerned to promote wider participation in HE, including participation of people from ethnic minorities. The proportion of people from ethnic minorities continuing to HE is higher than the proportion of people from ethnic minorities in the population at large.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of producing and circulating the last Departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold and at what price. [16653]

Mr. Forth: The Department's annual report published on 7 March 1995 cost £22,500 to prepare for printing.

It was published by HMSO and sold through their bookshops at £11.65 per copy. Printing costs were borne by HMSO, who look to recover these and other administrative costs from sales. The print run was £2,900 and 2345 copies have been sold up to 24 March.

The Department obtained copies to distribute to its own staff at middle management level and above, to institutions of further and higher education and local education authorities and to various educational organisations. The cost of buying copies from HMSO and circulating these was some £10,000.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16654]

Mr. Forth: Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. The five reports have been published as Command Papers by HMSO.

The costs to the Department of preparing the reports for printing are as given. Printing costs were borne by HMSO, which looks to recover these and administrative costs from sales revenue.

Financial year	Cash terms £	At 1993–94 prices £
1990–91	4,900	5,581
1991–92	4,800	5,144
1992–93	5,200	5,359
1993–94	15,200	15,200
1994–95	22,500	22,059

Costs of buying in and circulating copies of the report were £10,000 in 1994–95. Costs are not held separately for the four previous years.

Special Educational Needs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will ring fence finance for special needs pupils. [16593]

Mr. Forth: No. Detailed spending decisions are for individual schools and local authorities to make in the light of their own particular circumstances and from within the resources available to them.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will implement the new code to protect special needs pupils. [16595]

Mr. Forth: The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs came into effect on 1 September 1994.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will incorporate special training for teachers in recognition of special needs pupils suffering from dyslexia. [16590]

Mr. Forth: It is a requirement that initial teacher training courses should equip teachers with the skills to identify special educational needs.

The Government make money available to local education authorities to contribute, under the grant for education support and training—GEST—programme, towards the cost of in-service training for teachers of children with special educational needs. This enables local education authorities to bid for funds to provide for particular disability areas, such as dyslexia, as appropriate to local needs.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will institute screening for pre-school children to establish the need for special care. [16596]

Mr. Forth: Care facilities for the under fives are a matter for local social services departments, central responsibility for which rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. There are already a variety of routes by which special educational needs can be recognised, including the family doctor, the child health services and playgroup or nursery provision.

Mature Students

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has had from vice-chancellors and principals regarding the effect of changes in Benefit Agency regulations on mature students taking higher education courses. [16382]

Mr. Boswell: Social security regulations are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education has, however, received a number of representations concerning students and benefits.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many press officers there are in her Department currently; and what figure was in 1979. [16558]

Mr. Boswell: There are currently 11 press officers in the Department. Information for 1979 is not available.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the annual expenditure on discretionary awards for students attending further education college courses for each of the metropolitan authorities, for each financial year since 1990–91. [16225]

Mr. Boswell: The information requested for the academic years 1990–91, 1991–92 and 1992–93, the latest year for which data are available, is shown in the table. Financial year information is not available.

Expenditure on further education discretionary awards in the metropolitan authorities in 1990–91, 1991–92 and 1992–93

[1] Provisional

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the amount held back by Derbyshire county council of its total education budget. [16482]

Mr. Robin Squire: In the financial year 1994–95, Derbyshire county council is retaining 31.3 per cent. of its general schools budget.

Virtual Universities

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans her Department has to explore the concept of virtual universities. [16384]

Mr. Boswell: None. The use of information technology in teaching, learning and research is primarily a matter for individual universities and colleges. The higher education funding councils will shortly be consulting higher education institutions on issues surrounding the exploitation of information systems with a view to considering a strategy for their use in higher education over the next decade.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines her Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16207]

Mr. Forth: Central Government conventions for the use of public relations companies are set out in a working guide for Government information officers, a copy of which is available in the Library. The same conventions generally apply to executive agencies and non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much her Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if she will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16281]

Mr. Forth: The Department does not employ public relation companies.

School Places

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much an unfilled place costs at (a) a primary school and (b) a secondary school. [16300]

Mr. Robin Squire: The national average premises-related cost of maintaining a school place is estimated to be £182 a year for a primary school and £303 a year for a secondary school at 1995–96 prices. The actual cost and the scope for realising savings from removal of surplus school places in practice will depend on local circumstances.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will state the cost of producing and distributing to schools her recent document about the private finance initiative being used in education. [16479]

Mr. Forth: The total cost of designing and printing the document about the private finance initiative in education, "Education means Business" was £101,000. Distribution of one copy to schools cost some £18,400. The chief target audience for the booklet was the business community.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the value and scope of capital spending projects in schools which have taken advantage of the private finance initiative. [16480]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available centrally. We are, however, actively reviewing ways in which school-business partnerships may be further encouraged to enable private sector investment and expertise to play its full part in education provision.

Student Hardship

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent representations she has received from university administrators and student unions on students facing hardship. [16387]

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from university administrators and student unions on the subject of student support.

Teaching and Research

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps her Department is taking to ensure parity of esteem between teaching and research in higher education. [16385]

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend attaches importance to both teaching and research. It is however for individual universities and colleges to decide on the relative weight to attach to each in the light of their institutional missions.

BMA Medical Students' Committee

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were her reasons for refusal on 13

February to meet the British Medical Association's medical students' committee. [16117]

Mr. Boswell: I wrote again on 15 March to explain that the pressure of other commitments means that I am unable to meet representatives of the medical students' committee. I am well aware of the arguments advanced by the BMA medical students' committee, and have answered the points raised in correspondence.

Student Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received concerning the level of maintenance grant and loans for (a) all students and (b) medical students. [16116]

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations for a variety of reasons about levels of student support, both for all students and for medical students.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what financial support is available from public funds to a person, born in 1976, who is studying at college for more than 20 hours a week and whose parents are in receipt of income support; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 17 February 1995]: The person could apply to his or her local education authority for a discretionary award. The decision on how many awards to make, to whom, and the rate payable is a matter purely for LEAs. Anyone over 18 can also apply for a career development loan. These are designed to cover course fees and other living costs. The person may also be eligible for a mandatory award depending on the type of course. In addition, depending on his or her exact age and circumstances, some social security benefits might be available.

Special Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of statutory age pupils attended a special school in each local education authority as at January 1994; and what was the percentage nationally. [14989]

Mr. Forth [holding answer 20 March 1995]: The information requested is set out in the table.

SCOTLAND

Training and Enterprise Programmes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what ways the eligibility, financial and operating rules which apply to local enterprise companies in Scotland differ from those outlined in the 1995–96 training and enterprise council operating agreement for (a) youth training and youth credits and (b) training for work; and if he will make a statement. [15158]

Mr. Kynoch: The rules which govern the delivery by local enterprise companies in Scotland of the principal Government-funded training and enterprise programmes for 1995–96 are set out in an operating agreement between Scottish Enterprise/Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies which follows closely that for training and enterprise councils.

Housing, Wigtown

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the legal status of the Wigtown housing association and its membership; what funds have been provided to it from public sources; and if he will make a statement. [15816]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In developing proposals for the transfer of its housing stock to a locally based housing association, Wigtown district council has supported the formation of Wigtown housing association. I understand that the steering group of Wigtown housing association has recently applied for registration as a friendly society in terms of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1965. It expects to apply in due course for registration with Scottish Homes. Current membership proposals are for a voluntary board of management with 16 members, comprising three local authority members, six tenants and seven other local people with the skills necessary to run such an organisation.

I understand that the council intends to apply for the consent of the Secretary of State, in terms of section 25 of the Local Government Act 1988, to provide financial assistance towards the new association's setting-up costs.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what request he has received from Wigtown district council regarding the transfer of its housing stock to a housing association; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement. [15814]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Wigtown district council has not yet applied to the Secretary of State for consent to transfer its housing stock to a locally based housing association, although I am aware that the council is currently developing proposals in consultation with tenants. The Secretary of State is generally sympathetic to requests from local authorities to transfer housing stock; each case is considered on it merits and must command the support of the tenants involved.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the proposed transfer of housing stock by Wigtown district council to a housing association; if the council has drawn to his attention potential conflicts of interest; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement. [15815]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State has received six representations from two individuals on a range of issues connected with the proposed transfer of Wigtown district council's housing stock, including the potential for conflict of interest.

The question of conflict of interest is primarily a matter for the council to address. The council is aware that it will have to take steps to avoid any conflict of interest, particularly in the context of discussions of financial arrangements, which may arise in the stock transfer process.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to publish his revised guidance to local authorities relating to large-scale voluntary transfers of their housing stock; and if he will take steps to prevent authorities with special reference to Wigtown district council carrying through such transfers before the guidance has been published. [16821]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I expect that revised guidance to local authorities on large-scale voluntary transfers of housing stock will be issued by early summer. This will replace advice issued in 1988 which currently guides local authorities transferring stock. There is no reason why Wigtown district council should not seek to develop proposals for a transfer of stock before publication of the revised guidance.

Housing Stock Transfer

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has received from district councils for transfer of housing stocks to housing associations or private landlords. [15817]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State receives many requests from district councils to transfer housing to housing associations and private landlords. Since January 1989, he has approved over 180 applications to transfer a total of over 13,000 houses to the private sector, mainly to locally based housing associations.

Environmentally Sensitive Area Payments

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers or crofters in Scotland received environmentally sensitive area payments greater than (a) £100,000, (b) £50,000, (c) £10,000, (d) £5,000 or (e) £1,000 in the last year for which figures are available. [15523]

Sir Hector Monro: The information, in the format requested, is set out in the following table. The figures are for 1993–94, the latest year for which information is available.

Farmers/crofters receiving payments of more than:	Number
(a) £100,000	—
(b) £50,000	—
(c) £10,000	—
(d) £5,000	10
(e) £1,000	278

In addition, a number of participants received payments of £1,000 or less.

Hospital and Health Service Contracts

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts for hospital and health services awarded so far under the competitive tendering process by (a) Argyll and Clyde, (b) Western Isles, (c) Tayside, (d) Shetland, (e) Orkney, (f) Lothian, (g) Lanarkshire, (h) Highland, (i) Greater Glasgow, (j) Grampian, (k) Forth Valley, (i) Fife, (m) Dumfries and Galloway, (n) Borders and (o) Ayrshire and Arran health boards, including the successful tenderer and value of contracts. [15768]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is available but as it is lengthy, I have arranged to place copies in the Libraries of the House.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of goat pox were reported in each year since 1985. [15975]

Sir Hector Monro: No cases of goat pox have ever been recorded in Scotland.

Lomond Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what remuneration and expenses Mr. Stephen P. Newall will receive as chairman of the Lomond Healthcare NHS Trust; and what is the membership of this board. [16877]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The chairman of the Lomond Healthcare NHS trust, Mr. Stephen P. Newall, receives remuneration of £17,145 per annum and is entitled to claim travel and subsistence expenses at standard rates. The non-executive directors of the trust board have still to be announced.

Incontinence Services

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if NHS Executive Guidance (EL(93)54) and Agenda for Action on Continence Services (1991) or their Scottish counterparts have been implemented in all health board areas; and if he will make a statement. [15963]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish health management efficiency group published a report on incontinence services in the community in November 1993 which was circulated widely to bodies in the NHS in Scotland including health boards, which are expected to take account of its recommendations.

Scottish Record Office

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the targets he expects the Scottish Record Office to achieve in 1995–96. [17152]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have set the Scottish Record Office the following key targets for 1995–96:

> to reduce the unit cost of preserving and making available the records of Scotland by 4 per cent. in real terms; > to increase the number of catalogue entries available for public scrutiny on the electronic system from 119,000 in 1994–95 to 122,000; > to produce material from the same building for readers in 30 minutes or less in 90 per cent. of cases, absorbing up to a 2 per cent. increase in demand; > to answer 85 per cent. of correspondence within 10 days, absorbing up to a 2 per cent. increase in demand; and > to discuss with every shadow local authority the arrangements each proposes for the preservation and management of the records of the new councils after 1 April 1996.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what areas will have individual assessors appointed following local government reform in Scotland on 1 April 1996. [17151]

Mr. Kynoch: Having considered representations made in response to consultation on this subject, I have decided that in terms of each assessor's geographical area of responsibility, apart from in Strathclyde region, the present arrangement should continue whereby there are joint arrangements for Highland and Western Isles and Orkney and Shetland and there is one assessor appointed for each other present regional council area. In the Strathclyde area, we propose that there should be five separate assessors with geographical responsibilities extending respectively to Ayrshire, Renfrewshire, Lanarkshire, Glasgow and Argyll and Bute together with Dunbartonshire. The new local authorities for the Borders, Dumfries and Galloway, Fife and Glasgow will therefore each appoint their own assessor and in other areas joint boards will be introduced to oversee this service.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what compensation will be available for staff who are obliged to take lower-paid jobs as a result of the reorganisation of local government in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [17153]

Mr. Kynoch: On 5 December 1994, my hon. Friend, the former Minister with responsibility for industry and local government issued for comment proposals for compensating local authority staff who may be obliged to accept lower-paid jobs as a result of local government reorganisation in Scotland. The responses have been carefully considered and I will be bringing forward shortly regulations to introduce a new scheme for compensation.

In essence, the scheme will allow for current staff appointed during the period 6 April 1995 to 31 March 1997 to lower-paid jobs in the new local authorities, the new water and sewerage authorities or the Scottish children's reporter administration to have their present salary maintained for a transitional three-year period.

The scheme will allow the new authorities, during the crucial transitional period, to retain and make use of experienced personnel who would otherwise be made redundant. By avoiding the need for redundancy payments and encouraging councils to retrain existing employees in new jobs, this scheme should benefit staff, employers and the taxpayer.

Pay Beds

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amounts of revenue were gathered for the NHS by the operation of pay beds for each health board area in Scotland for each financial year since 1979. [16334]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The following table has been derived from health board annual accounts and shows revenue generated for the NHS by the operation of pay beds for each health board area in Scotland for each financial year since 1979. The amounts shown from 1992–93 onwards do not include pay beds sited in NHS trust hospitals. Information on pay beds for NHS trust hospitals is not collected centrally.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidance his Department has issued to NHS trust hospitals on the operation of pay beds with particular reference to patients with private medical insurance; [16332]

(2) what representations his Department has received from private medical insurance companies on the operation of pay beds by NHS trust hospitals in the last three years. [16333]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 March 1995]: There is no compulsion on health boards and NHS trusts to provide pay beds but they are encouraged to do so as a means of contributing to income generation. The decision whether or not to provide pay beds is entirely for boards and trusts to determine within the terms of Section 55 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978.

No representations have been received from private medical insurance companies and no specific guidance has been issued to NHS trusts on the operation of pay beds.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the number of pay beds in (i) 1979 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available and (b) the amounts of revenue raised through the operation of pay beds in 1979 for the latest year for which figures are available and for each national health service hospital in Scotland. [16329]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The following tables have been derived from health board annual accounts. The latest year in which numbers of pay beds were collected was 1988. The latest year in which amounts of revenue raised through the operation of pay beds was 1993. The pay bed numbers for 1979 and 1988 are the total for health boards. A breakdown to hospital level is not available centrally.

The revenue figure for 1993 excludes any revenue collected by NHS trust hospitals. Information on pay beds for NHS trust hospitals is not collected centrally.

Pupils (Costs)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the average amount of money spent by his Department on educating a pupil within (a) primary and (b) secondary schools adjusted for 1992–93 prices for each year since 1979 and for each education authority in Scotland; [16318]

(2) what was the average amount of money spent by his Department on educating a pupil within (a) primary and (b) secondary schools adjusted for 1992–93 for each year since 1979. [16321]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 March 1995]: Direct expenditure by the Scottish Office on the education of school pupils is limited to grants made available to Jordanhill school, the self-governing Dornoch academy, and certain residential special schools. Grants are also made available for pupils at certain independent schools under the assisted places scheme. Comprehensive information on the division of these resources between the primary and secondary sectors is not available.

Expenditure per pupil in education authority schools is the responsibility of each education authority. Local authority expenditure is supported by aggregate external finance. Such financial support is not specific to particular local authority services and it is for each authority to determine the allocation of all the resources at its disposal.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the average number of pupils per class in Scotland for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for each year since 1979; [16323]

(2) if he will list the average number of pupils in each class for each education authority in Scotland for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for each year since 1979. [16322]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The available information on average class size is given in the following table.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average salary paid to a teacher in Scotland and the average salary paid to a teacher in Scotland as a percentage of average non-manual earnings for each year since 1979. [16320]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The information requested is as follows:

	Average salary of teachers in Scotland	Percentage of average male non-manual earnings in Scotland

Figures for 1985–86 are not available due to teachers' industrial action. Information for years subsequent to 1992–93 is not yet available.

Intensive Care Units

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what recent representations he has received from Scottish health boards concerning collective arrangements for the admission of patients to intensive care units; [16316]

(2) what arrangements exist within the NHS in Scotland for the admission of seriously sick patients to intensive care units; [16317]

(3) if he will list the number of intensive care beds available for the treatment of patients for each health board area in Scotland for each financial year since 1979. [16328]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 March 1995]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not received any representations from health boards concerning collective arrangements for the admission of patients to intensive care units. Arrangements for the admission of seriously sick patients to intensive care units are a matter for the relevant trusts and health boards informed by clinical decisions about individual patients.

Information on the average available staffed intensive care beds is shown in the following table.

Prescriptions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much revenue his Department has raised from payment for national health service prescriptions for each financial year since 1968 (a) in total and (b) in each health board area. [14543]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1995]: The information requested, which is available only from the financial year 1978–79, is set out in the tables. The amounts of revenue shown include:

(i) NHS prescription charges paid by patients in respect of drugs and appliances dispensed by pharmacists, dispensing doctors and appliance suppliers;

(ii) the sums collected in respect of the sale of prepayment certificates, and;

(iii) NHS prescription charges recovered from patients under health board post-dispensing checking arrangements.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Definitions

Sir Timothy Sainsbury: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take action to clear up the ambiguities in the statutory terms "dwelling house", "building" and "house in multiple occupation" and the two statutory definitions of an HMO which are referred in paragraph 18 of the Department of the Environment's publication, "Monitoring the New Housing Fitness Standard", reference 95/2/140ES. [15353]

Mr. Curry: The definitions referred to are being considered in the context of the current review of the house renovation grant system and the Government's consideration of the case for licensing HMOs.

Correspondence

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment will send the letter he undertook to write in the debate on 17 February, Official Report, column 1311.

Sir Paul Beresford: I wrote to the hon. Member on 23 March.

Town and Country Planning (Costs of Enquiries) Bill

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received on the Town and Country Planning (Costs of Enquiries) Bill; what was the length of the consultation period for the Bill; if he will list the organisations that have responded and the nature of the response; and what action he is taking as a result of the consultation. [16174]

Sir Paul Beresford: My letter of 23 January to the hon. Member explained that my Department's officials were inviting comments from officers of the English local authority associations on the provisions of the Bill. By the time limit of 24 February, comments had been received from the Association of County Councils, the Association of District Councils, the Association of London Authorities and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The comments are being considered.

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has revised the carbon dioxide savings target he set for the Energy Saving Trust in the climate change programme; [15893]

(2) what representations the Energy Saving Trust has made to him regarding the carbon dioxide savings they expect to deliver by 2000; [15894]

(3) what meetings he has held with the Energy Saving trust to discuss the carbon dioxide savings they are expected to deliver by 2000; and if he will make a statement. [15895]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department has held several meetings with the Energy Saving Trust recently and has received a number of representations. The trust is currently reviewing its plans. It estimates that the programme of activities already established and financed will save about 0.3 million tonnes of carbon in the year 2000. Further schemes will make additional contributions, but they are not yet established.

Coastal Erosion

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the scientific studies funded by his Department which link United kingdom coastal erosion with chemical contamination of Danish beaches. [15938]

Mr. Atkins: No studies funded by the Department show any link between United Kingdom coastal erosion and contamination of Danish beaches. German, Dutch and Danish coastal waters receive large inputs from the major continental rivers such as the Rhine and the Elbe. Danish agriculture is a substantial source of nutrients in their waters. Inputs are kept close to the coast by poor mixing with waters well out to sea, leading to problems such as eutrophication.

The 1989 "North Sea Satellite Colour Atlas", published with data and financial contributions from the Department and the Natural Environment Research Council, showed a natural plume of sediment material from the Norfolk coast. The poor mixing of continental waters with those offshore prevents material from the UK reaching Danish coastal waters; there is, therefore, no link between this material and problems in Danish waters.

Asbestos

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory obligations are imposed on owners of land which the Health and Safety Executive has identified as a major asbestos contamination zone; and if he will make a statement. [15972]

Mr. Atkins: The Health and Safety Executive is responsible for the operation of the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987. The regulations place duties on employers in respect of their employees when working with asbestos. Employers also have duties in relation to other persons who might be affected by such work.

Contamination with asbestos could come within the definitions of statutory nuisances under the terms of section 79 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 if, in any individual circumstances it is prejudicial to health or a nuisance. Under section 80 of that Act, the owner or occupier of premises could be served with an abatement notice requiring the execution of such works as may be necessary to deal with the asbestos contamination, either where he is himself responsible for the nuisance, or where the person responsible cannot be found.

The Environment Bill, which received its First Reading in this House on 21 March 1995, introduces a specific definition of contaminated land and regulatory machinery for dealing with it, to replace the use of the more general definitions and procedures relating to statutory nuisances. Under these provisions, local authorities will serve remediation notices requiring steps by way of assessment, remedial works or monitoring when they identify contaminated land. In line with the "polluter pays" principle, the primary responsibility for dealing with any contamination will rest with the person who caused or knowingly permitted the contamination to be present. However, responsibility will pass to the owner or occupier of the land, either where no such person can be found or where his responsibilities have been transferred through contractual means.

Odour Emissions

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce on-the-spot fines for local authorities to apply to those responsible for smell nuisances to residential areas from industrial and farming sources; and if he will make a statement. [16127]

Mr. Atkins: No. Many industrial processes are regulated under part I of the Environmental Protection Act

1990, which provides for controls over odour emissions among other types of pollution. Controls also exist under part III of the Act to deal with complaints of possible statutory nuisances, which includes smells arising on industrial, trade or business premises and those premises being in a state which is prejudicial to health or constitutes a nuisance.

Enclosure Acts

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the Enclosure Acts; and if he will make a statement. [16171]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have no plans to review the Enclosure Acts.

North Sea Pollution

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has undertaken on the economic and employment impacts of North sea pollution on (a) fisheries and (b) tourism. [15937]

Mr. Atkins: No studies of economic and employment impacts of North sea pollution have been undertaken by the Department. The priority for the Department's marine research programme is to provide a scientific basis for measures to control pollution. It is implicit within this that high standards of water quality can only be of benefit to economic and tourism prospects.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence his Department has evaluated that discharged substances are dispersed once they reach the coastal waters of the United Kingdom. [15939]

Mr. Atkins: A range of studies, the latest of which is quoted in the 1993 "North Sea Quality Status Report"—page 102—have shown that physical, chemical and biological mechanisms in North sea waters lead to widespread dispersal of substances, subject to the mixing characteristics of different regions. A copy of the quality status report is in the Library of the House.

Rights of Way

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to place a statutory requirement on highway authorities to consult persons whose property rights may be directly or indirectly affected by proposals affecting rights of way; and if he will make it his policy to require such consultations to be completed before the implementation of any such proposals. [15891]

Mr. Atkins: I have no such proposals. Consultations, other then those statutorily required, are at the discretion of the order-making authority.

However, Rights of way Review Committee, practice guidance note no. 1, on consultation over changes to rights of way, recommends authorities to consult landowners affected by a proposal, including owners and occupies other than those across whose land the right of way in question runs or will run. This is helpful advice.

"Using Water Wisely"

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received and from what sources, in respect of the Government's consultation paper "Using Water Wisely". [16577]

Mr. Atkins: The responses received in respect of the consultation paper "Using Water Wisely" are shown in the table.

Source	Number
Water companies[1]	10
Professional and Trade Associations	30
Local Authorities (including local authority associations)	150
Consumer Groups	5
Environmental Groups	21
Water Industry Companies and Consultants	29
Government Departments, Agencies Etc	12
Other Organisations and individuals	90
Total responses	347

[1] The Water Services Association and Water Companies Association submitted a joint response on behalf of all water service and water only companies. In addition nine water service companies submitted separate responses.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the responses to the paper, "Using Water Wisely", supported the proposal to give water companies mandatory targets for reducing leakage. [16552]

Mr. Atkins: Of the 347 responses received 126 were in favour of the proposal to give water companies mandatory targets for reducing leakage.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish his response to the consultation process prompted by the publication of "Using Water Wisely". [16551]

Mr. Atkins: We expect to publish the response to the consultation process later this year.

Water Rating

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes to the system of water rating his Department is considering under the Government's review of charging policy. [16424]

Mr. Atkins: The outcome of the Government's deliberations will be made known in due course.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is responsible for approving applications to develop opencast mining in Oxfordshire. [16241]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Mineral Planning Authority, Oxfordshire county council are responsible for determining applications to develop opencast mining in Oxfordshire.

Smoking

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment what facilities are provided and arrangements made for the comfort and well-being of staff who (a) smoke and (b) do not wish to be affected by smoking at (i) the work station and (ii) rest, recreation and refreshment facilities at 2 Marsham street, London. [16567]

Sir Paul Beresford: Smoking is prohibited in lifts, toilets, conference rooms, designated restaurant and refreshment areas, some rest rooms and in areas where there are health and safety implications. Staff may decide among themselves to ban smoking in their own or shared offices and in recreation areas. Staff are discouraged from smoking in other common areas.

Inspectorate of Pollution

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the 1995–96 charging schemes for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. [17203]

Mr. Atkins: Charges to cover the costs of regulating processes under integrated pollution control and Premises Subject to Radioactive Substances Act 1993 Regulations were introduced in 1991 under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Act requires Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to balance costs and income, taking one financial year with another.

With the agreement of the Treasury, and following consultation with industry and other bodies, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales have now made revised IPC and RSA93 charging schemes, specifying the revised scales of fees and charges which will take effect from 1 April 1995.

Most charges are held at their 1994–95 levels, the exceptions being the IPC subsistence charge which is increased by 4.7 per cent. to £1,805 per component, to contribute to additional regulatory activity of around 10 per cent. needed to implement the check monitoring programme, and an increase in the RSA93 band 3 subsistence charge of 12 per cent. to £1,115, to accommodate a request from some operators who sought and were granted a compensatory reduction of 50 per cent. to £710 in some variation fees.

The rate per inspector day will be £924, a reduction of 5.1 per cent. in the rate for 1994–95, but offset in calculating the charges by a change in the method of accounting for inspector's travelling time.

Full details are included in the revised schemes, copies of which I have placed in the Library.

Copies of the schemes will shortly be sent to relevant operators and to other interested bodies.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the annual report for 1994 on compulsory competitive tendering in local authorities. [17202]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department has published today the "CCT and Local Government in England Annual Report" for 1994. It describes the achievements of 1994, both on the work extending CCT to new services and in promoting and enforcing fair competition for the existing services. The report also describes two major research studies which have been published in the last year.

Copies of the report will be sent to all local authorities in England, and to the main trade associations and others involved with CCT. Copies have also been placed in the House Library.

During the last year CCT has been extended to further manual services, as well as to certain local authority professional services. Housing management, legal services, construction and property services, on-street parking, vehicle fleet management and security services have been added to the statute. These followed extensive consultation with the local authority associations, and representatives from the professional and trade organisations.

My Department had to investigate over 100 allegations that local authorities had acted anti-competitively when tendering services. The majority were resolved without statutory action, but in nine cases directions were given; most required the local authority to re-tender the work. My right hon. Friend also gave 39 directions where activities had failed to meet the specified financial objective; four of these prevented the local authority from carrying out the work in-house.

Outstanding Arrears

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list, by local authority, the total amounts outstanding in arrears of (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge and (c) council tax; [16875]

(2) what is the total amount of outstanding arrears for all local authorities of (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge and (c) council tax. [16876]

Mr. Gummer: Estimates of uncollected community charge and council tax for each local authority are published regularly by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy; figures for 31 March 1994 are available in its revenue collection statistics 1993–94 publication, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The outstanding arrears of council tax in England as at 31 March 1994 were estimated to be £580 million, of which £226 million had been collected by December 1994. The outstanding arrears of community charge in England as at 31 March 1994 were estimated to be £1,700 million, of which £217 million had been collected by December 1994. No data are yet available centrally on the sums of either council tax or community charge written off between April and December 1994.

Information on arrears of domestic rates is not published by CIPFA and is not available centrally.

EMPLOYMENT

National Vocational Qualifications

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of 16 to 17-year-olds attained qualifications equivalent to NVQ level 3 in each of the last five years (a) nationally and (b) in the West Midlands. [15821]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is shown in the table:

Race Relations Employment Advisory Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence he has, following the decision to put out to tender the services provided by the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service, that those not currently employed by the service will have greater knowledge and skills and perform in a superior manner to those currently employed in that service. [15863]

Mr. Oppenheim: The market test of the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service will explore how the service can best be delivered. In considering bids, the Department will consider most carefully which organisation is best placed to maintain the nature and quality of the service. The assessment of suppliers will cover their financial standing, experience in providing similar services and experience of staff and quality systems and methods. At this stage it is too early to speculate on the outcome of the market test.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the expected savings from the market testing of the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service; over what period savings will be costed; and when he expects savings to be first identifiable. [16128]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government's policy, which is set out in the White Paper, "Competing for Quality", is to provide high quality public service in the most cost effective way. The Race Relations Employment Advisory Service was assessed as meeting the criteria for market testing. At this stage it is too early to speculate on the outcome of the market test, including details of any savings that may be made. Tenders will be evaluated over a 10-year period.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assurances he can give on the maintenance of the quality and quantity of the service provided by the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service. [16129]

Mr. Oppenheim: Ministers have given an undertaking that the nature and quality of the service will be maintained following market testing. The precise requirements for the service, including activity levels and quality criteria, will be determined during the process. Whatever the outcome of the market test, the Department will continue to monitor performance to ensure that employers receive sound advice on the development of racial equality policies.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what was the cost of the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service in 1993–94; and what is the expected cost for 1994–95 and 1995–96. [16420]

Mr. Oppenheim: In 1993–94, the cost of the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service was £0.9 million. The cost for each of the years 1994–95 and 1995–96 is expected to be £1 million.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will commence the market testing of the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service. [16418]

Mr. Oppenheim: The process of market testing the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service began in November 1994. An invitation to potential suppliers to express an interest in providing the service was published on 23 February 1995.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many companies, voluntary groups or employee groups have expressed an interest in the market testing of the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service. [16421]

Mr. Oppenheim: So far, expressions of interest have been received from 18 organisations.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what criteria will have to be met by those who tender for the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service. [16419]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Department's requirement is for a national service under a single contract—or a prime contractor, if a consortium—with a clear specification of the types of services and standards required. Potential suppliers will be shortlisted on the information requested by the Department in response to expressions of interest. In broad terms, this will cover financial standing, experience in providing similar services, experience of staff and quality systems and methods. Evaluation criteria for bids are being drawn up in parallel with the statement of service requirements. Further information will be provided to shortlisted suppliers at the invitation to tender stage.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to publish the report commissioned by the Health and Safety Executive from the institute of occupational health at Birmingham university on the effect of organo-phosphorous chemicals in sheep dip on 200 sheep farmers. [16061]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my noble Friend Lord Inglewood on 20 March 1995, Official Report, House of Lords, column 1014.

Remploy

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the special contracts arrangements in assisting disabled Remploy workers. [16059]

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on 15 March 1995, Official Report, column. 624.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's proposed additional expenditure to help people coming off incapacity benefits in each of the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98; on what items it is to be spent; and how many people it is estimated will be helped in each of those years. [16115]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 28 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about proposed additional expenditure to help people coming off Incapacity Benefit (IB).

We are keen to ensure that people no longer entitled to IB who make a claim for unemployment benefit are given effective help with returning to work. We therefore intend to provide a comprehensive package of additional help for them.

Clients coming off IB will be eligible for immediate entry to a number of our programmes. As a result a number of additional places in Jobplan Workshop (JPW), and Jobclub/Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) scheme are being funded, details of which are as follows.

Year	Clients	Programme	Cost
1995 to 1996	86,000	JPW	£9,630,000
	70,000	Jobclub/JIG	£13,230,000
1996 to 1997	66,700	JPW	£7,837,000
	58,000	Jobplan/JIG	£11,063,000
1997 to 1998	15,400	JPW	£1,900,000
	14,000	Jobplan/JIG	£2,683,000

Those people who are identified at an initial interview as needing specialist help will be referred to Placing, Assessment and Counselling Teams, the number of clients and additional costs for which are estimated as follows.

Year	Clients	Cost £
1995 to 1996	40,000	11,840,000
1996 to 1997	29,000	8,787,000
1997 to 1998	15,000	3,266,000

All new clients who were previously claiming IB will be given, like all new clients, a full advisory interview when they make their claim for unemployment benefit. This interview will provide the opportunity for a full discussion of the client's job goals and of the most appropriate means for achieving this.

I hope this information is helpful and assures you of our intent to provide clients who were previously claiming IB with practical advice and information which is geared to their individual needs.

Job Clubs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the details of the financial assistance available to job clubs in the Durham North district to assist them in the provision of services for people with disabilities; and what were the amounts spent during the last financial year. [15997]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 28 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about financial assistance available to Jobclubs in the Durham North District to assist people with disabilities.

The cost of Jobclub provision in Durham North District between April 1994 and February was £161,940. Separate records on the cost of providing facilities for people with disabilities are not maintained.

There are seven Jobclubs within the Durham North District, none of which are specifically for any particular client group. People with disabilities are encouraged to use the standard provision and where necessary specialist help, for example communicators for the deaf and personal readers or specialist equipment is available via our Placing Assessment and Counselling Teams (PACTs).

During the period April 1994 to February, 111 people, who have indicated that they have a long term health problem or disability which affects the kind of work they are able to do, have attended Jobclubs in the Durham North District. None of these clients required extra assistance from the PACT to enable them to utilise facilities in the Jobclubs.

I hope this is helpful.

Lucas Gardner Site (Asbestos)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what grounds the Health and Safety Executive has ordered cessation of work at the former Lucas Gardner site at Bath road, Bristol; and if he will make a statement. [15971]

Mr. Oppenheim: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive visited the former Lucas Gardner site at Bath road, Bristol in December 1994 where demolition work was in progress. They suspected that roofing sheets and pipe lagging contained asbestos. The manner of demolition was such that if asbestos were present it was not being properly removed or controlled to minimise the spread of asbestos fibres. A prohibition notice was served on the contractor preventing further demolition work until a safe system of work had been prepared and appropriate precautions taken.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what types of asbestos have been found on the premises at the former Lucas Gardner site at Bath road, Bristol. [15969]

Mr. Oppenheim: Samples taken from the former Lucas Gardner site and analysed by the Health and Safety Executive were found to contain crysotile (white), crocidolite (blue) and amosite (brown) asbestos.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people he estimates will lose their social security entitlement as a consequence of his reduction of the number of weekly hours which students can commit to their studies without losing benefit eligibility. [15944]

Miss Widdecombe: The Government's proposals are designed to allow the same number of people to study while claiming benefits for the unemployed after the introduction of jobseeker's allowance as do so now. The new rules will not come into force until April 1996. The detail of the transitional arrangements for JSA and other social security benefits is still being considered. I explained to the Jobseeekrs Bill Committee on 14 February 1995 at column 374, however, that our intention is that no one who is currently on a course will have to give it up because of the change that we are proposing.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16280]

Miss Widdecombe: There was no expenditure by the Employment Department Group or contracts with the private sector for public relations activities during the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16208]

Miss Widdecombe: Central guidance on publicity and the use of public relations consultants has been produced by the Cabinet Office for Government Departments. The Employment Department Group and its agencies have been issued with that guidance which stipulates the stated policy of successive administrations to rely on the expertise and experience of the Government's own advisers and to decline offers from commercial public relations companies.

Training Budget

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money he has made available for (a) modern apprenticeships and (b) youth training in 1995–96. [16272]

Mr. Paice: We are making £669 million available for modern apprenticeships and youth training in England in 1995–96. Modern apprenticeships are part of the youth programme budget and it is not possible to distinguish elements for youth training from those for modern apprenticeships.

Caxton House (Smoking)

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what facilities are provided and arrangements made for the comfort and well-being of staff who (a) smoke and (b) do not wish to be affected by smoking at (i) the work station and (ii) rest, recreation and refreshment facilities at Caxton house, Tothill street, London. [16566]

Miss Widdecombe: All refurbished offices and other areas are designated non-smoking areas. There are four rooms on the refurbished floors for staff who wish to smoke. In unrefurbished areas, people may smoke only if all staff in the area consent. The staff restaurant, staff tea point areas and all common areas are designated non-smoking areas.

Careers Service Contracts

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Careers Service contracts awarded to private sector companies are identical to those awarded to TEC/LEA partnerships other than in respect of volumes and other volume-related details. [16262]

Mr. Paice: Yes.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16650]

Miss Widdecombe: A total of 3,550 copies of the Department's 1995 departmental report, Cm 2805, were printed and published. In addition to the copies presented to Parliament and placed in the Library, the report was also circulated to the Employment Select Committee, the Public Accounts Committee, the media and internally within the Department. The costs of printing and publishing the report were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which aims to recover the costs from sales revenue. The Department met the design costs of the report, which were £35,600. The cover price of the report is £14.60. A total of 2,134 copies of the report have been sold since its publication on 10 March 1995.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16651]

Miss Widdecombe: Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. Printing and publishing costs of the reports have been borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which has sought to recover these costs from sales revenue. The Department is responsible for the design costs of the report. Data for the five years of publication are as follows:

1991:—£12.780
1992:—£12,540
1993:—£13,450
1994:—£21,600
1995:—£35,600

The increased costs for the 1994 and 1995 reports reflect decisions to improve the range, quality and presentation of informaiton provided to both Parliament and the public.

Environmental Improvement

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to increase the number of people involved in types of employment that enhance the environment. [16295]

Miss Widdecombe: The Government do not seek to influence the number of people employed in specific parts of the economy. Our role is to promote the right framework in which businesses can create jobs. If there is a demand for more jobs that enhance the environment, employment in that sector will increase. The Government's commitment to sustainable development encourages economic development that is compatible with environmental protection and enhancement.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16559]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested is given in the following list:

1979–80: Not available
1994–95: 14.5

The Department's press office was merged with the Training Agency press office in November 1989. Staffing figures reflect this.

Client Advisers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the duties and job objectives of the client advisers appointed by his Department to liaise with claimants of unemployment benefit or other benefits granted as a consequence of unemployment; and whether these objectives include facilitating clients to find work or a place on a training scheme. [16726]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 28 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the duties and objectives of Employment Service (ES) client advisers.

Employment Service (ES) client advisers have two main objectives: to help people into work as soon as possible by providing them with practical advice and information about jobs, training and other opportunities that are available; and to make sure people claiming benefit understand and comply with the conditions under which it is paid. These are that people are available for, capable of and actively seeking work.

To fulfil these objectives all my offices offer our unemployed clients a structured and coherent information and advisory service which is based on regular interviews with an adviser. At these interviews clients are able to discuss their situation, the steps they are taking to find work and the employment and training opportunities which are available. The aim of each interview is to assess the client's situation, determine their needs and agree an appropriate course of action which, if taken, will offer the client the best chance of success in their search for work.

As part of this, our advisers liaise closely with employers, providers of employment, training and other opportunities, to maintain their knowledge of the jobs market and make sure clients have access to as wider range of opportunities as possible. They are also able to give clients advice and information on other benefits, including benefits available to people in work.

I hope this is helpful and assures you of our intent to provide our clients with as much practical help as possible to support their search for work.

Council of Ministers

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Social Affairs Council held on 27 March. [17183]

Mr. Portillo: I attended the Social Affairs Council on 27 March in Brussels. I was accompanied by my hon. Friend the Minister of State. The principal items on the agenda were the draft directive on posted workers, a draft decision on the programme to combat social exclusion, draft resolutions on the balanced participation of women and men in decision-making and on implementation of community social legislation, a Presidency memorandum on the social dimension of international trade and discussion of follow-up to the discussion of employment issues at the Essen European Council on 9 and 10 December 1994.

Discussion of the draft directive on posted workers was once again inconclusive. The UK has considerable and long-standing difficulties of both principle and detail. A number of other member states also had significant difficulties with various aspects of the proposal, which the Presidency referred back to COREPER for further work.

There was, in the event, no discussion of the social exclusion programme. The resolutions on the balanced participation of women and men in decision-making and on the implementation of directives in the social field were unanimously agreed with little discussion.

There was a tour de table on the Presidency memorandum on the social dimension of international trade. I said that the UK was strongly opposed to child and forced labour and that developing countries needed help and encouragement to eliminate such practices. I emphasised the importance of free trade in promoting both economic and social development in the third world and that trade sanctions would hold back rather than encourage social progress. No Council conclusions were reached, though the Presidency drew some conclusions of its own.

There was a discussion of the role of the Social Affairs Council in the follow-up to the conclusions of the Essen European Council on employment. The Commission reported briefly on progress on establishing the European Health and Safety Agency and on action it was taking under the social protocol.

Lindane

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions are to be given to workers who use or spray Lindane—Gamma HCH or Gamma BHC—as part of their employment. [15499]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 March 1995]: Work with Lindane—the common name for Gamma HCH, also known as Gamma BHC—is covered by the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994. COSHH requires employers to inform, instruct and train their employees about: the nature of the substances they work with, the risks created by exposure to those substances, and the precautions to be taken. When used as a pesticide, lindane is also subject to the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. COPR requires that pesticides are approved by Ministers. Conditions of approval and instructions for use appear on the product labels.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence has been supplied by the London Hazards Centre to the Government about health problems and hazards to the development and functions of vital organs possibly caused by the use of Lindane—Gamma HCH or Gamma BHC; and if he will make a statement. [15492]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The Government are not aware of any such evidence supplied by the London Hazards Centre. The Government's armoury of controls for chemicals, including Lindane, provide adequate safeguards to protect the health of users and people who might be affected by their use.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15578]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The Department and its Ministers pursue objectives which fully reflect the need to minimise regulatory and administrative burdens on business. There is also a Minister with particular responsibility for promoting deregulation within the Department.

Agricultural Wages Board

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of employees in employment covered by the Agricultural Wages Board, using micro data from the Quarterly Labour Force Survey, for all quarters from spring 1992 to the last quarter. [16104]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 March 1995]: All employees in agriculture and horticulture are covered by the Agricultural Wages Board. The table gives information from the Labour Force Survey for the number of employees in agriculture for all quarters from spring 1992.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Butter

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what price British wholesalers buy butter per 250g pack; at what price the European Community sells butter per 250g pack on the world market; what are the levels of European Community production and consumption of butter; what is the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on butter subsidies; and what is the annual cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the butter market. [16134]

Mr. Jack: The first-hand delivered price of butter in the United Kingdom is between 68p to 82.5p per 250g pack. The price of butter on the world market fluctuates and is currently in a range $2,000 to $2,430 per tonne.

Estimates of production and consumption of butter in the European Community are given in "Agriculture Situation in the Community, 1993 Report".

CAP expenditure in 1994 on internal butter disposal subsidies was 669.4 million ecu=£517.1 using the average 1994 conversion rate of 1 ecu=£0.77249 million.

Details of the Exchequer cost of CAP support in the UK for butter can be found in section I of table 9.1 of "Agriculture in the UK". The UK also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of the CAP support in other member states.

Copies of the publications mentioned have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers have had their monthly milk cheques withheld by Milk Marque because of administration problems at the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce. [15940]

Mr. Jack: Purchasers do not inform the intervention board of payments they are withholding for milk deliveries. This is a matter between the purchaser and the producer. The intervention board has provided Milk Marque, and all other milk purchasers, on a weekly basis with all changes in the quota registered with it confirmed in the previous week. The intervention board is always ready to assist if the processing of any quota movement had been delayed for any reason.

Farm Costs

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost to the United Kingdom per acre farmed in the European Community. [16136]

Mr. Jack: A note on "The Cost of the Common Agricultural Policy to Consumers and Taxpayers" was placed in the Library of the House on 9 March 1995. Information on the area farmed in the European Community is given in "Agricultural Situation in the Community, 1993 Report", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Food Prices

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate by how much the average food bill of the average family of four is altered as a direct result of the common agricultural policy, giving figures separately for (a) dairy products, (b) sugar, (c) beef, (d) cereals, (e) rice, (f) fruit and vegetables, (g) potatoes, (h) oilseeds, (i) linseed, (j) olive oil, (k) wine and (l) tobacco. [16154]

Mr. Jack: A note on "The Cost of the Common Agricultural Policy to Consumers and Taxpayers" was placed in the Library of the House on 9 March 1995. Separate figures are not available by commodity, but some information for the European Community as a whole is given in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development publication "Agricultural Policies' Markets and Trade, Monitoring and Outlook 1994" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will estimate the cost of the common agricultural policy to each household in the United Kingdom, breaking this figure down into (a) the running costs of the common agricultural policy and (b) the amount which the policy adds to food prices; [16150]

(2) if he will estimate the combined cost of the common agricultural policy and other national farm aids to the United Kingdom; and if he will break down this figure into (a) payments directly or indirectly received by farmers and (b) the cost to consumers in the form of higher food prices. [16151]

Mr. Jack: A note on "The Cost of the Common Agricultural Policy to Consumers and Taxpayers" was placed in the Library of the House on 9 March 1995.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the price at which British wholesalers buy (a) linseed, (b) tobacco, (c) cereals, (d) oilseeds, (e) milk and (f) beef per tonne; what he estimates the price of each commodity would be in a free market without European Community price intervention; what are the levels of European Community production and consumption of each commodity; what is the level of common agricultural policy on expenditure on subsidies to each commodity; and what is the cost to the British Exchequer of European Commodity intervention in the market in each community. [16153]

Mr. Jack: Prices received by producers for agricultural commodities are reported to Eurostat, and consistent series for cereals, oilseeds, milk and beef appear in the publication "Agricultural Prices". No representative price series is available for linseed or tobacco.

It is not possible to estimate what the price of each commodity would be in the free market without European Community intervention without making a large number of hypothetical assumptions.

Estimates of production and consumption in the European Community for each commodity are given in the "Agricultural Situation in the Community, 1993 Report".

The 1994 budget outturn estimates of common agricultural policy expenditure on these commodities are as follows:

	mecu	£ million
Cereals (Market support)	2,087	1,612
Arable area payments:
Cereals	5,540	4,280
Linseed	125	97
Oilseeds	2,549	1,969
Tobacco	1,057	816
Milk	4,249	3,282
Beef	3,467	2,678

Details of the Exchequer cost of CAP support in the UK for these commodities, except tobacco, for which there is no expenditure in the UK, can be found in section I of table 9.1 of "Agriculture in the UK". The UK also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of the CAP support in other member states.

Copies of the publications referred to are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate by how much common agricultural prices have risen in weak currency countries as a direct result of the system of pegging farm prices to the deutschmark via the switchover system for each country. [16137]

Mr. Jack: As support prices are set by the Council of Ministers in the annual price-fixing negotiations, it is not possible to say what prices would have been set had the switchover system not existed.

The switchover mechanism was abolished on 1 February 1995. This did not result in any change in the level of CAP support prices in national currency terms. However, there will be no further increases as a result of this mechanism.

Sugar

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what price British wholesalers buy sugar per kilogramme; at what price the European Community sells sugar per kilogramme on the world market; what are the levels of European Community production and consumption of sugar; what is the level of the common agricultural policy expenditure on sugar subsidies; what is the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the sugar market. [16132]

Mr. Jack: Information on actual prices paid for bulk white sugar is not available. However, prices are likely to be in the range of the effective support price provided by the sugar regime and producers "list" prices—between about 57p per kilogramme and 68p per kilogramme.

Export refunds enable Community bulk white sugar to be sold at the world price, which is currently around 25p per kilogramme, free on board.

Estimates of production and consumption of sugar in the European Community are given in the "Agricultural Situation in the Community, 1993 Report", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

The provisional outturn for Community expenditure on sugar in 1994 is 2,062 mecu—£1,593 million[1]. Production and storage levies contributed 1,118 mecu—£864 million[1]—to own resources.

Details of the Exchequer cost of CAP support in the UK for sugar can be found in section 1 of table 9.1 of "Agriculture in the UK", copies of which have been deposited in the Library of the House. The UK also contributes to the EC budget as a whole, which funds the cost of the CAP support in other member states.

Rice

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what price British wholesalers buy rice per tonne; what he estimates the price of rice per tonne would be in the free market without European Community price intervention and what is the annual cost to the British consumer of the common agricultural policy in the rice market. [16135]

Mr. Jack: Information on the price of rice to wholesalers is not gathered centrally.

It is not possible to estimate what the price of rice per tonne would be in the free market without European Community intervention without making a large number of hypothetical assumptions.

The only readily available information on the cost to the British consumer of the common agricultural policy in the rice market is given by the consumer subsidy equivalents in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development publication "Agricultural Policies, Markets and Trade, Monitoring and Outlook 1994".

Organo-phosphorous Chemicals

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish the latest report from the Veterinary Medicines Directorate on adverse reactions to organo-phosphorous chemicals by farmers; and what change to such reactions was shown by the last published report. [16062]

Mrs. Browning: I expect the next report to the Veterinary Products Committee, by the appraisal panel for human suspected adverse reactions to veterinary medicines, to be published by the end of April. Only one report has thus far been published, so no comparisons can yet be drawn.

Wine

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what price British wholesalers buy wine per 75 cl bottle; what he estimates the price of wine per bottle would be in a free market without European Community price intervention; what are the levels of European Community production and consumption; what is the level of common agricultural policy expenditure on wine subsidies; and what is the cost to the British Exchequer of European Community intervention in the wine sector. [16155]

Mr. Jack: The price at which British wholesalers buy wine is a matter for commercial negotiation and varies by consignment.

For this reason, and because it would require a large number of hypothetical assumptions, it is not possible to estimate what the price of wine per bottle would be in the free market without European Community intervention.

The European Commission estimates that European Community wine production in the 1993–94 wine year was 159 million hectolitres, that 129 mhl was consumed as wine in the EC, net exports were 9 mhl and other uses—for example, vinegar, vermouth and eaux de vie—12 mhl.

Total common agricultural policy expenditure in 1994 on the wine regime was 1,220 million ecu, or £1,002 million, provisional outturn.

The Exchequer cost of CAP support for wine in the UK is estimated at £820,000 for the 1994–95 financial year. The UK also contributes to the European Community budget as a whole, which funds the cost of the wine support system in other member states.

Olive Oil

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what price British wholesalers buy olive oil per tonne; what she estimates the price of olive oil per tonne wold be in a free market without European Community price intervention; and what is the annual cost to the consumer of taxes on imports of olive oil. [16133]

Mr. Jack: Prices received by producers for agricultural commodities are reported to Eurostat and a consistent series for olive oil appears in the publication "Agricultural Prices", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

It is not possible to estimate what the price of olive oil would be in the free market without European Community intervention without making a large number of hypothetical assumptions.

No estimates are readily available on the annual cost to the consumer of taxes on imports of olive oil.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of goat pox were reported in each year since 1985. [15973]

Mrs. Browning: No cases of goat pox have ever been recorded in England.

Fish Catches

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the value and tonnage of i(a) fish, (b) molluscs and (c) crustacea landed in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) Wales, (iii) England, (iv) Scotland and (v) Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [16690]

---

[1] £1=1.2945 ecu.

Mr. Jack: The available information is published in table 3.3. of "UK Sea Fisheries Statistics", 1993.

Comparable information for 1994 is not yet available.

Fishing Restrictions

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the defence his officials will be employing in the European Court of Justice in the case brought by the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations against the Government's days at sea restrictions; and if he will make a statement. [16371]

Mr. Jack: It would not be appropriate for me to comment in advance of the oral hearing due to take place in Luxembourg on 29 March. The positions of both parties will, however, be a mater of public record in the reports of proceedings and, ultimately, the judgment of the court.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to abandon the defence of the days at sea restrictions in the European Court of Justice in the case being brought by the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations; and if he will make a statement. [16370]

Mr. Jack: The action in question was initiated by the NFFO by way of judicial review in the United Kingdom courts of certain measures adopted by Parliament. It was subsequently referred to the European court for a ruling on the interpretation of EU law. In the circumstances, the Government are obliged to respond and explain their position. It is, however, open to the applicants to discontinue the proceedings at any stage.

Mr. Philip J. Corrigan

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to obtain from the Minister of Primary Industries and Energy in Australia details of the nature and outcome of each of the charges under the Australian Public Service Act against Mr. Philip J. Corrigan, now appointed head of operations at the Meat Hygiene Service; and if he will make a statement on the information so obtained. [16724]

Mrs. Browning: My Ministry has contacted the Department of Primary Industries and Energy in Canberra on this matter.

Agricultural Tenancies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the number and total acreage of tenancies under the categories (a) agricultural holding tenancies as defined in the Agriculture Act 1986, (b) Gladstone v. Bower arrangements, (c) grazing or mowing agreements and (d) Ministry-approved short-term lettings and licences. [14927]

Mr. Jack: The surveys operated by MAFF do not require respondents to supply the level of detailed information that would enable these separate totals to be compiled. There is, however, a survey carried out annually by the Central Association of Agricultural Valuers which gives information on new lettings in these categories.

Fish Quotas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list those producer organisations in the fishing industry that were fined in each year since 1988 for overshooting their allocated quota; [15587]

(2) what evidence he has that producer organisations in the fishing industry have taken action against individual members who breached their quota in each year since 1988; [15589]

(3) if he will list for each year since 1988 what action was taken by his Department against those producer organisations in the fishing industries which overshot their quota; and how many prosecutions were commenced in England and Wales; [15586]

(4) if he will list those producer organisations in the fishing industry that have taken action against individual members; and what penalties were imposed in each case in England and Wales since 1988. [15588]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 March 1995]: In the United Kingdom, producer organisations are permitted to manage allocations of quota on behalf of those members with vessels exceeding 10m overall length. Once an allocation has been made, it is the responsibility of the producer organisation to ensure that its overall allocation is not exceeded and to take appropriate action to deal with those members who infringe the rules of the organisation. The fisheries departments do not maintain records of the disciplinary action that producer organisations take. Where a producer organisation has exceeded or is likely to exceed its quota allocation for any particular stock, the licences of its members will be varied to prohibit further landings of the stock in question.

Producer organisations are subject to a system of quota penalties and compensation for over-fishing. These arrangements, which have been agreed with the industry, require that where any producer organisation or other group in the UK fishing fleet exceeds its allocation for a particular stock, the over-fish will not be included in its track record when the departments calculate the subsequent year's allocation. Where the over-fish leads to the UK quota being exceeded, and other groups in the fleet being disadvantaged by the early closure of a fishery, the over-fish will be deducted from the offending group's allocation for the subsequent year. This deduction will then be used to compensate groups prejudiced by the over-fishing, after taking account of those groups likely uptake had the fishery not been closed.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list for each year since 1988 (a) the total allowable catch for each International Council for the Exploration of the Seas area, (b) the British total allowable catch for each ICES area, (c) the total allocated to each producer organisation in tonnage and percentage terms of the British total allowable catch and (d) the total allocated to the non-sector in tonnage and percentage terms of the British total allowable catch; [15591]

(2) if he will list those producer organisations in the fishing industry which overshot their allocated quota for each species in each year since 1988 in England and Wales. [15585]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The system of sectoral management, under which producer organisations may manage allocations of quota on behalf of their members, has been fully operational since 1991.

I have arranged for tonnage data on Community TACs and UK quota since 1988, and on allocations made to producer organisations and the non sector and the uptake of their allocations since 1991, to be placed in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Former Yugoslavia

14. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce or withdraw British forces in former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [14640]

Mr. Soames: We intend to maintain our contribution to UNPROFOR so long as our forces can continue to carry out the UN mandate at an acceptable level of risk. The size of our contribution is kept under close review.

21. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what redeployment is planned for UK military forces currently serving with UNPROFOR in Croatia. [14647]

Mr. Soames: None.

24. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are currently serving in Bosnia with the United Nations; and what plans he has for increasing their numbers. [14651]

Mr. Soames: There are currently some 3,400 British personnel serving in the former Yugoslavia as part of UNPROFOR. Some 190 personnel are on standby to deploy to Bosnia as the remainder of the additional forces which the United Kingdom offered to the UN in January to help with the implementation of the cessation of hostilities agreement.

Chemical Weapons Convention

15. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of the chemical weapons convention on international security. [14641]

Mr. Soames: The chemical weapons convention provides for a comprehensive, global and verifiable ban on a complete class of weapons of mass destruction and also for the destruction of very large quantities of existing chemical warfare agents. Once fully implemented it will make a significant contribution to international security.

Armed Services (Deaths)

16. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the number of members of Her Majesty's armed services who have died on active service since 1965. [14642]

Mr. Soames: In the period from 1966 to 1994, 850 members of the armed forces have died on active service as a result of hostile and enemy action or as a result of terrorist activity in Northern Ireland.

National Army Museum

17. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the development of the national army museum beyond London; and if he will make a statement. [14643]

Mr. Soames: Although the national army museum receives a grant in aid from my Department, the question of development of the museum is, in the first instance, a matter for the museum trustees.

British Defence

18. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that British defence will not be run by the European Commission. [14644]

Mr. Soames: Yes. One of the key considerations in the Government's approach to the treatment of European defence issues at the 1996 Inter-Governmental Conference is that the essential inter-Governmental nature of decision making on defence should be preserved.

Naval Engineering College, Manadon

19. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the sale of RNEC Manadon. [14645]

Mr. Soames: I am pleased to say that our disposal strategy has progressed well. A planning brief for the site is now complete and has been approved by Plymouth city council planning officials.

Farms, Upper Coquet Valley

20. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent progress he has made in providing electricity supplies to farms owned by his Department in the Upper Coquet valley, Northumberland. [14646]

Mr. Soames: A stand-alone farm power system has been installed on one of my Department's farms on the Otterburn training area. We are at present discussing with tenants the suitability of replicating the system on other farms on the training area.

RAF Chivenor

22. Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he is making in considering the relocation of Marines units to RAF Chivenor; and when he expects to make an announcement. [14648]

Mr. Soames: Studies are nearing completion and it is our intention to publish a consultative document setting out any proposals which emerge from them. No decisions will be taken until interested parties have had an opportunity to comment and their responses have been carefully considered.

Belize

23. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the training programme in Belize. [14650]

Mr. Soames: The British Army training support unit, Belize is set up to conduct jungle, field firing and adventure training, primarily at company level, and expects to train seven such deployments from the United Kingdom each year, each lasting for about six weeks. Although we do not have a regular requirement for exercises of bigger units, there will be occasions when we would wish to deploy battalions and we have such an exercise planned for July next year.

Falkland Islands

25. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are currently committed to the defence of the Falkland Islands. [14652]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 15 February, Official Report, column 726.

Ex-service Personnel

26. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will next be meeting representatives of the Royal British Legion and other ex-service organisations in order to discuss the promotion of the interests of ex-service personnel and their dependants. [14653]

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has no plans at present to meet representatives of the Royal British Legion or other ex-service organisations. At a meeting last November between the Minister of State for Social Security, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence and the Legion it was agreed that many of the matters relating to the welfare of former service personnel fall within the scope of the Department of Social Security. As a result of this agreement, that Department is now taking the lead on this issue.

Eurofighter 2000

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions are taking place, or proposed, to revise the share of work by each nation in respect of the Eurofighter 2000 project. [15519]

Mr. Freeman: Workshare and other matters relating to planning for future phases of the project are covered in our regular programme of contacts with our Eurofighter 2000 partners.

Debriefing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy in respect of debriefing service personnel formerly involved in active combat before their discharge back into the community. [15765]

Mr. Soames: Each of the services provides education, counselling and treatment programmes before and after active operations. These ensure that members of the armed forces are aware of the possibility of stress reaction, and that it can be identified and treated when it occurs. While the care of those who have left the armed forces is properly the responsibility of the national health service, medical summaries will in future indicate whether an individual has been treated for stress disorder while he or she was in the services.

Overseas Students

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many students from overseas were trained at Ministry of Defence establishments during 1994. [16177]

Mr. Soames: According to available records, 4,777 overseas students were trained at UK military establishments during 1994.

Astra plc

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific efforts were made by his Department to establish with Mr. James himself whether any of the documents referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton, (Mr. Cohen) of 21 July 1994, Official Report, column 556, were personal rather than company documents. [17002]

Mr. Soames: None. The documents were taken by the Ministry of Defence police from Astra plc/BMARC after Mr. James had left the company. They were considered to be company documents and treated as such throughout the MDP investigation.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he has handed any of the Astra plc documents to Sir Richard Scott, pursuant to his Department's letter of 27 January 1993 to Mr. J. Barratt of Cork Gulley. [17008]

Mr. Soames: The provision of documents to Sir Richard Scott's inquiry is a matter between my Department and the inquiry.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the role of Ministers and deputy permanent secretaries in his Department in authorising or sanctioning the raid on Astra plc in 1990; and which of his officials and Ministers were subsequently consulted about the return of documents. [17010]

Mr. Soames: None. Ministry of Defence police who conducted the investigation are operationally independent in such matters.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what opportunity was afforded to Mr. James to recover documents which may have been his personal property or to consult with his staff; and if a list of seized documents was made available to him. [17004]

Mr. Soames: No opportunity was offered to Mr. James to recover documents which may have been his personal property or to consult with his staff. Documents taken by Ministry of Defence police were considered to be company documents and a list was never made available to Mr. James who had left Astra/BMARC at the time of the MOD police investigation.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions when his Department has been approached by Mr. Gerald James seeking to recover his own personal documents from among those documents seized by MOD staff in April 1990. [17006]

Mr. Soames: Ministry of Defence police have no record of any direct approach by Mr. James seeking to recover documents seized by them.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the role and function of Mr. J. W. Cassey at the offices of Astra plc in 1990; and what have been his official appointments before and since that period. [17005]

Mr. Soames: The Ministry of Defence police have no knowledge of Mr. Cassey's role and function at the offices of Astra plc in 1990; nor of his official appointments before and since that date.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what period in 1990 his staff were on the premises of Astra plc at 6 St. James place, London; and if he will summarise the documents and materials removed by his staff from those premises. [17007]

Mr. Soames: Ministry of Defence police have not conducted a search of the premises of Astra plc at 6 St. James place, London.

Market Testing

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names and grades of the members of the panel appointed by his Department to evaluate the in-house bid by Defence Accounts Agency Department of Accounts (Bills), Liverpool to retain the service it provides at present. [16917]

Mr. Freeman: The panel appointed to evaluate the bid submitted by the Accounts (Bills) in-house team is:

Name	Grade	Department
Mr. M. J. Dymond	Grade 3	Chief Executive, Defence Accounts Agency (Chairman)
Mrs. S. A. Beaver	Grade 5	Director of Procurement (Finance)
Mr. M. A. Rowe	Grade 5	Director of Accounts (Bills)
Mr. D. A. Thomas	Grade 6	Assistant Director of Accounts (Staff)
Mr. P. J. Chafer	Grade 6	Assistant Director of Accounts (Budgets and Agency)

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which basis he estimates that the total running cost of providing the service currently provided by Defence Accounts Agency Department of Accounts (Bills), Liverpool would be 20 per cent. lower if it were provided by a private sector firm. [16913]

Mr. Freeman: This figure of 20 per cent. represents a level of savings achieved in other market-testing exercises. This is the target the in-house team have been asked to aim at in formulating its bid.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what market testing criteria are applicable to the in-house bid by Defence Accounts Agency Department of Accounts (Bills) for the retention of its service. [16915]

Mr. Freeman: The Accounts (Bills) in-house bid is being handled under the Department's market testing procedures. The bid is presently being evaluated against a formal statement of requirement, and if it is compliant a three-year service level agreement will be recorded between the MOD and the in-house team. The criteria for evaluating the bid include service delivery and standards, customer satisfaction,. flexibility and overall value for money.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the decision to reduce the running costs of Defence Accounts Agency Department of Accounts (Bills), Liverpool by 20 per cent. by 31 March 1996. [16918]

Mr. Freeman: The decision to keep the work of Accounts (Bills) in-house was made on the understanding that the in-house team should be asked to achieve the sort of savings that might have been possible with a full commercial test. The financial target is 20 per cent. but the in-house team's bid will also be evaluated against a formal statement of requirement which includes quality, standard of service and value for money performance criteria.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments he has made of the impact on running costs of having the works currently carried out by Defence Accounts Agency Department of Accounts (Bills), Liverpool contracted out to a private sector firm. [16914]

Mr. Freeman: No specific assessment has been made although the levels of saving achieved through market testing have influenced the financial target set for the Accounts (Bills) in-house team.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans he has for maintaining the service provided by Defence Accounts Agency Department of Accounts (Bills), Liverpool in the event of its in-house bid being unsuccessful. [16916]

Mr. Freeman: The in-house bid is being evaluated. If it fails to meet the requirement the options for maintaining the service provided by Accounts (Bills) will be reviewed in the light of the reasons for non-compliance.

Redundancies

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the ratio of field officers and above to other ranks before and after the recently announced redundancy programme; and if he will make a statement. [14935]

Mr. Soames: Before the recently announced programme of redundancies arising from the Defence costs study, the ratio of Army other ranks to field officers was approximately 14:1; in future it will be approximately 17:1. It has been possible to achieve these reductions without the need for a large redundancy programme, and no further Army redundancies beyond those already announced are anticipated in the foreseeable future.

BBC "The Vet" Series

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about the animals and equipment which were housed at vacant dwellings owned by his Department on the Furse Park estate at Barne Barton in Plymouth, in connection with the filming of the BBC TV vet series; [14931]

(2) how many vacant dwellings owned by his Department on the Furse Park estate at Barne Barton in Plymouth were used by the BBC this year in connection with the filming of a programme about vets; and how much was paid to his Department for this purpose. [14932]

Mr. Soames: A single vacant married quarter on the Furse Park estate at Barne Barton, Plymouth, was used during the filming of a production entitled "The Vet". No animals or equipment were housed in the property, and the fee paid by the company is commercial in confidence.

Training

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to make available information on military aid to foreign countries. [16723]

Mr. Soames: We disclose details of those countries which receive United Kingdom training, whether in the UK or overseas, and also the total numbers of students concerned during any particular period. It is not normally our practice to disclose the precise details of military training given to any particular country as such details are regarded as being confidential between Governments. There are no plans to change this policy.

Road Transport Regulations

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the new edition of the joint service road transport regulations; and how many copies will be printed. [16807]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will arrange for a copy of the new edition of the joint service road transport regulations to be sent, as promised in his letter of 4 January, as soon as it is available. We expect some 3,600 copies of these regulations to be distributed around the middle of the year.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 29 March 1995

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Darius Guppy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 30, if he will list the applications for legal aid made over the past 12 months by Darius Guppy. [15665]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Over the past 12 months, Mr. Guppy has made six applications for civil legal aid and one for ABWOR—assistance by way of representation. No central record of applications for criminal legal aid is kept, but I am aware of one such application from Mr. Guppy, to which I referred in my answer of 20 March.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 30, if he will seek to amend section 38 of the Legal Aid Act 1988 to remove the confidentiality provisions on the disclosure of information on an applicant's financial means where the applicant is serving a prison sentence for theft. [15666]

Mr. John M. Taylor: No. The "confidentiality" clause in section 38 of the Legal Aid Act 1988 is not unique to legal aid and is common practice in organisations which retain personal details of an individual's circumstances.

Legal Aid Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate what was the expenditure from the legal aid fund (a) in total and (b) in Wales in the last available year. [15789]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Actual net expenditure on legal aid in England and Wales in 1993–94 was £1,210 million. For expenditure in Wales, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 2 March 1995, Official Report, column 677. The legal aid fund in Wales is administered by two separate area offices, situated at Cardiff and Chester, the latter being also responsible for administering legal aid in parts of England. It is therefore not possible readily to identify payments made solely in respect of assisted persons resident in Wales, nor is it possible to estimate what proportion of legal aid fund expenditure related specifically to Wales.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the costs and benefits of constructing a high speed rail link from north-west England to connect with the proposed channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Watts: I have not assessed the costs and benefits of a completely new line. However, on 22 March, I announced the first stage of a £1 billion modernisation of the west coast main line.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16210]

Mr. Steven Norris: Guidelines for the employment of public relations companies are contained in the working guide for Government information officers, copies of which are available in the library of the House. The procurement rules and procedures for the Department are contained in the Departmental procurement manual.

Railway Heritage

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with the Railway Heritage Group about the preservation of early records of the railway system in the last five years. [16597]

Mr. Watts: None. Early records which have come to light in the last five years have been sent to either the Public Record Office, the Scottish Record Office or the National Railway Museum to add to their existing collections. If the records were not appropriate for these three national bodies, they were sent to one of the local record offices listed by British Rail's records advisory panel. In future, the new independent Railway Heritage Committee, under the chairmanship of Sir Gordon Higginson, will supervise the transfer of historic railway artifacts and records to the collecting institutions.

Railtrack (Land Sales)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 89, if he will give the total acreage of the 134 pieces of land sold by Railtrack to date. [16276]

Mr. Watts: I am advised by Railtrack that the total acreage of the 134 sale transactions by Railtrack to date amounts to about 41 acres.

Royal Train

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions the royal train was used in 1993–94; what were its destinations; which members of the royal family used it and on how many occasions; and on how many occasions was it used overnight. [16768]

Mr. Watts: The royal train was used on 47 separate occasions, involving use of the royal train coaches on 95 days in 1993–94. I understand that the destinations were as follows:

- Aberdeen
- Aberystwyth
- Ashford (Kent)
- Bodmin Parkway
- Bridgend
- Bridgwater

The members of the royal family and numbers of occasions on which they used the royal train were as follows:

	Number of occasions

The Prince of Wales	17
The Princess Royal	6
The Prince Edward	1
The Duke of Kent	1

The royal train was also used twice for state visits. The train was used overnight 48 times.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report for each of the last three years in real terms. [16641]

Mr. Dorrell: The last three editions of the report have been published as Command Papers by HMSO, which has borne the printing and publishing costs with the aim of recovering these from sales revenue.

My Department incurred additional production and distribution costs relating to the 1995 report of approximately £1,000, and additional production costs relating to the 1994 report of £9,473 at current prices. Information on the production costs of the 1993 report, and distribution costs of the 1993 and 1994 reports can be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16640]

Mr. Dorrell: Some 1,900 copies of my Department's report were printed and published. Of these, 500 copies were purchased by the Department for distribution to its agencies, sponsored bodies and other external contacts, as well as distribution internally for use as a working document. In addition to those copies required by Parliament, Government Departments and agencies concerned, just over 1,150 copies were produced to satisfy other sales at a price of £9.55 net. The costs of printing and publishing the report were borne by HMSO, which aims to cover these costs from sales revenue. The Department incurred additional production and distribution costs approximately £1,000.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17039]

Mr. Dorrell: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department and its predecessors since 1965 for any reference of the type requested, could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state, and occasional general references are made to persons who are Members of one or other Houses of Parliament. The National Lottery etc. Act 1993 makes a reference to the Leader of the Opposition in schedule 6 concerning nominations for membership of the Millennium Commission.

Public Library Review

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what date he received the report of the public library review from the consultants, ASLIB. [16180]

Mr. Sproat: The report of the public library review was received from the consultants on 23 February.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will publish his response to the public library review. [16179]

Mr. Sproat: I hope to make a statement shortly.

Taylor Report Deadlines

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will extend the deadline for meeting the recommendations of the Taylor report for those football clubs which have experienced protracted planning difficulties. [15953]

Mr. Sproat: Any applications for an extension to the deadlines already announced for football clubs to meet the all-seater or safe terracing will be considered on their individual merits, as occurred in 1994, following consultation with the Football Licensing Authority. Extensions will be granted only in the most exceptional circumstances and where delays in meeting the necessary criteria are unforseen and unavoidable. Whether planning difficulties would fall into such a category would depend on the facts of the individual case.

Sports Council for England

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to be able to announce the membership of the proposed Sports Council for England. [17499]

Mr. Dorrell: I confirmed the Government's intention to set up new United Kingdom and English Sports Councils from 1 January 1996, subject to the grant of royal charters, on 23 March, Official Report, column 316. I announced at the time of his appointment as chairman of the GB Sports Council that Mr. Rodney Walker would in due course become first chairman of the Sports Council for England. I am pleased to be able to announce today the remaining members-designate of the Sports Council for England:

Mr. Gerald Dennis[1] Vice-Chairman
Mr. Trevor Brooking[1] Vice-Chairman
Mr. Keith Oates[1]
Ms Julia Bracewell[1]
Mr. Tim Marshall[1]
Mr. Geoff Thompson[1]
Mr. Ian Botham
Mr. Jeff Probyn
Mr. Chris Boardman
Mr. Peter Blake
Mr. Andrew Hancock
Mr. Jim Munn
Mr. David Oxley
Mr. Sam Stoker

[1] Are serving members of the present GB Sports Council.

We proposed last July that the English council should concentrate its resources on an increased programme of direct support for governing bodies of sport for the development of sport from the grass roots to the highest competitive levels. We expect the English council to develop its policies and programmes in full and meaningful co-operation both with the Central Council of Physical Recreation, which represents the interests of governing bodies, and with local authority interests.

I am also able to confirm that, as proposed on 8 July 1994, the present linkage between the Sports Council and the Regional Councils for Sport and Recreation will come to an end from 1 January 1996. Ministers will cease from today to renew or make fresh appointments to those bodies, but will in future appoint ministerial nominees in each of the regions of the English Sports Council. These will bring a further range of experience and expertise to the council's work, including that of local government.

Political Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15619]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The names of those persons appointed as special advisers to my Department since May 1992 are:

Name	Date appointed	Date appointment ended
Mr. Chris Hopson	22 April 1992	24 September 1992
Viscountess Cobham	12 July 1992	24 September 1992
Mr. Dominic Loehnis	7 November 1992	20 July 1994

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 280, who is responsible for establishing the accuracy of local claims regarding the origins of historical figures used in terms of tourism promotion. [16044]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 March 1995]: Where such claims are made in advertisements or sales promotions, these must conform with the appropriate self-regulatory codes of practice. These require advertisements and sales promotions to be legal, decent, honest and truthful.

Certain claims must also comply with the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, which makes it an offence for a trader knowingly or recklessly to make a false or misleading statement about the nature of services, accommodation or facilities. This Act is enforced by local authority trading standards departments.

PRIME MINISTER

Bank of England

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he approved the statement of Government policy set out in paragraph 5 of the Bank of England press release of the text of the Deputy Governor's speech to the City branch of the Institute of Directors on 13th December 1993. [16988]

The Prime Minister: As stated in the 1995–96 Financial Statement and Budget Report, the role of monetary policy is to deliver low inflation. The Deputy Governor's speech to the City branch of the Institute of Directors was fully consistent with the Government's monetary policy.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether the appointment of the Governor or Deputy Governor of the Bank of England requires or receives (a) Cabinet approval and (b) positive security vetting. [16942]

The Prime Minister: Appointments of Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England are made by Her Majesty the Queen on the advice of the Prime Minister. The posts are subject to security vetting procedures.

Sir R. Braithwaite	June 1992	December 1993

Miss A Warburton	January 1994	To date
Mr. N. R. Blackwell	February 1995	To date
Mr. S. M. Williams	March 1995	To date
Ms C. Fairbairn	March 1995	To date

EMPLOYMENT

Income Statistics

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the real change in take-home pay for a married couple on average earnings, with two children, between (a) 1973-74 and 1978–79 and (b) 1978–79 and 1993–94; and what were the figures in other EC countries.

Mr. Oppenheim: Real take-home pay for a married couple on average earnings, with two children, decreased by 2 per cent. between 1973–74 and 1978–79 and increased by 41 per cent. between 1978–79 and 1993–94. Independent research shows that the take-home pay of production workers in the UK is comparable with that in Germany and ahead of that of France, the Netherlands and Denmark, once the cost of living has been taken into account.

Pools Industry

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures in the pools industry on Merseyside. [16372]

Miss Widdecombe: The proposed redundancies in the pools industry are regrettable. However, staffing levels must be a matter for the commercial judgment of companies concerned. Individuals who are unfortunate enough to lose their jobs from any sector can benefit from the Employment Department's extensive range of measures designed to help them find new jobs, re-train or set up in business. There are now more than 10,000 fewer unemployed in Merseyside than there were a year ago.

Prior Options Review

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the outcome of the prior options review of the Employment Service. [17357]

Mr. Portillo: The review is now complete and I have placed a summary of the review's conclusions in the Library. I have accepted all its recommendations, subject to the following points. The report sets out a compelling case for the agency and demonstrates its importance to the labour market. As the evaluation undertaken in support of the review shows, the Employment Service has steadily and substantially improved its performance since it became an agency in 1990. It also confirms the value of integrating job-broking, advisory and benefit services.

The prior options review confirms the importance of the work of the ES in helping employers and unemployed people to operate more effectively in the labour market. The policies the agency has pursued have played a significant role in helping unemployed people, particularly those at a disadvantage, to compete effectively and actively for jobs. That has assisted many employers in filling their vacancies. The ES's operation as an agency has enabled it to meet increasingly stretching performance targets, while achieving better value for money for the taxpayer.

I therefore endorse the recommendation of the review that the agency status of the ES should be confirmed. A new framework document will be drawn up to reflect working arrangements for the operation of the jobseeker's allowance subject to the passage of the necessary legislation. The ES, along with the Benefits Agency, will have a crucial role to play in implementing the JSA and ensuring it is delivered effectively, to a high standard of service to its clients and with increased benefit to the operation to the labour market. I am pleased that the review confirms that the ES is well positioned to carry out these tasks.

The review recommends that, once the JSA is implemented successfully, there will be scope to test the potential for private sector involvement in the delivery of functions, other than adjudication, that are carried out in ES offices. I accept this conclusion in principle. My aim would be to take forward the review's proposal to market test the work of two or three ES districts in 1997 once the JSA has been fully introduced and subject to establishing the feasibility of separating adjudication from other aspects of the work of districts.

I shall also be asking the ES to work up proposals for a market test in, one or two regions of placing, assessment and counselling teams, which provide specialist services for unemployed people with disabilities.

The review also made recommendations about ES fraud work. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security and I are considering how the fraud work currently undertaken by the ES and the BA will be organised under the JSA and will make an announcement shortly.

ENVIRONMENT

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16574]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department of the Environment currently employs 31.5 information officers, including those employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. All deal with the full range of information services; none are exclusively press officers.

The records for 1979 show that there were 40 professional information officers employed by the Department.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16287]

Sir Paul Beresford: During the 1993–94 financial year my Department part-funded one PR contract to a value of £28,000. The activities carried out included planning, design and strategic work undertaken on behalf of the Lighting Industry Federation, the National Energy Foundation and my Department's "Helping the Earth Begins at Home" domestic energy campaign to encourage the use of energy-saving light bulbs.

Chicken Farm, Throckmorton

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a reasoned opinion from the European Commission concerning the grant of planning permission for a chicken farm at the former airfield at Throckmorton, Worcestershire. [16767]

Sir Paul Beresford: No.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on sustainable development and the environment over the past year; and when he intends to respond to the recommendations in the first report of the Government's panel on sustainable development. [17181]

Mr. Gummer: We are today publishing "This Common Inheritance: UK Annual Report 1995", which reports progress on commitments in previous environment White Papers and the sustainable development strategy. To complement this, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is today placing in the House Library a copy of the letter which he is today sending to the Government's panel, responding to the recommendations in its first report.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government will take to ensure that important British habitats omitted from the EU habitats directive are given statutory protection at European level. [15114]

Mr. Atkins: The provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the protection of sites of special scientific interest will continue to apply to sites notified by the nature conservancy councils, including those which contain habitats not listed in the EC habitats directive. The directive is intended to cover only those habitat types and species that are rare or endangered at a European level. We shall play a full part in the consideration of any revision of the habitat types listed in annexe I of the directive if proposals are made by the European Commission.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures he proposes to ensure the adequacy of the quality of environmental data provision for the European Environment Agency; [15115]

(2) what provision he will make to ensure that dissonant information is given adequate recognition in EU environmental networks through the United Kingdom focal point. [15116]

Mr. Atkins: My Department has established a network of organisations in the UK which will contribute to the work of the European Environment Agency. These organisations have widely recognised expertise in the fields of environmental monitoring and data collection, in particular at the national and European levels which will be the EEA's primary interest. Co-ordination of the UK network is the responsibility of the UK national focal point based in the environmental protection statistics division of my Department. The NFP will act as a channel of communication between the network and the EEA, to ensure that network members provide reliable and balanced information to the EEA and that network members are not overburdened with requests for unnecessary information.

The EEA will also be open to receiving information form other organisations which are not part of the official network, including, for example, non-governmental organisations. Where any information provided by such organisations does not accord with that from official sources, the agency will investigate discrepancies.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the terms of reference for private sector participation in the European regional development fund objective 2 and 5b schemes. [16729]

Sir Paul Beresford: A broad range of private sector organisations may benefit directly from ERDF grants, providing they are non-profit making and acting in the public interest.

Although ERDF grants have not normally been available to profit-making companies in the past, the Government wish to maximise the private sector contribution to projects attracting ERDF grants, and has put to the European Commission proposals for facilitating this while ensuring that projects are of general economic benefit to the areas concerned, and that ERDF grants do not lead to excessive profits. The Commission's comments are awaited.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes that English local authorities which are to remain unchanged, following his recent decision on the recommendations of the Local Government Commission, will be required to extend compulsory competitive tendering. [17356]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I am keen to see the benefits of competition brought to local people as soon as possible. It is now clear that many shire counties and districts will retain their existing two-tier structure, and these authorities are in a position to press ahead with the extension of CCT to further manual and white-collar services as soon as possible.

On 31 January, my Department sent a consultation paper to English local authority representatives which proposed bringing forward the implementation of CCT by up to one year from the timetable initially proposed in December 1993. I have considered carefully the associations' clear and cogent arguments for not imposing a timetable which may give rise to undue haste in implementing CCT, and decided to strike a balance between the concerns they have expressed and the need to maintain a rigorous timetable for CCT.

I therefore intend to require all authorities which are to remain unchanged in both functions and boundaries following review to advance the timetable for implementing CCT extension by six months. I will bring forward regulations to require these authorities to have achieved their competitive tendering obligations for each of the new services by the following dates:

Security work, management of vehicles and management of parking: 1 April 1997

Legal and construction and property services: 1 October 1997

Finance and personnel services: 1 April 1998

IS/IT services: 1 April 1999

Any other shire authority which is to change either its functions, by becoming a unitary authority, or its boundaries, including minor changes in boundaries but not including the creation of new parishes within their area, will be expected to follow the timetable for each service which applies to reorganised authorities. For legal, construction and property and the further manual services these dates are already provided for in regulations. The detailed regime for the other services is currently subject to consultation and I will announce final decisions shortly.

A number of authorities have expressed concern about the implications for the CCT timetable of the further review of individual districts. In announcing his decisions on the review of shire authorities on 2 March at column 1183 and 21 March at column 145, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said that he was minded to ask the Local Government Commission to consider further the case for change in a small number of districts. We will consider carefully over the next few weeks which areas might be reviewed further and I anticipate an announcement will be made at the end of June. When that announcement is made I will put forward proposals for further modifying the implementation timetable for CCT extension in the areas to be considered by the Commission. Until then, all shire authorities for which no decision to implement structural change has been announced should plan on the basis of the timetable that I have set out. The additional preparation time now permitted should mitigate any delay caused by individual authorities' uncertainty as to whether they are candidates for a further review.

EU Urban Initiative

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has decided which non-objective 1 areas in England should be included under the European structural funds Urban initiative; and if he will make a statement. [17716]

Mr. Gummer: I have today presented the European Commission with the Government's decision on the six non-objective 1 areas in England to receive £37 million under the Urban initiative.

In reducing the 11 areas originally proposed to the European Commission, to meet their overall limits on the size of the initiative, a number of considerations have been taken into account. Urban Regeneration Minister David Curry and Sir Paul Beresford have received presentations from the eleven areas, and on the basis of area need, written proposals, ability to provide jobs and business opportunities and use the funds effectively to deliver lasting results, the following areas have been selected: Birmingham, London (Park Royal), Manchester, Nottingham, Sheffield and London (Hackney/Tower Hamlets).

This was a difficult decision to make as all the 11 areas had strong cases and I regret that we could only choose 6 areas for inclusion. The quality of work done in all the areas was excellent. I well understand the disappointment of those areas that were not able to have a place on the programme. I am grateful to all those who put so much effort into the selection process for their areas, and I am sure that the experience will be useful in taking advantage of any other suitable initiatives in the future.

We look forward now to making good progress in negotiations with the Commission.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Shipbuilders

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes have been made to the British Shipbuilders' external financing limit for 1994–95. [17501]

Mr. Heseltine: The external financing limit for British Shipbuilders for 1994–95 has been increased by £15 million from minus £3.8 million to positive £11 million. This increase is attributable to the sale of the McDermott barge, the company's largest and longest-running liability. The increase in the EFL will be met from the reserve and does not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure in 1994–95.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17031]

Mr. Heseltine: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department and its predecessors since 1965 for any reference to the type requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state, and occasional general references are made to persons who are Members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at inter-departmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15608]

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 27 March 1995, Official Report, column 435.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15609]

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 27 March 1995]: No persons have been appointed as political advisers to this Department since May 1992.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the Secretary of State for Transport about reducing noise at Coventry airport; and what assessment he has made of the impact on economic growth in the area of (a) aircraft noise pollution and (b) the increase in night flights. [16228]

Mr. Page: I have had no consultations. These are matters for the local planning authorities and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to assist Coventry airport via the European Commission's objective 2 programmes; and what representations he has received from the residents of Willenhall. [16227]

Mr. Page: It is for Coventry city council, as owner of the airport, to make applications for grant activities that can be assisted through the west midlands objective 2 single programming document 1994–96.

All applications received will be considered in accordance with the programme arrangements agreed between the UK Government and the European Commission.

I have not received any representation on this matter from residents of Willenhall.

Post Office

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post office staff have left the Post Office as a result of crown post offices being converted to agency status. [16314]

Mr. Page [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I understand from the Post Office that some 4,000 staff have left on voluntary redundancy terms since 1989–90 as a result of crown post offices being converted to agency status. Many of them are now working in post offices either as agents or employed by agents.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial benefits the Post Office has obtained during the last and current financial years through the policy of converting crown post offices to agency status. [16312]

Mr. Page [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I understand from the Post Office that conversions of crown post offices in the financial year 1993–94 yielded net recurring savings of £3.9 million. The figures for the current financial year are not yet available but are expected to be of a similar amount.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the crown post offices converted to agency status in Scotland since January 1994 giving the parliamentary constituency within which they lie. [16315]

Mr. Page [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I understand from the Post Office that the following 18 crown post offices in Scotland have been converted to agency status since January 1994:

Post Office	Parliamentary Constituency
Annan	Dumfries
Anniesland	Glasgow Garscadden
Blantyre	Hamilton
Carluke	Lanark
Castle Douglas	Dumfries
Charing Cross	Glasgow Hillhead
Dumbarton	Dumbarton
Elgin	Moray
Kirkcaldy	Kirkcaldy
Livingston	Livingston
Partick	Glasgow Hillhead
Peterhead	Banff and Buchan
Renfrew	Paisley North
Stranraer	Galloway and Upper Nithsdale
Thurso	Caithness and Sutherland
Milngavie	Clydebank and Milngavie
Newington	Edinburgh South
Wick	Caithness and Sutherland

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many crown post offices have been converted to agency status in (a) Scotland and (b) throughout the United Kingdom for each financial year since 1989–90. [16313]

Mr. Page [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I understand from the Post Office that numbers of crown post offices converted to agency status in Scotland and throughout the United Kingdom in each financial year since 1989–90 are as follows:

	Scotland	United Kingdom
1989–90	32	153
1990–91	29	164
1991–92	40	147
1992–93	11	108
1993–94	13	117

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many crown post offices within (a) Scotland and (b) throughout the United Kingdom the Post Office views as appropriate for agency status. [16309]

Mr. Page [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I understand from the Post Office that it uses the following criteria for deciding on the appropriateness of agency status for a given office:

> the customer service benefit of changing, e.g. longer opening hours, better location;
> financial benefits;
> ability to redeploy any surplus staff;
> availability of a suitable partner to become agent.

Since some of these factors have a degree of uncertainty attaching to them, the Post Office does not have a fixed view about the number of crown post offices appropriate for agency status. The Post Office continues to convert crown post offices to agency status where the right circumstances prevail.

Corporate Insolvencies

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of corporate insolvencies in Scotland for each of the years 1993 and 1994, and in respect of each year (a) the number of reports submitted by practitioners, (b) the number of court proceedings commenced and (c) the number of disqualification orders made under the Companies (Disqualification of Directors) Act 1985; and if he will express the last figure as a percentage of the total number of corporate insolvencies in each year. [16049]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The figures requested are as follows:

	1993	1994
Corporate Insolvencies	941	695
(a) Conduct reports submitted by Insolvency Practitioners	241	215
(b) Disqualification Proceedings Commenced	75	114
(c) Disqualification Orders Made	54	72
Disqualification Orders as a Percentage of Corporate Insolvencies	5.74	10.36

Note:

1. The figures for corporate insolvencies are for the numbers of companies and include a few members voluntary liquidation cases (which are not insolvent) which cannot be separated in the total figures provided by Companies House.

2. The number of proceedings refer to individuals. Proceedings and results are not necessarily finalised in the year of issue, and conduct reports may relate to companies which failed in preceding two years.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figures were for (a) his Department and (b) the Department of Energy in 1979. [16560]

Mr. Heseltine: There are 17 press officers currently employed in my Department. Comparable figures for 1979 are not available.

Companies House and the Patent Office

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) in what circumstances he will allow in-house bids at Companies House and the Patent Office, following his recent statements on the futures of these two organisations; [16985]

(2) what method will be used at Companies House and the Patent Office to determine whether or not it will provide value for money to contract out services in comparison to continuing with the current in-house provision. [16979]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Existing employees may bid for contracts on the basis that, if successful, they would carry out the work as private sector contractors.

The basis for assessing bids will be overall value for money, including both cost and quality of service. On cost, bids will be assessed against the benchmark of forecast costs to carry out the function within the public sector, taking into account any planned efficiencies.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the full cost, from 1991 to date, of the reviews into the futures of (a) Companies House and (b) the Patent Office. [16980]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The full costs of the reviews into the futures of (a) Companies House and (b) the Patent Office are not available, although internal and external costs are taken into account in the DTI efficiency plan. The costs of consultancy advice to the reviews since 1991 are £283,000 and £135,000 respectively, both figures being exclusive of VAT.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assurances he gave the member of the European Commission responsible for regional development concerning the application of the additionality principles agreed with her predecessors that would apply to the reduced grant in aid to the Welsh Development Agency and increased dependence of the agency on the European regional development fund; [16848]

(2) if he will list the principal points raised in his meeting with the European Commission member responsible for regional development on Thursday 23 March; what representations were made in relation to the additionality issue; and if he will make a statement. [16849]

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 28 March 1995]: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy and I both met Dr. Wulf-Mathies on 23 March. We discussed means of improving the European structural funds value for money throughout the EU; the importance of combating fraud and mismanagement; EU grants in Northern Ireland; regional challenge; and the importance of private sector financial contributions to structural funds programmes.

The Commissioner raised points about the composition of United Kingdom structural funds monitoring committees, and the resources available for the administration of programmes. These are matters for the United Kingdom.

Dr. Wulf-Mathies mentioned that the Commission had received representations from Merseyside and from Wales described as concerning "additionality". It appeared, however, that these representations did not relate to the regulatory provision, which requires additionality only at the level of each objective, not separately for individual areas, measures, projects or beneficiaries. The Welsh Development Agency was not mentioned.

Temporary Export Licences

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his Department refused any applications for temporary export licences for companies to exhibit at the IDEX 95 defence exhibition held in the United Arab Emirates in March. [15968]

Mr. Ian Taylor: No.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many temporary export licences were issued to companies wishing to exhibit at the International Defence Exhibition, IDEX, in Abu Dhabi in March. [15967]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Licences for the temporary export of controlled goods are valid for 12 months. In the 12 months leading up to IDEX, beginning 1 April 1994, the Export Control Organisation issued 125 licences for temporary export valid for Abu Dhabi and the United Arab Emirates. Licences for temporary export are usually for the purpose of "display", "exhibition", "demonstration" and similar reasons. The particular forum for the display or exhibition of the goods in question is not always specified. I cannot therefore say specifically whether or not all the licences referred to above were to enable the goods in question to be exhibited at IDEX.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Journalists

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will estimate the number of journalists with parliamentary press passes in (a) 1975, (b) 1985 and (c) 1995.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that the figures are (a) 356 and (b) 407. The current figure is 489.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will arrange to monitor for a week the number of journalists in the Gallery during each hour the House sits.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Yes. I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to make the arrangements for the first full sitting week after the House returns from the Easter Adjournment.

Members' Interests

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Select Committee on Members' Interests, if an hon. Member in receipt of a gift or loan whose purpose, wholly or in part, is intended to avoid disqualification from the House is required to register it.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: The liability of an hon. Member to register an interest can be decided only by the Registrar in the light of specific information about an individual case.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cost of producing and circulating the annual report of the Cabinet Office for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16628]

Mr. Horam: The annual Cabinet Office departmental report was first published in 1991. The printing and publishing costs are borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which aims to recover these from sales revenue.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; and how many copies were sold and at what price. [16627]

Mr. Horam: The printing and publishing costs were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which aims to recover these from sales revenue. The report was circulated to the Prime Minister, OPSS Ministers, Opposition spokesmen, Parliament, Cabinet Office senior management, and contributors in HMSO, COI and the other organisations included within the report. There were 1,500 copies printed, and just over 900 copies were distributed for sale to the public, at a cover price of £11.55.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Council of Ministers

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 27 and 28 March 1995 and if he will make a statement. [17498]

Mr. Waldegrave: At this meeting, the Council again considered possible rules on transport of live animals. The Commissioner floated some new ideas which would protect animal welfare better than those in the current presidency compromise. It was agreed that these should be examined at official level before the Council returns to the subject in May with a view to reaching a final conclusion.

The Council also discussed the agri-monetary effects of the recent turbulence on international currency markets, as a result of which certain green currencies may need to be revalued according to the Community rules. A further Council will be held on 10 April to take decisions on this aspect, but the Commission indicated that it would use its powers to ensure that revaluations did not come into effect before 5 May.

The 10 April Council meeting is also expected to take decisions on the reform of the Community sugar regime. At this meeting we again argued that any cuts in sugar quotas necessary for the Community to meet its GATT commitments should be targeted on those countries with the largest surpluses.

The Council extended the marketing years for milk and beef since farm prices for 1995–96 have not yet been set.

In other discussions, the United Kingdom strongly opposed any proposal to place limits on nitrates in lettuce which cannot be fully justified by the scientific evidence.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the budget forecast for the common agricultural policy in 1995; and what proportion of this fund will be allocated to the United Kingdom. [15796]

Mr. Jack: The draft supplementary and amending CAP budget for 1995, the latest official forecast, has been set at 36,897 mecu or £29,283 million—1,047 mecu or £831 million below the guideline. It is set in relation to forecast expenditure throughout the Community, and not on the basis of allocations to individual member states. The level of UK CAP receipts will depend on a variety of factors, such as production levels, quantities exported, and purchases in and sales out of intervention storage. It is forecast at £2,873 million for the 1995–96 financial year.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 63, on water and sewerage charges, if he will define disproportionate cost. [15934]

Mr. Jack: Disproportionate cost is when it is estimated that the staff costs of preparing a full reply to the parliamentary question are likely to exceed £450.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the cost of producing and circulating the last Departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price; [16658]

(2) what was the cost of producing and circulating Departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16659]

Mr. Jack: A total of 2,250 copies of the 1995 departmental report of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the intervention board were produced. About half were required by Parliament, the Ministry, its agencies and the intervention board, the remainder being produced for sale at £19.60 net. Actual sales figures are not yet available.

Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. The estimated cost of producing the 1995 report, including the cost of the Ministry's staff resources and the use of professional typesetters, was very approximately £100,000. Similar figures are not available for earlier years.

Press Officers

Mr. Doug Henderson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16564]

Mr. Jack: The number of press officers, including the chief press offficer, employed by MAFF is seven. In 1979, the number was the same.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when it was decided to include off-farm income in the formula for determining the average income of hill farmers for the purposes of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement. [16782]

Mr. Jack: Off-farm income has never been included in the calculations of farm income taken into account in determining the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances. The Government have made no decision, nor are there plans, to do so.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister what representations he has received about the Meat Hygiene Service's proposed charges and if he will make a statement. [17500]

Mr. Waldegrave: The chief executive has kept me fully informed of the progress of consultation on the Meat Hygiene Service's proposed charges for 1995–96, and of the industry's request for some short-term assistance to facilitate the transition to the new system.

While I cannot take final decisions until the statutory consultation exercise has been completed in mid-April, I am minded to make available transitional assistance to allow the MHS to offer a rebate on its hourly rate for meat inspectors of £2 per hour for the first six months of 1995–96 and £1 per hour for the second six months, and to set a ceiling on the official veterinary surgeon hourly rate of £35 per hour.

In making any such rebates, the MHS would need to observe the requirements of the European legislation which prohibits subsidisation of inspection charges below the level of the Community standard charge.

I will shortly be publishing performance targets for the MHS which are designed to ensure that the chief executive maximises efficiency and minimises costs. The MHS will be expected to recover the full economic cost of its chargeable services from the industry from 1996–97 onwards.

TREASURY

EU Fraud

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to help combat fraud in the European Union, with particular reference to the spending of the common agricultural policy and structural or cohesion budgets. [14974]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Steps are being taken to combat fraud in all areas of the European Community budget.

At the Essen European Council last December, the Prime Minister made a number of proposals to help tackle fraud, as well as waste and mismanagement. These are now being taken forward. Member states will report back to the European Council later in the year on what they are doing to combat fraud against the Community budget on their own territories. The Council is actively pursuing agreement on a legally binding instrument on national criminal law protection of the Community budget, as well as on a regulation on the protection of the Community's financial interests which would establish a framework for extending Community administrative penalties to all areas of the Community budget.

Significant progress is being made against fraud under the common agricultural policy. Administrative penalties are being applied on overclaims and member states are being "disallowed" previous agricultural expenditure where it is found not to be in accordance with the applicable rules. CAP reform is addressing weaknesses in controls that have previously led to fraud and irregularity. This includes a Commission proposal for a new procedure to reform the clearance of CAP accounts, involving in-year audits to improve management, and preventative and corrective action with suggestions from the Commission on possible changes to procedures instead of financial penalties. Also well advanced is Council consideration of a significant measure for tackling fraud, known colloquially as the CAP blacklist. This would set down a framework for member states to identify, and to notify each other of, traders who have deliberately, or as a result of serious negligence, committed an irregularity prejudicial to Community funds or who are subject to "well found suspicion" of having done so.

In July 1994, Commission regulations were introduced to ensure that member states report irregularities under the structural funds and the cohesion fund. These require member states to submit quarterly reports to the Commission on any irregularities which have been the subject of initial administrative or judicial investigations. These reports, the first of which was presented by member states to the Commission at the end of last year, will provide a more complete picture of fraud, financial mismanagement and waste in the structural funds.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average annual increase in Government expenditure for the years (a) 1965 to 1970, (b) 1970 to 1974, (c) 1974 to 1979, (d) 1979 to 1989 and (e) 1989 to 1995. [16810]

Mr. Aitken: Figures are readily available only for financial years. The table shows the average annual percentage increases in general government expenditure, excluding privatisation proceeds, over the relevant periods.

From	To	Increase per cent.
1965–66	1970–71	9.7
1970–71	1974–75	18.7
1974–75	1979–80	16.1
1979–80	1989–90	8.5
1989–90	1995–96	6.8

Speed Cameras

Mr. Day: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what cost-benefit analysis he has (a) carried out and (b) plans to carry out on the effects of hypothecating the income generated from fines due to speeding offences detected by automatic cameras to the provision of further speed cameras and the processing of the resultant offence data. [15661]

Mr. Aitken: No cost-benefit analysis has been carried out, nor are there any plans to do so. The Government take the view that, in general, hypothecation of revenue is not the best way of matching resources to needs.

Bank Reserves

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government ceased to require United Kingdom banks to hold reserve requirements on deposit with the Bank of England. [15899]

Mr. Nelson: The requirement ceased on 20 August 1981, when new arrangements for monetary control were introduced by the Bank of England.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16618]

Mr. Aitken: Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. The reports for the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments have been published as Command Papers by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which has borne the printing and publishing costs with the aim of recovering these from the sales revenue.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16617]

Mr. Aitken: A total of 1,500 copies of the departmental reports for the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments were printed and published as Cm 2817, 2818 and 2819. In addition to those copies required by Parliament and the Government Departments and agencies concerned, 1,000 copies of each report were produced to satisfy other sales at a net price of £18.40 for Cm 2817, £7.35 for Cm 2818 and £6.65 for Cm 2819. The costs of printing and publishing these reports were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which aims to recover its costs from sales revenue.

Late Payment of Debts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is planning to take to encourage companies to pay promptly. [16619]

Mr. Aitken: A package of measures aimed at bringing about a change in business culture and hence shorter payment times was announced in the Competitiveness White Paper last May. That package is being implemented. The Government will continue to keep the position under review. If there has not been a significant improvement by 1996, they will review the case for legislation.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the overall percentage change in the value of the £ sterling since 1 September 1992 against (a) the dollar, (b) the Deutchsmark and (c) the basket of currencies. [16862]

Mr. Nelson: Between 1 September 1992 and 27 March 1995, sterling has fallen by (a) 20 per cent. against the dollar, (b) 19 per cent. against the Deutchsmark and (c) 15 per cent. on an exchange rate index basis.

Export Margins

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what influence the levels of export margins have on decisions on interest rate levels; and what criteria are used to determine whether export margins are considered to be excessive. [16990]

Mr. Nelson: Interest rates decisions are based on a wide range of information, including monetary and other financial indicators, indicators of activity and indicators of costs. The price of UK exports, and hence the export margin, is a matter for the individual firms concerned. But export volumes in the fourth quarter were up 13½ per cent. on a year earlier, so margins do not appear excessive.

Privatisation

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what expenditure has been incurred recently in order to finance privatisation costs; and if he will make a statement. [17359]

Sir George Young: Expenditure has been incurred to cover:

(i) the residual costs arising from the sale of National Power and PowerGen shares in March 1995, estimated at £32,000,000.

(ii) expenditure, estimated at £600,000 in connection with the Treasury's sale of privatised companies debt this year.

Costs incurred on this vote will be offset by receipts appropriate-in-aid. Such receipts will include the second instalments on National Power and PowerGen shares, estimated to be some £1.1 billion.

Parliamentary approval of these new services is being sought in the 1995–96 main estimate for HM Treasury's sale of sales of residual Government shareholdings and Government holdings of privatised companies' debt vote, class XVII, vote 15.

Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £32,600,000 will be met from repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Profit-related Pay Schemes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the tax to be forgone by the Treasury in 1995–96 through profit-related pay schemes. [15843]

Sir George Young [holding answer 27 March 1995]: An estimate of the cost of income tax relief for profit-related pay schemes in 1994–95 is published in table 1.6 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1994, a copy of which is in the Library. An estimate of the cost in 1995–96 is not yet available.

Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of those persons appointed as political advisers to his Department since May 1992. [15605]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The special advisers appointed to the Treasury since May 1992 are as follows:

Name	Period of appointment
D. W. D. Cameron	11 May 1992–21 June 1993
R. Darwall	8 February 1993–27 May 1993
Mrs. T. Keswick	1 June 1993–
D. Ruffley	28 May 1993–
J. Bercow	20 March 1995–

NORTHERN IRELAND

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [16094]

Sir John Wheeler: An analysis of all legislation introduced by the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office and its predecessors since 1965 for any reference to the type requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state, and occasional general references are made to persons who are members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15556]

Mr. Ancram [holding reply 27 March 1995]: At present there are some 30 regulations unique to Northern Ireland which impact on business. Five of these have been targeted for repeal or amendment and legislative action is in progress.

Other Northern Ireland regulations which replicate Great Britain provisions, and also impact on business, are reviewed and action taken in the light of decisions taken in Great Britain.

Fair Employment Small Business Scheme

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 227, on what basis James Hawthorne CBE was judged to have satisfied the criteria for established management consultants for the fair employment small business scheme as set out in the answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 402. [16045]

Mr. Ancram: On the basis of his experience at senior management level for a period well in excess of five years, Mr. Hawthorne was judged by the Fair Employment Commission to have the necessary experience of human resource management, including recruitment and selection procedures. In addition, Mr. Hawthorne was able to demonstrate to the interviewing panel that his knowledge of the fair employment legislation and code of practice satisfied the criteria for appointment.

Rate Relief

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the kinds of recreations which qualify certain hereditaments for rate relief under article 31 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 as amended. [16046]

Sir John Wheeler: The relevant recreations are specified in the schedule to the Rates (Recreational Hereditaments) Order (Northern Ireland) 1979, SR 1979 No. 428, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Council for Catholic Maintained Schools

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the amounts paid each year to the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools under each of paragraphs 11, 13, 14 and 15 of schedule 8 to the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 and the amounts repaid under paragraph 16. [16047]

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Paragraph 11 staff salaries	Paragraph 13 allowances	Paragraph 14 total recurrent grant from DENI	Paragraph 15 capital expenditure grant from DENi
1990–91	536,398	13,878	678,881	86,750
1991–92	583,826	44,313	778,000	68,974
1992–93	607,523	60,522	832,000	90,906
1993–94	753,038	52,040	1,018,000	92,986

No moneys have been due to be repaid in the above years under paragraph 16.

Police Complaints Commission

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has reached his decisions on the recommendations contained in the report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints "Triennial Review 1991–1994". [17167]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Yes. On 22 March 1994 Official Report, column 148, I announced the publication of the report and that I intended to consult various interested bodies before reaching any decisions on the recommendations made. I have now given further consideration to the recommendations in the light of the comments received.

I am glad that the commission considers that the system works well in practice and that it is rigorous and effective. However, like the commission, I am determined that the system should be reviewed and improved. Consequently, I have given deep thought to the commission's proposals and to the way forward and I am glad to say that I have been able to accept, in total or in part, most of the recommendations made.

I have accepted in full two recommendations. I intend to bring forward legislation which will establish a tribunal, chaired by the Chief Constable and balanced by two assessors drawn from an independent panel appointed for the purpose, to hear certain types of disciplinary procedures. (Recommendation 5). It is in the nature of these types of case that the commission instigates the disciplinary proceedings and I have accepted that it is then inappropriate for the commission to be represented on the tribunal hearing the charges as it is at present. I share the commission's considered view that the Chief Constable, who is responsible for discipline within his service, should retain a leading role.

I also agree that there should be a review of the use of the informal resolution procedure. (Recommendation 6). Use of the procedure in Northern Ireland has more than doubled—to 10 per cent.—in the last five years. In Great Britain, around 30 per cent. of complaints are informally resolved. I accept that a review of the procedure in Northern Ireland should be carried out.

I have also accepted three of the recommendations in part.

The commission reaffirmed that it wished to have the power to supervise some non-complaint matters where it appears to the Commission that such supervision was necessary because of either the gravity of the matter or the exceptional circumstances involved. (Recommendation 2). I am unable to agree that the commission should have the power to "call in" cases when no complaint is made. I am, however, willing to agree that the commission should have a statutory power to draw matters to my attention. It would then be my responsibility to refer appropriate cases to the commission. This arrangement will enable the commission to make known its concerns in non-complaint cases without impinging on my statutory responsibilities or those of the police authority and the Chief Constable.

The commission also recommended that it should be notified at once where death or serious bodily harm has been caused or may have been caused to any person by a police officer. (Recommendation 3). I have decided to accept that the commission should be notified of all deaths which may have been caused by a police officer even if there is no prima facie evidence of police misconduct or oppressive behaviour, and this will be included in legislation when the opportunity arises. I will not, at present, extend this cover to incidents of injury. I have accepted the view that such a requirement would cause administrative difficulties and over-reporting.

I have given further thought to the commission's recommendations that it should be given the discretion to concentrate its resources of those cases of public concern which are deserving of very close scrutiny, rather than being constrained by the mandatory supervision of certain cases. (Recommendation 4). I have decided not to accept this recommendation as I feel that mandatory supervision of all cases involving death or serious injury is an important safeguard in our complaints system. It was agreed after the last triennial review that legislation would be introduced to allow the commission to withdraw from mandatory supervision in those cases where the injury turns out to be less serious than was first thought. This provision will be included in legislation in the near future. I want to see the differences which will follow on from this change before deciding whether any more radical approach is necessary.

Finally, I have decided not to accept the recommendation that the commission should be in a position to direct the Chief Constable to record a complaint where there is a dispute over its validity. (Recommendation 1). I again share the views of the Home Secretary. The autonomy of chief constables in discharging their responsibilities to maintain law and order within their areas is an important constitutional issue. One important factor in that autonomy is the Chief Constable's authority over the actions and discipline of his officers. I am reluctant to diminish that authority by giving an outside agency, even one as respected as the commission, power to decide what should or should not be a complaint.

I would like to pay tribute to the commission and to its work over the period of this review from 1991 to 1994. The period saw the commission tackle its responsibilities enthusiastically. Two important features stand out. First, there was a very substantial increase in the number of investigations in which the commission undertook supervision. Secondly, the commission undertook a major initiative to publicise the mechanism for raising complaints about policing in Northern Ireland. The existence of a widely known and trusted system for dealing with complaints makes a major contribution to maintaining and building public confidence in the integrity and probity of the police service. We have recognised the importance of the commission's work by making available this year substantial extra resources to help it meet the demands on its services.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anglo-Israeli Relations

2. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations between Britain and Israel. [14940]

Mr. Hurd: Bilateral relations with Israel are excellent. During his recent visit to Israel the Prime Minister and Mr. Rabin agreed that they have never been better.

Serbia

18. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further discussions he has had with his counterparts abroad about the need to strengthen sanctions against Serbia. [14959]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our partners and allies regard sanctions as an important element in our efforts to achieve a peace settlement in Bosnia. In response to President Milosevic's decision last summer to support the Contact Group plan and close the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to all but humanitarian goods, the United Nationals Security Council decided to suspend sanctions on international air links with Belgrade, a ferry service between Montenegro and Italy and in the fields of sporting and cultural relations. At the same time United Nations sanctions against the Bonsnia Serbs, who have refused to accept the Contact Group plan were tightened. We continue to support, together with other states, the effective enforcement of these sanctions.

UN Peacekeeping Operations

21. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss the future of peacekeeping operations with the Secretary General of the United Nations. [14962]

Mr. Hurd: We are a major troop contributor to UN peacekeeping operations, and will continue to hold regular discussions with the UN Secretary General on all aspects of peacekeeping.

We are concerned by legislative proposals in the US Congress which would severely restrict US contributions to assessed peacekeeping costs. The proposals would require the United States to deduct from its assessed contributions all costs incurred directly by the US for operations in support of UN Security Council resolutions.

If these proposals were implemented the established system of financing UN peacekeeping operations would unravel. We welcome the commitment by the US Administration to oppose.

Security Guarantees

22. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline what steps the Government are taking to provide non-nuclear states with binding security guarantees; and if he will make a statement. [14963]

Mr. David Davis: We already provide non-nuclear weapon states with security assurances in which we undertake not to use nuclear weapons against them unless they attack us in association of alliance with a nuclear weapon state and further to seek UN Security Council action to provide assistance to any such state that is attacked with nuclear weapons.

Middle East Peace Process

23. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process. [14964]

Mr. James Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Britain is giving to the middle east peace process. [14942]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's recent visit to Israel, the occupied territories and Jordan underlined Britain's firm support for the peace process. He announced an increase in aid to the Palestinians to £82 million over the three years 1994 to 1997.

Brunei

24. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations, including trade relations, with Brunei. [14965]

Mr. Goodlad: Britain has very close and friendly relations with Brunei. Our links are strong in many areas including trade, education and defence. The Sultan is a regular and most welcome visitor to this country.

Brunei is our 43rd largest export market. In 1994, UK exports totalled £418 million, having risen by 28.7 per cent. from the 1993 figure. In 1993, Britain's share of OECD exports to Brunei was 34 per cent.

South Africa

25. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about British relations with South Africa. [14966]

Mr. Baldry: During the state visit by Her Majesty the Queen to South Africa last week, President Mandela expressed warm appreciation for Britain's contribution to strengthening and developing these relations.

United States of America

26. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to hold discussions with the United States Secretary of State in respect of United States relations with member states of the European Union. [14967]

Mr. Hurd: I have regular discussions with the US Secretary of State on many subjects including EU-US relations.

32. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with the United States of America. [14976]

Mr. Hurd: They are excellent.

33. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British trade relations with the United States of America. [14977]

Mr. Goodlad: The US is our largest trading partner. United Kingdom exports of goods to the US were worth £16.8 billion last year, and two-way trade in services was worth over $35 billion in 1993.

United Kingdom-Iranian Relations

27. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom-Iranian relations. [14968]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We restored relations with Iran on 27 September 1990 on the basis of mutual respect and non-interference in each other's affairs.

We and our European partners made clear at the European Council at Edinburgh in December 1992 that improvements in Iran's behaviour in a number of areas, particularly human rights, the fatwa on Rushdie and terrorism, would be important in determining the extent to which closer relations and confidence in Iran could be developed. This remains European Union policy.

Georgia

28. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new plans he has to improve bilateral relations between the United Kingdom and Georgia. [14970]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During Georgian Head of State Eduard Shevardnadze's visit to the UK in February my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that a British embassy will be opened in Tbilisi later this year. The UK has recently doubled its technical assistance programme through the know how fund to £1.2 million for projects in the near term.

The British Council plans to expand its teachers' resource centre in Tbilisi to a general information centre, and to promote the teaching of modern English.

World Service

29. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current grant in aid from the Foreign Office to the BBC World Service; and what percentage increase he expects for the next funding triennium; and if he will make a statement. [14971]

Mr. Baldry: The grant in aid to the BBC World Service in the current financial year is £175.2 million. It will rise to £178.8 million in each of the following two years of the current triennium, that is 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Discussions on the level of funding for the next triennium from 1997–98 to 1999–2000 will begin early next year. The actual funding for that triennium will be determined during the 1996 public expenditure survey.

"Britain in the World" Conference

30. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the "Britain in the World" conference taking place in London on 29 March. [14972]

Mr. Hurd: The conference on Britain in the world is taking place today. It has been organised by the Royal Institute of International Affairs, in association with Her Majesty's Government, as part of the institute's 75th anniversary celebrations.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave the opening speech. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales gave a lunch-time address. The hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) will speak this afternoon. So will I.

I hope the conference will stimulate an open and lively debate on Britain's overseas interests.

European Legislation

31. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the number of proposals for new legislation being put forward by the European Commission for 1995; and what the figure was in each of the last three years. [14975]

Mr. David Davis: We welcome the emphasis on subsidiarity in the Commission's work programme for 1995. We will examine carefully every proposal which is tabled, on the basis of subsidiarity and the national interest.

The number of proposals for new legislative initiatives tabled by the Commissions in the last three years is:

1992: 89

1993: 75

1994: 42

NATO Information Budget

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current NATO information budget; what are its main purposes; what was the budget (a) five and (b) 10 years ago in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: The budget of the NATO office of information and press for 1995 is 192,583,000 Belgian francs. In 1990, the figure was 171,400,000 Belgian francs. The figure for 1985 is not available.

The purpose of NATO's information work is to create and reinforce a positive climate of informed public opinion concerning the alliance, encourage informed dialogue about the alliance and current issues, and explain current policy.

Mrs. Patricia Bland

Mr. David Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the authorities in the Republic of Ireland with regard to the legal difficulties encountered by Mrs. Patricia Bland, a British subject, arising out of the incestuous rape of her daughter. [16048]

Mr. Baldry: None. The legal process is continuing: the case is still before the Irish courts. It is a matter for them.

Treaties and Agreements

Mrs. Anne Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Congleton of 28 February, what steps he is taking to identify all those treaties and agreements to which the United Kingdom is a signatory but of which his Department has lost sight; if he will list those treaties and agreements so far identified; if he will indicate in each case the main provisions of the treaty or agreement and the action which he now proposes to take to comply with the provisions of those treaties and agreements; and if he will make a statement. [16524]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 27 March 1995]: Treaty records, which were opened in 1835, show that the United Kingdom is now signatory to some 2,460 multilateral and 9,273 bilateral treaties.

The treaties cover a wide range of subjects and most fall to other Government Departments to administer. Each treaty would need to be researched individually to determine its present status. The information sought is not therefore readily available from treaty records and could be provided only after lengthy research at disproportionate cost.

Somalia

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to the implications for human rights of the introduction of Sharia law in parts of Somalia. [14938]

Mr. Baldry: Parts of Somalia have long suffered from anarchy and general lawlessness. There is evidence that in some areas the introduction of Sharia law, with broad consent, has improved the security of ordinary people. Whatever the system of law, it is important that it is applied fairly and with respect to the dignity of the individual.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the international community to assist the Government of Burundi to reform its army so that it is acceptable to both Hutus and Tutsis in the country. [16604]

Mr. Baldry: The Government of Burundi has not requested assistance in reforming its army. Should it do so, we believe that the international community would be willing to consider the request.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made about the widespread arrests in Nigeria, with particular reference to General Obasanjo, and others who were working for a return to democratic rule. [15533]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 23 March 1995]: We have urged the Nigerian Government to ensure that former President Obasanjo is subject to due process of law: and is either released or promptly charged. I understand that he remains under house arrest, and that others recently arrested remain in detention, including Shehu Yar'Adua, leading member of the National Constitutional Conference. The Commonwealth Secretary-General and the European Union have also issued statements expressing concern, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

WALES

Animal Diseases

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of goat pox were reported in each year since 1985. [15974]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No cases of goat pox have been recorded in Wales since 1991 when the disease became notifiable. This disease is not know to have ever occurred in the UK.

Clinical Outcome Indicators

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to publish health service clinical outcome indicators similar to those published in December 1994 by the Secretary of State for Scotland, in respect of individual health authorities and hospitals in Wales. [15870]

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Office is working with the medical and nursing professions to agree suitable clinical outcome indicators for Wales, and the best method of publishing them.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16209]

Mr. Redwood: No general guidance has been issued to public bodies.

The guidance applying to Government Departments is set out in a Cabinet Office letter, reprinted as annex 2 to "Publicity Services For Government Departments", NAO 1989—HC 46. The general principles of value for money and propriety are applicable to public bodies, and the letter is referred to in "Non-Departmental Public Bodies: A Guide for Departments", Her Majesty's Treasury/Cabinet Office 1992, which has been issued to non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Normal tendering procedures should be followed in appointing public relations companies.

Bridge Strengthening Works

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of bridge reinforcement work undertaken on main roads in Wales in 1993–94; and if he will make a statement. [16781]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Cost of the bridge strengthening works undertaken on trunk roads in Wales in 1993–94 was £2,407,000. The remainder of the main road network is the responsibility of the eight Welsh county councils.

Hill Farmers (Income)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if off-farm income was included in the formula for determining the average income of Welsh hill farmers in 1993–94; and if he will make a statement. [16783]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The estimates of Welsh hill farm income for 1993–94 included only those miscellaneous off-farm receipts which were derived from use of the farm business resources. They took account of such items as contracting work which involved farm labour and machinery, but then excluded any income earned by the farmer from employment or self-employment away from the farm and not involving farm resources, investment income pensions and the like.

Dental Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives are being pursued by the Health Education Council for Wales to educate the public about the benefits of regular brushing and cleaning of teeth; and if he will make a statement. [16773]

Mr. Richards: The Health Education Council has no remit in Wales.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of local government reform on the work of those engaged in combating drug abuse; and if he will make a statement. [16836]

Mr. Richards: We have allowed adequate time for shadow authorities to plan services and to put arrangements in place to ensure that those services are delivered to at least the same standard following reorganisation as before.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 260, on which date he intends to publish his action plan for the Countryside Council for Wales; to whom he will circulate this publication; and what scope he has allowed for consultation with the full council on its contents as soon as it has been published. [16930]

Mr. Redwood: The action plan will be issued shortly with a press notice and will be available on request. The Countryside Council for Wales have been consulted during the formulation of the plan.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 260, if he will list those individuals and organisation whose advice he (a) sought and (b) used in constructing the action plan for the Countryside Council for Wales. [16949]

Mr. Redwood: Advice from the Countryside Council for Wales, on which a wide range of interests is represented, was sought and used in preparation of the action plan. In addition, I took account of views expressed to me by a variety of interests during the preparation of the plan.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Overcrowding

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons are currently assessed to be overcrowded; and if he will list them, indicating the number of places by which they exceed their quota. [16688]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 March 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 29 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many prisons are currently assessed to be overcrowded. Prison Service

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made on increasing private sector involvement in the Prison Service. [17602]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In addition to existing plans for private sector involvement in the Prison Service, Lowdham Grange prison near Nottingham will be rebuilt as a 500-bed, category B prison to be operated by the private sector. This will increase from 12 to 13 the number of prisons to be operated by the private sector in the initial phase of the private sector programme.

Four prisons are already under private management and tendering for the first two of the six entirely new prisons to be designed, constructed, managed and financed by the private sector is nearing completion.

The programme of contracting out court escort and custody work is being accelerated. Contracts covering south-west England and south Wales, south-east England and the west midlands and central Wales will be let early in 1996. This builds on the considerable success of the programme so far. Escapes have been reduced by 40 per cent. in east midlands and Humberside and the courts are receiving a better service.

The combined effect of those prison and escort contracts already let will be cost savings of £18 million a year for the taxpayer.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisoners with 24-hours access to sanitation excluding new and renovated accommodation for each of the past 12 months in prisons in England and Wales. [16265]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter for Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about access to sanitation in prisons in England and Wales.

In the 12 months up to the end of February of this year 24 hour access to sanitation was provided for an additional 2202 prison cells, excluding new and renovated accommodation. The following table shows the month by month breakdown.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 29 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners who are held two or three to a cell in units of accommodation which are certified as being suitable for only one person for each of the past 12 months in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the prisons in which operational capacity on at least one wing has been exceeded during the last 12 months and in each of the previous five years; [15942]

(2) under what circumstances a prison governor has authority to exceed the operational capacity of a prison wing. [15943]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jon Owen Jones, dated 29 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about prisons in which the operational capacity on at least one wing has been exceeded during the last 12 months and in each of the previous 5 years; and the circumstances in which a prison governor has authority to exceed the operational capacity of a prison wing.

Operation capacity is the total number of prisoners which an establishment can hold without serious risk to good order, security and the proper running of the planned regime. Operational capacities are set for an establishment, rather than for individual wings, by area managers based on their operational judgement. The information you request is therefore not available.

Governors may, with the agreement of area managers, accept prisoners in excess of operational capacity if there are compelling operational reasons for doing so. But every effort is made to avoid this by maximising the use of all available accommodation and allocation and transfers to other establishments.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) women and (b) men are employed at each grade within the Prison Service, and what have been their responsibilities for every year since 1989, broken down by category and type of prison. [14861]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has a been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 29 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question requesting information about the numbers and responsibilities of men and women employed in the Prison Service for each year since 1989.

The attached tables are based on information held in the personnel information computer system. This information varies slightly from the figures used in response to an earlier Question (House of Commons Hansard 24 January 1995, Vol 253, Number 36 Column 43–44) because of the differing source of information. The information contained in the tables was used as it provides a breakdown, by grade and sex, of all staff employed by the Service for each year since 1989, whose details were on the system at the relevant times. The totals for officers for 1 April 1990 and 1 April 1992 are slightly lower than those given in my reply to Mr Redmond on 23 January and slightly higher for 1 April 1993. As information for April–September 1991 is unavailable, the figures for October have been provided.

A breakdown of the information in the tables by category and type of establishment is not available for 1989–94 and could be obtained for 1995 only at disproportionate cost. Copies of these tables will be placed in the Library of the House.

The responsibilities of staff are determined by their grade and by the structure and work of the establishment or unit concerned, it is not possible to provide meaningful overall categorisations of responsibility by grade.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what changes there have been in policy on searching in (a) women's gaols and (b) men's gaols between 1990 and 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 29 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about changes in policy on searching in male establishments and female establishments between 1990 and 1994.

The policy changes are listed below.

For male establishments

October 1992—Policy changed to allow women officers to "rub-down" search male prisoners. (This did not extend to intimate or strip-searching.) The change in policy was to ensure that women could carry out the majority of duties expected of male officers and so would not be debarred in practice from working in male establishments, so effectively limiting their career options as the great majority of establishments hold male prisoners.

For all establishments

January 1993—Amendment to Prison Service Manual on Security which allowed instructions to be given to a prisoner during a strip search to bend over/spread legs, if they were suspected of concealing a weapon in the anal or genital area.

Searching practices were also tightened following the attempted escape from Whitemoor prison in September 1994, although these did not involve changes in policy. We are now in the process of making further changes to our searching procedures following Sir John Woodcock's inquiry into the escape from Whitemoor prison. Sir John Woodcock made a number of recommendations which will have an impact on searching. The main changes are more rigorous procedures for searching cells, introduction of dedicated search teams, and searching of staff and visitors on entry to prisons and, on a random basis, on leaving for certain categories of prison. The Home Secretary published the implementation schedule for all the recommendations contained in the report on 8 February. A copy of that schedule has been placed in the Library of the House.

Special Constabulary

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the special constabulary in England and Wales, and if he will make a statement. [17676]

Mr. Maclean: We are establishing a Home Office joint working group to review the special constabulary in England and Wales and to consider what changes are needed.

The group will include representatives of the regular police staff associations, local authorities, Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary, and special constables. It will be chaired by me or by a Home Office official.

I expect the group to produce recommendations about terms and conditions of service by mid-summer and on other matters within the year.

I am placing in the Library today a copy of an open letter I am sending to all serving special constables asking them to contribute to the group's work.

Betting

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to consult interested parties about the proposals for an all-cash amusement-with-prizes machine and changes to betting shop facilities. [17677]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As part of the Government's deregulation initiative my Department today issued a consultation paper seeking views on proposed changes to the law on gaming machines and betting shops. These include:

> an all-cash amusement-with-prizes machine with a maximum prize of £10 in essentially adult environment, including betting shops;
> an extension of the services betting shops may offer; to permit the sale of racing publications, society lottery tickets, prize competitions, such as spot the ball and payment of football pools winnings; > increases in the numbers of jackpot machines permitted in casinos, bingo clubs and registered clubs.

The all-cash machine would dispense with tokens, which are unpopular with both players and the industry. Overall, the changes would remove unnecessary restrictions on the facilities which may be offered and improve consumer choice while ensuring adequate protection for young people.

Subject to the outcome of the consultation process, I propose to bring forward these changes by means of an order or orders under section 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library.

DNA Databases

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from police authorities on the capital funding for the establishment of DNA databases; and if he will make a statement. [16785]

Mr. Maclean: Of the representations made to the Government by police authorities or chief officers on their grant for 1995–96, 10 have made reference, either directly or indirectly, to costs arising from police use of the DNA database. The Association of Metropolitan Authorities has also made representations on behalf of the metropolitan forces.

The costs and benefits to the police of the database have been taken fully into account in our assessment of future police spending requirements. Additional capital provision of £2.5 million is being made available to the forensic science service to launch the operational service and will be recovered over time as a component of the charge to the police for processing each sample. But costs to the police will ultimately be determined by the use they make of the service, and that will be a decision for individual chief officers on their assessment of the balance of costs and benefits.

Interpol (Wildlife Crime)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the workings and development of the Interpol wildlife groups. [16937]

Mr. Maclean: The International Criminal Police Organisation—Interpol—established a working party on environmental crime in 1992. It has met twice—in September 1993 and May 1994. Its next meeting is in May 1995.

The working party has four sub-groups, one of which is concerned with wildlife crime—illegal traffic in species of wild flora and fauna. The other sub-groups deal with illegal traffic in waste, illegal traffic in radioactive substances and the fourth co-ordinates the work of the other three.

The sub-group on wildlife crime is developing a network of law enforcement contacts dealing with wildlife crime, promoting the exchange of information about international wildlife crime and effective enforcement methods and is working closely with the secretariat of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species on Wild Fauna and Flora—CITES. The sub-group met at the CITES secretariat in Geneva in October 1994.

The UK national central bureau of Interpol, part of the national criminal intelligence service, contributes to the work of the Interpol sub-group on wildlife crime to improve police co-operation against international wildlife crimes. The global wildlife division of the Department of the Environment has also participated in a sub-group meeting.

Charities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to order a public inquiry into the financial affairs of the charities Child Aid and Children in Crisis. [16236]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Charity Commissioners have the statutory oversight of charities and the function of instituting inquiries into their affairs where appropriate. I understand that the commissioners' inquiry into the affairs of the Child Aid Foundation is continuing and that the foundation's trustees are co-operating with the inquirers. The commissioners have not had reason to institute any inquiry into Children in Crisis.

Police Authority Budgets

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the additional reductions to the budget limits of each police authority for 1995–96. [16255]

Mr. Maclean: The amounts of grant to police authorities were announced in the reply given to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) on 30 January, column 516. Funding of the police service in England and Wales will be increased by 4 per cent. in 1995–96. The setting of budgets is a matter for police authorities, subject only to the capping criteria. The capping of budgets for all classes of local authority is a matter, in England, for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, and in Wales for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. No changes have been made to the provisional capping criteria for 1995–96 announced in December 1994.

Truck Crime

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what action his Department is taking to combat truck crime. [16380]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The Government recognise the serious effect which the loss of lorries or their loads can have on individual businesses. For this reason we are determined to do all we can to tackle this problem.

It is important that truck owners and drivers are aware of the risks they face and take steps to prevent this type of crime. Manufacturers also have a part to play by improving the security features of commercial vehicles. Last year, the Home Office published an advice leaflet, "A Load on Your Mind", which outlines measures which owners of heavy goods vehicles can take to protect them from theft.

Theft of and from vehicles carry stiff maximum penalties. Taking a vehicle without consent carries a maximum penalty of six months' imprisonment and/or a fine of up to £5,000. Where there is intent to deprive the owner permanently of the vehicle or its load, the offender is liable to seven years' imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine.

The vehicle crime prevention sub-group of the National Board for Crime Prevention advises the Government on initiatives aimed at reducing theft of and from all types of motorised vehicles. The remit of the vehicle crime prevention group was extended to cover heavy goods vehicles in recognition of the fact that commercial vehicle crime is a serious problem. The group brings together key representatives in the vehicle security field and is a symbol of the Government's partnership approach to crime prevention.

The group maintains links with other bodies working in the vehicle crime prevention field. Its chairman also chairs the Metropolitan police's joint action group on organised lorry theft which has been established to study the scale and nature of organised lorry theft and make recommendations on how to reduce it.

Home Office researchers are currently undertaking an in-depth study into heavy commercial vehicle crime using data held on the police national computer supplemented by a postal survey of victims of lorry theft. The research is looking at the numbers and types of lorries stolen; time and location at which thefts occur; the extent of the losses involved and the level of security used to protect vehicles. The results of the study, which are due to be published in the early summer, will be used to develop well targeted initiatives aimed at reducing lorry theft.

The police accord a high priority to tackling vehicle crime and have developed many initiatives. There have been a number of successful police operations against heavy goods vehicle crime, most recently Operation Tupps where the Metropolitan police stolen vehicle squad, in conjunction with Kent constabulary, arrested two men who ran a commercial breaker and exporter's yard in Essex.

The Government have also given their backing to Truckwatch, an initiative to counter commercial vehicle theft which has the support of the road haulage and freight transport associations and the police. It was first launched by Norfolk constabulary at the beginning of 1994.

Hit-and-run Accidents

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been in each of the last five years for cases involving hit-and-run accidents; and what charges were referred in each case. [16666]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is for prosecutions for offences as defined in section 170 of the Road Traffic Act 1988.

The number of prosecutions in England and Wales for offences of failing to stop after an accident or failing to report an accident within 24 hours for the years 1989 to 1993 are set out below. More serious charges may have been preferred in some of these cases depending on the circumstances.

1990	25,827	22,642
1991	25,418	22,044
1992	22,225	19,738
1993	19,043	15,665

Figures for 1994 are not yet available.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of time for each GP consultation; and what this was for each of the last 10 years. [15369]

Mr. Malone: The information requested has not been routinely collected every year. The information is available for 1985–86, 1989–90 and 1992–93 from surveys of general practitioners work load and is as follows:

Notes

1. To aid comparison, the 1992–93 figure for "surgery" 'includes the time spent on "telephone consultations"; these were included within "surgery" in the 1985–86 and 1989–90 Surveys.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of general practitioners and the number of secretaries, administrators, receptionists and practice managers in general practice in each of the last six years (a) in total, (b) by family health service authority and (c) broken down between fundholding and non-fundholding practices. [16166]

Mr. Malone: The information requested will be placed in the Library. The data collected do not distinguish between fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by region (a) the amount and (b) the proportion of each trust's income derived from general practitioner fundholders' contracts. [15830]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if she will list those services which fundholding general practitioners can currently purchase; to which services she proposes to extend this list; and what plans she has to reduce the number of patients needed for a GP to become a fundholder. [16667]

Mr. Malone: The approved list of goods and services details those goods and services which a fundholding general practitioner may purchase. Both the current list and the revised list, which will be effective from 1 April 1996, are available in the Library. As announced in EL (94)79, it is proposed that from 1 April 1996 general practitioners with a list size of 5,000 or more patients may enter standard fundholding and those with over 3,000 patients may enter community fundholding.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a definition reply to his letter of 1 December 1994, Ref. POH2 4593/41. [14414]

Mr. Malone: I wrote to the hon. Member on 24 March.

Retirement

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) general practitioners, (b) consultants and (c) other hospital doctors have retired in each year for the last 10 years; and how many of these have (i) taken early retirement, (ii) retired before 60 and (iii) retired before 55. [15773]

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the National Health Service Pensions Agency under its chief executive, A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Nicholas Brown, dated 29 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

A breakdown of the figures in the format requested is not available. We are however able to provide the following information.

Figures in respect of General and Medical Practitioners quinquennially:

General Dental Practitioners	1,165	366	1,085	381	526

Note:
The Early Retirement Scheme was restricted to general dental practitioners and came into effect from April 1991. The aim is to improve efficiency by allowing older dentists to retire early in favour of younger dentists.

Note:
The Early Retirement programme is open to all consultants aged 50 or over. Consultants include Senior Hospital Medical and Dental Officers who worked full or part-time.

Vacant Medical Posts

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of all (a) house officer, (b) senior house officer, (c) registrar, (d) senior registrar and (e) consultant posts remained vacant as at 1 April on each of the last 10 years for each regional health authority. [15772]

Mr. Malone: Data as at 1 April are not available. Information on vacancies for consultants, senior registrars, registrars and senior house officers is collected from the national health service each year, and is available in the Library in Crown copyright table R5 of the Department's census of the medical and dental work force. As these relate to a single date they may not fairly reflect the trend for the number of vacancies in the stated grades over the year as a whole.

Staff Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average annual cost of employing (a) a hospital consultant, (b) a senior house officer, (c) a qualified nurse and (d) an ambulance paramedic. [15827]

Mr. Malone: In 1992–93, the latest year for which data are available, the average annual cost of employing a hospital consultant was £63,000 and a senior house officer was £34,410. Information for 1992–93 cannot be broken down to show the average costs of a qualified nurse and an ambulance paramedic.

Asset Disposal

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the value of NHS assets which have been (a) sold or (b) privatised since 1985. [16186]

Mr. Sackville: The information available on receipts from the sale of surplus hospital and community health services capital assets since 1985–86 is shown in the table. These receipts are retained by the national health service and additional to Government spending on capital.

There is no question of these NHS assets having been privatised.

Endocrine System (Chemical Disruption)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has evaluated in the last 10 years on the effects on the human endocrine system of known endocrine disruptive chemicals present in the environment; [15936]

Mr. Sackville: The Department has for many years evaluated worldwide experimental and epidemiological evidence about the potential health effects of chemicals present in the environment, including their effects on the human endocrine system. We are advised on such evidence by independent expert advisory committees.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research her Department has carried out in the last 10 years into the effects on the human endocrine system of known endocrine disruptive chemicals present in the environment. [15955]

(2) what research her Department has carried out in the last 10 years into the effects on human health of organochlorines as a class with regard to both lethal and sub-lethal effects. [15954]

Mr. Sackville: None. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgment.

Birth Abnormalities

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department monitors the rates of abnormalities of the genital tract in male babies on a continual basis; and if she will make available the most recent statistics. [15957]

Mr. Sackville: Since 1964, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has run the national congenital malformation notification scheme. The data for this scheme are received on a voluntary basis from district health authorities. Until 31 December 1994, data were requested for all babies where the malformation was identified at or within 10 days of birth. This time limit has since been removed. Data are routinely collected on hypospadias[1] and epispadias—the most commonly visible malformations of the male genital tract. The most recent statistics are shown in the table.

Accident and Emergency Department Closures

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency departments have had to be closed for reasons other than a planned closure in each of the last 10 years; and if she will list the name of the unit, the date and length of the unplanned closure and the reason why it was closed. [16093]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Dementia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken, following the introduction of the care programme approach and services for older people with dementia, to increase the number of clinical psychologists available to the NHS; and what steps she is taking to ensure that mechanisms exist to effectively link vacancy figures with training commissions. [16173]

Mr. Bowis: It is for local employers to determine the staff needed to deliver the services that they have contracted to provide. Since 1991, the number of clinical psychologists employed by the national health service trusts and the number of training places commissioned on their behalf by regional health authorities has continued to increase to meet the growing demand for clinical psychologists. The number of clinical psychologists has risen from 2,100 in 1990 to 2,810 in 1993 which represents an increase of 34 per cent.

Board Members (Hours of Work)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to (a) advise the Audit Commission of the number of hours that chairmen and non-executive directors of health authorities and NHS trusts are expected to devote to their duties for their salaries and (b) to report on those who significantly fail to honour their commitments. [16217]

Mr. Malone: None.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines her Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16215]

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not issued guidelines to agencies and public bodies under its authority specifically for the employment of public relations companies. However, the requests for tenders for these and other services are handled in accordance with general purchasing guidance issued by the Department.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much her Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if she will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16282]

Mr. Sackville: Functions which are identified as public relations are normally carried out within the Department by the press and publicity branches of the information division.

Cornwall Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 830, if she is now in a position to make a statement on the payment of defence costs in the Cornwall Health trust libel case involving an earlier chairman. [16206]

Mr. Malone: No. The matter remains before the courts.

Body Scanner, Greenwich

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where the South East Thames regional health authority purchased the second-hand body scanner for Greenwich health authority. [16242]

Mr. Sackville: The scanner was supplied by American Medical Ltd.

Trainee Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trainee nurses there were in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994. [16238]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 30 November 1994, column 794 for the 1992 figures. Information shown in the table for 1993 and 1994 is taken from the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting annual reports for 1993 and 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

Long-stay Care of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to health authorities on the number of beds per 1,000 population aged over 65 years to be provided for the long-stay medical and nursing care of the elderly. [16244]

Mr. Bowis: HSG(95)8, issued on 23 February to health authorities, made clear the national health service's responsibility for purchasing a full range of services to meet continuing health care needs. Copies are in the Library.

Pensioners (Mailshot)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order the Paymaster General's Office to remove NHS pensioners' personal pension account numbers from labels used in any future departmental mailshot and from any envelope addressed to NHS pensioners. [16275]

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

Keith Sullens, Chief Executive of Paymaster who the NHS Pensions Agency contracts to pay our NHS pensioners informed me that account numbers which appeared on envelopes addressed to NHS pensioners were printed in error. A new system has been introduced which will ensure NHS pensioners personal pension account numbers do not appear on any envelopes addressed to NHS pensioners in the future.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what fees the Paymaster General's office charged Medicash for the recent mailshot to NHS pensioners. [16249]

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question as it falls within my areas of responsibility.

I understand that Paymaster whom the NHS Pensions Agency contracts to pay NHS pensioners charged Medicash £21,379.21 (including VAT) for the recent mailshot to NHS pensioners.

Surrey Ambulance Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will inquire into and publish details of the terms on which Lynn Samuel and Mike Foy left the Surrey ambulance trust and the cost to the NHS. [16254]

Mr. Sackville: The terms on which Mr. Lynn Samuel left Surrey Ambulance Service National Health Service trust are a matter for the trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Lady Helen Gardiner, for details.

The arrangements for Mr. Mike Foy, the former chief ambulance officer and then general manager of Surrey Ambulance Service, are a matter for the East Surrey health authority, which managed the service before it became a trust on 1 April 1994. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mr. John Poole, for details.

Dental Services

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will advise health authorities only to employ in part-time posts dental contractors who have a substantial number of national health patients. [16389]

Mr. Malone: Family health services authorities are given approval to employ salaried dentists, whether full or part-time only when they can demonstrate that patients in a particular area would otherwise have difficulty obtaining general dental services.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press officers there are in her Department currently; and what was the figure in 1979. [16561]

Mr. Sackville: The number of press officers currently employed is 15. Figures for 1979 are not available.

Clinical Negligence Fund

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she proposes to take following the issue in 1994 of a consultation document on the proposed creation of a central fund for clinical negligence costs in the NHS. [17358]

Mr. Malone: Last year, the Department of Health published outline proposals for a central fund to help national health service trusts spread the costs of clinical negligence. The response to the proposals, both from the NHS and other interested parties, was very positive. Detailed design work on the scheme has been carried out for the Department by a team from the Medical Protection Society and Willis Corroon Ltd. in full consultation with the trust movement.

In the light of the continued high degree of interest shown by NHS trusts, I have decided that—subject to parliamentary authority—the scheme should go ahead with effect from 1 April 1995. The scheme will be voluntary. The necessary regulations to set up the scheme, and the special health authority which will administer it on behalf of the Secretary of State, will be laid in the near future.

Prescriptions

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people claimed free prescriptions on grounds of (a) automatic entitlement and (b) low-income entitlement as outlined in the Department of Health form P11, during the last year for which figures are available. [16929]

Mr. Malone: The information is not available.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has received concerning the disease myalgic encephalomyelitis; and if she will make a statement on her proposals for improving (a) the treatment, (b) medical and public knowledge and (c) research of the disease. [16813]

Mr. Sackville: The national task force on chronic fatigue syndrome, post viral fatigue syndrome or ME, which is independent of the Department of Health, has produced a report. With a view to securing progress and promoting the development of a professional consensus, the chief medical officer has invited the conference of colleges to consider the report. The views of the conference of colleges will be of much assistance to the Department in helping to determine the best way forward on matters concerning this condition.

NHS Trusts (Borrowing)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each NHS trust has paid for the cost of borrowing in each year since its inception.

[16214]

Mr. Hague: Guidance on the use of public relations companies is issued by the Cabinet Office and is contained in the booklet, "A Work Guide for Government Information Officers", a copy of which is in the Library. All business units in this Department are expected to work within the Cabinet Office guidelines.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16622]

Mr. Hague: The total cost of producing the 1995–96 departmental annual report was £34,104.

Copies were circulated to all personnel at grade 7 and above in the Department and executive agencies, members of the Social Security Select Committee, members of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee, members of the Social Security Advisory Committee and all Opposition spokesman on social security. A copy has also been placed in the Library.

A total of 3,500 copies were produced, 1,700 of which were designated for sale through Her Majesty's Stationery Office bookshops at a cover price of £16.35.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the speed with which (a) reviews and (b) appeals involving benefit cases are dealt with by his Department; and if he will make a statement; [16496]

(2) what discussions he has had with regard to appeals and reviews affecting cases inside his Department during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [16498]

(3) what representations he has received in the last 12 months regarding delays in dealing with appeals and reviews affecting cases involving his Department; and if he will make a statement. [16497]

Mr. Hague: The table shows average clearance times for:

(a) the three types of benefit cases which are subject to mandatory review prior to appeal; and

(b) benefit appeals, divided by type of tribunal.

Benefit reviews and appeals

	Number
Reviews
Disability living allowance	81 per cent. in 55 days
Disability working allowance	91 per cent. in 20 days
Attendance allowance	92 per cent. in 75 days
Appeals[1]
Social security appeal tribunal	[2]44 weeks
Disability appeal tribunal	23 weeks
Medical appeal tribunal	36 weeks

[1] Figures include the time taken by the Independent Tribunal Service to hear appeals.

[2] This time is higher than usual because the Independent Tribunal Service are clearing appeals which were previously held up awaiting the outcome of a Court of Appeal case. The underlying clearance time is around 28 weeks.

We have received representations from the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and the Social Security Advisory Committee about delays and also letters concerning individual cases. Ministers have regular meetings with His Honour Judge Bassingthwaighte, the president of the Independent Tribunal Service, which hears social security benefit appeals, and with the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, who is responsible for ensuring that targets on reviews and appeals preparation are met.

War Disablement Pension

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants there have been in the last five years for a war disablement pension under the personal injuries (civilians) scheme for tuberculosis sufferers; and how many of these applications have been successfully granted a pension. [16668]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16565]

Mr. Hague: The number of press officers currently employed by this Department is as follows:

Seconded HQ press officer to the charity Motability (includes publicity and promotions work)	1
The Child Support Agency	2
The Contributions Agency	1
The War Pensions Agency	0.25
The Benefits Agency

This Department was not in existence until 1988 and figures for 1979 are therefore not available.

Benefits Agency Review

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the outcome of the review of the Benefits Agency. [17601]

Mr. Lilley: I announced on 20 July 1994, Official Report, column 257, a formal review of the Benefits Agency. Each next steps agency undergoes a periodic review to evaluate performance, to reconsider whether agency status is the best way of doing the job and to revise its framework document.

Part of that review involved an evaluation of the performance of the Benefits Agency since its creation in April 1991. I am pleased to announce that the evaluation report has been published today and a copy has been placed in the Library.

My colleagues and I have now considered the review team's recommendations. These take account of a number of detailed submissions from hon. Members, national and local customer representative organisations, and private companies. I am grateful to all those who have participated in the review.

The main conclusions of the review, which I accept, are that the Benefits Agency should remain a next steps agency within the civil service, responsible as now for a wide range of social security benefits. There is no scope to abolish or privatise an organisation of this nature; nor is there any evidence to suggest that wholesale contractorisation of the agency's functions is at present feasible or likely to improve value for money for the taxpayer. The review endorses the agency's initiatives to integrate its services more closely in order to provide a "one stop" customer service and to reduce significantly the scope for fraud and abuse.

The review also recommends that the agency should build on its existing change programme by developing a comprehensive strategy for improving its performance and efficiency. The details will be for the chief executive to decide, but they will include the involvement of the private sector wherever its skills would be of assistance, for example through re-engineering of the agency's business processes. The Government's "Competing for Quality" programme will continue to apply to the majority of the agency's support functions. In addition, and in order to inform the debate about longer-term possibilities, I have asked the chief executive to conduct a pilot project to establish the feasibility and desirability of separating the adjudication function from other parts of the benefits administration process.

The review goes on to recommend that the chief executive conduct internal reviews of the agency's structure and organisation, including the relationship between the corporate centre and the local units, and the numbers and boundaries of those units. This will devolve more power to local units to respond to local needs whilst at the same time sharpening accountability. All the elements of the strategy should have been decided by April 1996 to enable implementation of any changes from April 1997.

In conclusion, the review recognises the significant improvements in customer service and efficiency which the agency has achieved since its inception in 1991. These reflect great efforts by the chief executive and his staff. The review's recommendations are designed to build on this work. I am placing a copy of the executive summary of the prior options report in the Library today, and I shall shortly publish a revised framework document confirming the agency's aims, objectives and responsibilities.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 64, how long he estimates it will take for absent parents to benefit from reduction in maintenance as a result of the introduction of travel cost allowances in the CSA formula. [15864]

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Andrew Miller, dated 29 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about travel to work costs in the child support formula.

Subject to the approval of the regulations by Parliament, travel to work costs will be taken into account in the maintenance formula from 18 April 1995.

Applications for travel to work costs will be incorporated into appropriate assessments as they are made from that date.

Existing clients will be sent a leaflet explaining the change. This will include a tear-off portion inviting them to make a claim within three months. The Agency will start processing these claims as soon as they are received.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff are currently employed in the prevention of benefit fraud; and what was the financial benefit of such work in the last financial year for which figures are available. [16823]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The administration of fraud work is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Greg Pope, dated 28 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the numbers of staff currently employed in the prevention of benefit fraud; and the financial benefit of this work in the last financial year.

The Benefits Agency currently employs over 3,000 staff in fraud work where duties include both prevention and detection. Separate figures are not kept on the work of staff where work is related to the prevention of fraud, nor on the financial value of preventative work. The total estimated benefit savings for the financial year 1993/94 from fraud work was £654m. Recoveries of benefit overpaid, including fraud cases, totalled £80m for the same period.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the outcome of consultation on her proposal to accept the pay settlement for school teachers which was recommended by the School Teachers Review Body. [17481]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am today confirming that I am accepting the School Teachers Review Body's recommendation to increase school teachers' pay by 2.7 per cent. I will make an order which will increase all points on the teachers' pay spines by 2.7 per cent. with effect from 1 April.

I am writing to the teacher unions, the National Employers Organisation for School Teachers, bodies representing school governors and to the head teachers and chairmen of governors of all schools in England and Wales. Teachers are making the key contribution to raising standards in education. They deserve their pay award, at the level recommended by the independent School Teachers Review Body, without undue delay.

I have received many representations about the funding of the teachers' pay award and considered them carefully. I believe the local government funding settlement is tough but manageable, and I have concluded that it would be right to implement the recommendation in full. It is for local authorities to give priority to front-line services such as schools. School governors in turn should ensure the efficient management of staff and resources.

I can also confirm my decisions to bring into force from 1 September 1995 the following proposals by means of revisions to the school teachers pay and conditions document:

i. relevant bodies should be able, at their discretion, to reward teachers for work on initial teacher training;

ii. relevant bodies should be able, at their discretion, to compensate teachers for in-service training at weekends and in school holidays, the compensation to be paid from savings on supply cover that would otherwise be necessary were the in-service training to be undertaken during the school day;

iii. the STPCD should recognise the employment status of teachers in Education Associations and GM clusters.

I can also confirm my decisions to accept the following conclusions and recommendations of the School Teachers Review Body, not all of which will require changes to be made to the STPD:

i. there should be no change to the structure of the classroom teachers' pay spine, but the STRB will produce a consultative document on this subject;

ii. the current transitional arrangements for safeguarding the inner London Supplement should remain in place;

iii. returners to the profession should retain their entitlement to their accumulated experience points;

iv. there should be no change in the employment status of teachers at Pupil Referral Units. Such teachers will continue to be "unattached";

v. there should be no separate performance related pay scheme for heads and deputies, but the Secretary of State should issue guidance on the assessment of performance, drawing on the four essential performance indicators set out in the STRB's consultative document, which should be taken into account by relevant bodies when reviewing salaries for these staff;

vi. there should be no direct funding of excellence points through GEST, but the Department should consider other direct funding mechanisms; and

vii. the Teachers' Pension Agency should distribute copies of a poster and a leaflet about the benefits of the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme.

European Social Fund

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what funding is obtained from the European social fund for courses in British universities. [16892]

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

In 1993, £40.35 million was claimed for European social fund provision across objectives 2, 3, 4 and 5b by the higher education sector, which includes universities, in Great Britain. Final figures for 1994 are not yet available.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines she is giving to universities and other higher education institutes on how to deal with mature students who receive training allowances from the European social fund. [16840]

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

Each year, the Department issues comprehensive guidance to all potential applicants, including universities and other higher education institutes, on how to apply for, and claim European social fund grants. This guidance covers how the allowances to students and other trainees are to be treated.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students benefit from the European social fund provision entitling them to pursue courses in United Kingdom universities. [16893]

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

In 1993, 50,309 students in Great Britain benefited from European social fund provision across objectives 2, 3, 4 and 5b in the higher education sector, which includes universities. Final figures for 1994 are not yet available.

National Science Week

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost to the university sector of the National Science Week promotion. [16897]

Mr. Boswell: The requested information is not held centrally.

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the total cost of cash protection of the central element of grant-maintained schools' budgets in England and Wales in 1994–95, listed by local education authority; and what will be the costs in 1995–96, based on the local education authority provisional estimates submitted by 31 March; [16935]

(2) which grant-maintained schools, listed by local education authority, will receive more cash protection within central AMG in 1995–96 than in 1994–95, based on provisional estimates; [16891]

(3) which grant-maintained schools, in each local education authority area, will receive, on provisional estimates, an element for cash protection within their annual maintenance grant for 1995–96, when no element was received in 1994–95. [16986]

Mr. Robin Squire: Responsibility for the calculation of grants for grant-maintained schools is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Teachers Pensions Agency

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many former teachers' pensions are covered by the privatisation review which is currently taking place at the Teachers Pensions Agency. [16981]

Mr. Robin Squire: We have made it clear that there is no question of privatising the teachers' superannuation scheme. The present review is concerned solely with the administration of the scheme.

Some 250,000 former teachers have preserved rights in the scheme. Some 340,000 retired teachers are receiving pension payments.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether, as part of the privatisation review of the Teachers Pensions Agency, she is considering allowing private firms to charge teachers' employers directly for the provision of administrative services. [16982]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans for any such arrangement.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total numbers in Derbyshire schools over the last 20 years in the (a) 11 to 16 years, (b) 16 to 19 years and (c) five to 11 years age range. [16714]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on pupils in Derbyshire local education authority area for years 1975–1994 is shown in the table.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally in the form requested. The table shows Derbyshire local education authority's total expenditure on, and income from, its school catering service from 1982–83 to 1993–94, the latest year for which provisional outturn figures are available.

University Evaluation System

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to change the English and Welsh university evaluation system for teaching to take them closer to the system operated for Scottish universities. [16890]

Mr. Boswell: The Higher Education Funding Council for England is responsible for quality assessment in England. Following consultation with the sector, the council has announced a revised methodology from April 1995 which contains some elements in common with the system operated in Scotland. Responsibility for the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Funding Agency for Schools

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 784, when the hon. Member for Birmingham, Yardley may expect to receive a reply from the chairman of the Funding Agency for Schools. [16652]

Mr. Robin Squire: I understand that the chief executive of the funding agency wrote to the hon. Member on 27 March.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Gaza

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals are being put forward by the World bank, European Union and British Government to help improve reproductive health services in Gaza and on the west bank. [16606]

Mr. Baldry: We are not aware of any proposals being put forward by the World bank or the European Union. We have agreed to contribute £400,000 for the UN Relief and Works Agency's expanded family health programme in the Gaza strip which aims to help improve reproductive health.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what gaps exist in the food pipeline to camps holding refugees from Rwanda; and what measures are proposed to fill any such gaps. [16598]

Mr. Baldry: We have pledged 21,000 tonnes of cereals and 2,800 tonnes of beans, with a total value £7 million, to the world food programme for its operations in and around Rwanda, in the last month. From this pledge, 8,500 tonnes of maize have already been bought for delivery in May; the beans will be bought locally and quickly.

Taking account of this and other donors' pledges, WFP calculations suggest the pipeline for cereals is reasonably healthy until September, apart from some possible, short-term problems in April, which they are currently considering how to tackle. Additional pledges for non-cereal commodities are needed.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the international community to establish an effective and objective judicial system in Burundi. [16603]

Mr. Baldry: A UN Security Council mission to Burundi last month reiterated the importance of strengthening the national judicial system. A number of donors have expressed interest, including the European Union. Belgium plans an appraisal mission in April which others may join but the situation in Burundi is extremely fragile and plans to support the judicial system are very difficult to advance. We have contributed £100,000 this month to a UN High Commission for Human Rights programme of training and technical assistance for Burundis in justice and human rights.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the World bank, IMF and donor countries to assist Burundi to stabilise and achieve economic development. [16605]

Mr. Baldry: The fragile political and security environment in Burundi is making progress with economic development very difficult. The World bank agreed an emergency assistance project last December, worth nearly £10 million, for the import of high-priority goods for education, health, agriculture, infrastructure and private sector development. IMF staff hope to restart discussions with Burundi officials in Geneva this week leading to the formulation of a three-year economic policy framework for IMF assistance. An EU troika mission left for Burundi on 23 March and will present recommendations for strengthening EU support.

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects on which the United Kingdom's aid contribution to Iraq has been spent since 1991. [16632]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 27 March 1995]: A list providing details of United Kingdom emergency aid contributions totalling £57.2 million since 1991 has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Most of this aid went to Kurdish areas of northern Iraq, and refugees in neighbouring countries. Smaller amounts have been used for medical supplies and water projects in central and southern Iraq. In addition, our share of EC spending has totalled £13.3 million over the same period.

Aid Strategies

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is now available under the Overseas Development Administration's published policy on open government on aid strategies for the United Kingdom's main bilateral aid programmes. [17678]

Mr. Baldry: Country aid programme statements on the United Kingdom's bilateral programmes to Ethiopia, Kenya, Malawi, Mozambique, South Africa, Zimbabwe, Pakistan and Russia are now available from the ODA library.

Further CAPS will be added to this list as and when the relevant country programmes are reviewed—those over £10 million per year; this process is carried out every other year.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations led to the making of low flying passes by a Royal Navy Westland helicopter over Goodison Boulevard, Cantley, Doncaster around 14.20 hours on 3 March. [16237]

Mr. Soames: Extensive enquiries have been made, but it has not proved possible to identify the helicopter in question from the details given.

Old Sarum Airfield

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who holds the lease of Old Sarum airfield; when the lease was granted and for how long; and whether the terms of the lease permit the cessation of flying activity and the development of the airfield for housing and industrial use. [16855]

Mr. Soames: The lease of Old Sarum airfield is held by two parties, Blane Field Investments Ltd.—the major leaseholder—and Old Sarum Park Properties Ltd. The lease was granted on 16 November 1982 for 999 years and allows for the erection of new buildings with the landlord's consent.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to sell the freehold of Old Sarum airfield; and if tender documents have been prepared. [16854]

Mr. Soames: We intend to sell the freehold of Old Sarum airfield by public tender. Final tender documents are being prepared with a provisional tender date of 26 April.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rights are reserved for use of Old Sarum airfield by his Department; on how many occasions those rights have been exercised since a lease was granted on the property; and if he will make a statement. [16856]

Mr. Soames: The rights reserved for the use of Old Sarum permit my Department to use the airfield for the taking off and landing of military aircraft, including helicopters, on no more than 150 occasions per year. Information on the number of occasions when those rights have been exercised is only available for the last two financial years: in 1993–94, some 80 landings took place for which a landing fee was charged; in 1994–95 there were around 50 landings.

Decommissioned Warships

Mr. MacKinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1994, Official Report, column 816, to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on HMS Sirius what were the dates and total cost of the final refits undertaken for the three decommissioned warships used as targets and sunk in live firing exercises between 1990 and 1994. [16926]

Mr. Freeman: The last refit dates of the decommissioned warships used as targets and sunk in live firing exercises in 1990, 1991 and 1993 were, respectively: 5 September 1983 to 1 June 1984, 29 May 1985 to 17 February 1986, and 7 April 1986 to 8 December 1986. The costs of refit work undertaken before the royal dockyards passed into commercial management in April 1987 are not available.

HMS Fort Victoria

Mr. MacKinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will write to the hon. Member for Thurrock, as undertaken during the debate on 16 February, Official Report, column 1152, giving details of delayed delivery and commissioning times of HMS Fort Victoria and the reasons for these delays, together with the total costs and penalties paid. [17000]

Mr. Freeman: I shall be writing to the hon. Member very shortly.

Vehicle Purchases

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what military purpose his Department requires to purchase 30 wheeled industrial diesel tractors, as set out in tender No. LV2B/488; what consideration has been given to leasing or hiring of such tractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 March 1995]: The wheeled industrial diesel tractors are required for the general haulage of stores, materials handling activities and occasional light aircraft towing. A number of these are also protected to allow safe movement of ammunition, bombs and missiles. The provision, management and support of service transport is at present being reviewed to determine whether there is scope for greater involvement of the private sector. We intend to establish pilot leasing schemes by the end of this calendar year. Tender LV2B/488 represents the minimum order necessary to meet the requirement pending the outcome of the review. Any resultant contract will be sufficiently flexible to take account of changes in vehicle purchasing arrangements for any further requirements.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what military purpose his Department requires to purchase various diesel 4 x 2 trucks, as set out in future purchase LV1B/983; what consideration has been given to leasing or hiring of such trucks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 March 1995]: The vehicles are required for the transportation of military stores and equipment. The provision, management and support of service transport is at present being reviewed to determine whether there is scope for greater involvement of the private sector. We intend to establish pilot leasing schemes by the end of this calendar year. Future purchase LV1B/983 represents the minimum order necessary to meet the requirement pending the outcome of the review.

Horses and Ponies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) ponies and (b) horses have been owned by his Department in each of the last 10 years. [16078]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 24 March 1995]: My Department had a requirement for 517 horses in each year between 1985 and 1991; this changed to 471 in 1992, 499 in 1993 and 1994, and will reduce to 433 next month. In addition, we owned five ponies throughout this period.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many (a) ponies and (b) horses have been transported by his Department to (i) Cyprus and (ii) Germany in each of the last 10 years. [16077]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 24 March 1995]: An average of three horses were transported to Germany each year between 1985 to 1992. Two ponies were transported to Cyprus in 1991 and one in 1994.

SCOTLAND

Fisheries Protection

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the fisheries for which exclusion orders under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976 are (a) currently in operation and (b) currently under request; if he will make a statement on the operation of public access agreements in each of these fisheries; and whether he is conducting a review of the situation regarding public access to the boats operated by the Aberfeldy Angling Club on the Tay. [15520]

Sir Hector Monro: The following protection orders made under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976 are currently in force:

The Rivers Tweed and Eye Protection Order 1980.
The Upper Spey and Associated Waters Protection Order 1982.
The River Lunan Catchment Area Protection Order 1983.
The River Tummel Catchment Area Protection Order 1983.
The River Tay Catchment Area Protection Order 1986.
The West Strathclyde Protection Order 1988.
The River Earn Catchment Area Protection Order 1990.
The River Don Catchment Area (Part) Protection Order 1990.
The Loch Morar and River Morar Protection Order 1992.
The Loch Awe and Associated Waters Protection Order 1992.
The River Clyde Catchment Area (Part) Protection Order 1994.
The North West Sutherland Protection Order 1994.

Applications for protection orders for Loch Arkaig and the River Arkaig, Middle River Spey, St. John's loch in Caithness and Loch Ruthven and Loch Choire are under consideration.

The operation of public access to fishings in each area is considered regularly by a liaison committee. My Department is liaising with the Aberfeldy Angling Club on access to its fishings but not on boat access as no boats are operated by that club.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount of environmentally sensitive area grant budget for 1994–95 is still uncommitted (a) in cash and (b) as a percentage of the budget; and if he will make a statement on underspending in the environmentally sensitive areas budget for 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Sir Hector Monro: Sufficient resources have been made available to enable eligible farmers and crofters in the designated areas to participate in the environmentally sensitive area scheme. Expenditure in 1994–95 is expected to be £1.16 million which represents almost 26 per cent. of the total provision of £4.5 million.

The level of uptake has been lower than anticipated since additional environmentally sensitive areas were designated in 1993 and 1994, but we hope that more farmers and crofters will wish to take advantage of the scheme.

Forestry Commission

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list and give the acreage of Forestry Commission woodlands (a) currently scheduled for sale in Perthshire and (b) sold over the past five years. [15521]

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission records its land holdings by region, not by the former Scottish counties. The following Forestry Commission woodlands in Tayside region are currently for sale on the open market.

Name of property	Area (hectares)
Camusericht	304
Dalguise (part)	7
Long Plantation, Crieff	80

(2) what was the level of financial remuneration received from the Forestry Commission in each year since 1985. [15980]

Sir Hector Monro: The information is as follows:

Sir Hector Monro: The framework document will be placed in the Library of the House when it is completed. Hon. Members will be able to raise it, like any other published document, in the House.

Hunting

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify the areas of Forestry Commission land where the lease stipulates that (a) fox and (b) deer hunting must be allowed. [15978]

Sir Hector Monro: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 168, how many cases of food poisoning were reported in 1994. [16296]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 4,098 cases of food poisoning were reported in Scotland in 1994.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15571]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 March 1995]: My ministerial colleagues in the Scottish Office and I have implemented and keep ourselves fully informed of progress on a wide range of deregulation activity undertaken by the Department.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15555]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The Scottish Office is fully committed to the deregulation initiative and operates a rolling programme of review of the regulations, forms and rules for which it has responsibility with a view to identifying scope for repeal or simplification.

1992	21,978
1993	23,369
1994	24,352

Holyroodhouse

Mrs Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost to his Department of the maintenance and running costs of Holyroodhouse, whether occupied or unoccupied, in the last five years; and what proportion of this sum is represented by employees' salaries. [16919]

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 March 1995]: My right hon. Friend is responsible for the cost of the maintenance of the fabric of the palace, for security and for the costs of utilities such as fuel and telephones. All other costs are met by the royal household.

[1] Estimate.

These costs include all expenditure directly attributable to the palace, but not professional and central administration.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the draft list of areas of special conservation and protection required under the EC habitats directive will be announced; what the length of the consultation period will be; on what date the draft list is due to be submitted to the European Commission; and if the consultation process can be extended beyond that date. [16925]

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 March 1995]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on behalf of the UK Environment Ministers will be making a statement to the House on these matters very shortly.

[16050]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

Body Scanners, Ayrshire

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what discussions the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust had with Ayrshire and Arran health board and the North Ayrshire NHS trust prior to their agreement with Medical Support Ltd. for the provision of a magnetic resonance image scanner at the Ayr hospital, with special reference to the effect of the new facility on existing facilities; [16730]

(2) when the South Ayrshire Hospitals trust first considered entering a contract with Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. for the provision of a magnetic image resonancing facility at the Ayr hospital; and at what stage Ayrshire and Arran health board and the Scottish Office became involved in these discussions. [16732]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Discussions between those parties on service needs and on means of meeting these needs took place in November and December 1994. It was at the December meeting that the South Ayrshire trust representative indicated that the trust was proposing to purchase a fixed base scanner. My right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State was made aware of the proposal in February 1995.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland where magnetic resonance imaging facilities within the Ayrshire and Arran health board area and neighbouring health boards are based; and what is the nature of the current agreements and contracts for existing equipment. [16731]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are at present no fixed-base magnetic resonance imaging scanners in Ayrshire and Arran, Argyll and Clyde, Lanarkshire or Dumfries and Galloway. There are such fixed scanners in Glasgow and the Southern General hospital and Western infirmary and at Ross Hall and the Glasgow Nuffield hospital.

The agreements for 1995–96 propose the increased use of the mobile magnetic resonance scanner alternating week about between Crosshouse hospital and Ayr hospital.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what control the South Ayrshire Hospitals trust has over Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. as regards the provision of magnetic resonance imaging facilities at the Ayr hospital; if he will make a statement on the financial details of this contract, the contract's duration, the trust's liabilities under the contract; and for what reasons the South Ayrshire Hospitals trust opted for the involvement of the private sector in this facility. [16739]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust will, through a contract, control the quality and price of the magnetic resonance imaging service from Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. The contract details have still to be finalised.

The trust's potential liability is limited to the loss of building lease income amounting to £20,000 per annum. The trust would seek to mitigate this loss, should it ever arise, by securing an alternative use for the premises.

The trust believes that the new arrangements will result in an improved service to patients.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what process was used by Ayrshire and Arran health board to evaluate the decision of the South Ayrshire Hospitals trust to conclude the recent contract with Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. and what additional resources are being awarded to the trust to enable it to meet its obligations under its contract with Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. [16740]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The health board contracts with the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust for the provision of magnetic resonance imaging services. It is open to the trust to make its own arrangements for securing that provision, subject to the health board being satisfied that the quality and price is contained within the sum made available for the current mobile service in 1995–96.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust will make resources available to meet its obligations under the terms of its contract with Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. and if he will make a statement. [16741]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The trust will meet the costs of the service from Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. as it will any other services, from the contract income it receives from its purchasers.

NHS (Private Sector Involvement)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which NHS trusts have approached the Scottish Office with proposals for the involvement of private sector bodies in the provision of treatment facilities within NHS hospitals. [16736]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following NHS trusts have approached the Scottish Office with proposals for the involvement of private sector bodies in the provision of treatment facilities within NHS hospitals.

Dundee Teaching Hospitals
Grampian Healthcare
Law Hospital
Hairmyres and Stonehouse
Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh
Edinburgh Healthcare
Western General Hospitals
Greater Glasgow Community and Mental Health Services
South Ayrshire Hospitals

However, there are other schemes in formative stages where trusts are yet to come to the Scottish Office with firm proposals.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance the Scottish Office has issued to Scottish health boards and NHS trusts relating to the involvement of private sector bodies in the provision of facilities for treatment within the NHS. [16737]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The NHS management executive in Scotland has issued a wide range of guidance to health boards and NHS trusts over the last two years on this topic. These circulars build on guidance provided by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions Ayrshire and Arran health board and the Scottish Office have had with other NHS trusts and health boards in the west of Scotland in relation to the conclusion of the contract between the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust and Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd. and the long-term financial implications of this agreement to these bodies' operational budgets. [16738]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Neither the Ayrshire and Arran health board nor the Scottish Office has had discussions with any other health board or NHS trust about the services offered by Ayrshire Medical Support Ltd.

NHS Trusts (Asset Disposals)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment the Scottish Office has made of the disposal of assets by Scottish NHS trusts; and if he will make a statement indicating for each health board in Scotland the asset disposals which have occurred for each NHS trust which his Department has approved, the value of the disposal in each case, the body to which the asset was sold and the utilisation made of the capital receipt in each case. [16733]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Property disposals by NHS trusts are assessed as required in the context of the NHS management executive's national oversight of NHS estate management in Scotland. In 1994–95, no disposal has been specifically approved by the management executive.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers of approval the Scottish Office has in relation to the disposal of assets by NHS trusts; and what involvement Scottish health boards have in this process. [16734]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a reserve power to prevent the disposal of property where this would be against the interests of the NHS. This power applies only to assets valued at more than a specific threshold—currently £0.5 million—and the trust is required to notify the management executive of such planned disposals in its annual business plans.

In addition, certain types of disposal by trusts are covered by notification requirements contained in the NHS property transactions handbook issued in May 1993 by the NHS management executive. The property transactions handbook provides for the involvement of boards where they have an interest in the disposal concerned, for example if there are relevant service considerations.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance has been issued by his Department to NHS trusts and health boards in Scotland in relation to the disposal of assets by these bodies. [16735]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current guidance on NHS property disposals in Scotland is contained in the property transactions handbook, issued in May 1993 by the NHS management executive.

Constituency Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the visits he has made since the start of the current parliamentary Session to the constituencies of other hon. Members without prior warning to these hon. Members for any purpose connected with his departmental responsibilities. [15022]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 March 1995]: None. My office always informs the local Member of Parliament of my forthcoming visit to their constituency once arrangements have been finalised.

Education Expenditure

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much is currently spent on education in each local education authority; and to what extent this has changed in relation to last year's figures in (a) real and (b) percentage terms. [16790]

Mr. Kynoch: The information is set out in the table. The comparable information for 1995–96 is not yet available.

Mr. Portillo: I have today placed copies of the 1995–96 Employment Service annual performance agreement in the Library. The new targets will require the ES to build on this year's extremely good performance and will challenge it to improve its effectiveness in the coming year. I have set a demanding target of placing a record 1.9 million unemployed people in jobs in the 12 months from April. Related targets for placing long-term claimants and people with disabilities will also call for even higher levels of achievement.

Civil Service (Equality of Opportunity)

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress towards achieving equality of opportunity for women staff in the civil service. [17803]

Mr. David Hunt: Considerable progress has been made since the first programme for action to achieve equality of opportunity for women in the civil service was launched in 1984. Women now represent 51.3 per cent. of staff in the non-industrial home civil service compared with 47.7 per cent. in 1984. Women's participation is also increasing in the management grades, with almost 10 per cent. at grades 1 to 3 compared with under 5 per cent. 10 years ago. Nearly half of executive officer level posts—the first step in the management rung—are now held by women. Indeed, a huge range of complex jobs is being carried out by ambitious, committed women in all grades up to the very top.

A report on the progress made since 1984 towards achieving equality of opportunity for women in the civil service was published yesterday. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Nick Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Court Service is to be established as an executive agency. [18008]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Further to my answer of 27 May 1993 to my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen), Official Report, 27 May 1993, column 657, I am please to confirm that the Lord Chancellor will establish the Court Service as an executive agency on 3 April 1995. Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price; [16644]

(2) what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16645]

Mr. Sackville: Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. The five reports to date of the Department of Health and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys have been published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which has borne the main printing and publication costs with the aim of recovering these from the sales revenue.

The table shows the additional costs incurred by the Department of Health, in relation to the associated artwork.

Year	Artwork costs of Departmental Report (£–in 1994–95 prices)
1991	852
1992	1,541
1993	1,081
1994	1,132
1995	1,969

Some 3,150 copies of the 1995 departmental report, Cm 2812, have been printed and published.

Copies have been laid before Parliament and circulated to regional and district health authorities, family health services authorities, national health service trusts, social services departments, and members of the press.

HMSO has produced just over 1,300 further copies at a price of £18.40 net; sales of these are a matter for it.

Special Needs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to implement facilities for orthoptists to deal with special needs children in conjunction with education authorities. [16594]

Mr. Bowis: The Education Act 1993 introduced a duty on health authorities and national health service trusts to co-operate with local education authorities in the assessment of children with special educational needs. A code of practice issued under the Act emphasises the need for external consultation when children are suspected of having visual difficulties and there are well-established arrangements within child health services for referral to orthoptists and, where necessary, ophthalmologists.

Malaria

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when malaria protection for travellers ceased to be available under the national health service. [16239]

Mr. Sackville: Advice on the precautions which should be taken when travelling to a malarious area continues to be available under the national health service. The regulations—SI 1995/80—giving general practitioners the power to charge for drugs for malaria prophylaxis, and thus ending NHS provision of anti-malarial drugs for travellers, came into effect on 6 February. Patients who have contracted illnesses requiring the same drug therapy, such as malaria or rheumatoid arthritis, will continue to receive these drugs on the NHS.

NHS Purchasing

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by the NHS on purchasing care from non-NHS bodies in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [16888]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 9 December 1994, column 401. This information was not available centrally prior to 1991–92.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the child care or nursery facilities within her Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15228]

Mr. Sackville: The Department provides the following childcare facilities for its staff: 43 nursery places; holiday playschemes each half term and major school holidays; a child care co-ordinator to provide Leeds-based staff with advice on local child care facilities and a subscription to "Childcare Solutions", an information service on child care facilities available nationally. Except for nursery places, records of usage of child care facilities are not kept by grade and gender. The table shows the current allocation of nursery places by grade and gender.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of hospitals in England by region is as shown in the table.

This information was not available centrally for previous years.

Accident and Emergency Treatments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been (a) the percentage change of accident and emergency treatments and (b) the total number for each region in each of the last three years. [17082]

Mr. Sackville: The information on activity in accident and emergency departments is for new attendances and total attendances. Regional information for each of the last three years is published in table 8 of "Outpatients and Ward attenders, England, Financial Year 1993–94", copies of which are available in the Library.

Publicity

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 742, what was the total expenditure on all forms of publicity by her Department and its agencies for (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94. [17245]

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on publicity for 1992–93 and 1993–94 is as follows:

Year	£ million
1992–93	19.053
1993–94	19.147

EDUCATION

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the child care or nursery facilities within her Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15243]

Mr. Forth: London based staff are able to use the Westminster holiday play scheme, which is organised by the Office of Public Service and Science. The cost of places is shared equally by parents and the Department.

Darlington-based staff have access to a holiday play scheme which was set up at the instigation of the Department for Education. Places are shared with civil servants working in the Darlington area.

The table provides a separate breakdown of usage of the holiday play schemes in London and Darlington for (a) grade and (b) gender.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average number of days worked per week by the chairmen of each non-departmental public body sponsored by her Department. [17353]

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is given in the following table:

[2] These chairmen are unpaid. The others are either paid or receive an honorarium.

[3] The President of the SEN tribunal is appointed by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

[4] The main body of work carried out by the commissioners ended in 1993–94. The chairman will work on an ad hoc basis until the residual work is completed.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the total number of staff employed by all non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department, including the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and Ofsted, for each year since 1987; [17249]

(2) if she will list the names and most recent salaries and other emoluments of the chief executives and chairmen of the (a) National Youth Agency, (b) National Council for Vocational Qualifications, (c) National Council for Education Technology, (d) Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research, (e) Education Assets Board, (f) School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, (g) teaching as a career unit, (h) Further Education Funding Council, (i) Higher Education Funding Council for England, (j) Funding Agency for Schools, (k) Teacher Training Agency and (i) Ofsted; [17247]

(3) if she will give the total expenditure on the salaries and other emoluments of the chief executives and the chairmen of all non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department, including the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and Ofsted, for each year since 1987. [17250]

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible with the information requested.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the total running costs of all non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department including the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and Ofsted for each year since 1987. [17248]

Mr. Boswell: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

I will write to the hon. Member with information on running costs of the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by this Department as soon as possible.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on future funding for grant-maintained schools. [17984]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am pleased to announce that the Government propose to introduce legislation amending the Education Act 1993 to allow grant-maintained schools to borrow from sources other than the Funding Agency for Schools. This measure opens the way for increased business investment in schools in accordance with the Government's private finance initiative. Local education authorities can already, within limits, borrow commercially and fund their school capital programmes from a mix of capital receipts, revenue monies and borrowing. GM schools are at present almost entirely dependent on central Government grant.

GM schools have expressed keen interest in the possibility of commercial borrowing. They have demonstrated that they are able to manage their own budgets effectively, and it is right that they should be able to benefit from the flexibility that such legislation will bring. Vital schools assets must of course be protected, and the new arrangements will provide for that.

Student Loans

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what factors led to the inclusion in the calculation of grants for mature students of student loans; and if she will make a statement. [17220]

Mr. Boswell: The Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations, which govern the payment of mandatory awards, require that account be taken of a student's income from all sources reduced by income tax and social security contributions. Student loans, however, are specifically disregarded for the purpose of calculating a student's income.

Schools Science Week

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost to her Department of the Schools Science Week. [17187]

Mr. Forth: None. Support for national science week is a matter for the Office of Science and Technology.

Special Needs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans her Department has to increase resourcing for the implementation of the special needs code of practice. [17217]

Mr. Forth: The grant for education support and training programme in England in 1994–95 includes support of £5.6 million to enable schools to develop their policies for special educational needs in the light of the code of practice, and support of £3.7 million to enable LEAs to develop local parent-partnership schemes as recommended in the code of practice. These figures will be increased respectively to £10.2 million and £4 million, in 1995–96.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in the legislation introduced by her Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17040]

Mr. Forth: It is extremely unlikely that the Education Acts contain any reference to an individual hon. Member. There are frequent statutory references to Parliament and to officers of state where functions are conferred upon them. Information on references to Parliament, individual hon. Members or officers of sate could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

References to the House of Commons, as opposed to references to Parliament or "either House of Parliament", are rare.

Teacher Quality (Universities)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many university departments have failed to achieve a satisfactory rating for their teaching quality. [16898]

Mr. Boswell: Under the assessment arrangements operated by the Higher Education Funding Council for England, three university departments have failed to achieve a satisfactory rating for teaching quality out of over 600 assessments and one of those has subsequently been regraded as satisfactory on a follow up visit. over 99 per cent. of assessed provision is graded as satisfactory or better.

Padstow School

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) when she expects to notify the Nottinghamshire county council of her decision on the proposals for Padstow school published on 30 June 1994; and if she will make a statement; [16664]

(2) when she expects to notify the Nottinghamshire county council of her decision on the proposals for Padstow school published on 30 June 1994; and if she will make a statement. [16664]

Mr. Robin Squire: Nottinghamshire county council was notified in a letter dated 23 March that my right hon. Friend proposed to give grant-maintained status to Padstow comprehensive school and, subject to the governor's agreement to certain modifications, to reject the proposal published on 30 June 1994 to cease to maintain the school.

TREASURY

Balance of Trade

13. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Untied Kingdom's balance of trade and its effect on the economy. [15287]

Mr. Aitken: Our balance of payments figures show a current account surplus of £2 billion in the last six months. Exports are growing by 13 per cent. These excellent results have contributed to the UK's gross domestic product growth of around 4 per cent.

Self-assessment for Tax

15. Ms Lynne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has that payment on tax through self-assessment is likely to improve the tax collection rate. [15290]

Sir George Young: Tax collection should be streamlined by moving to a current year basis of assessment and through self-assessment by largely removing the lengthy process of estimated assessments and appeals.

Private Finance Initiative

16. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the contribution which the private finance initiative could make to (a) infrastructure and (b) other projects by the end of the decade. [15291]

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend announced in his Budget speech that contracts leading to £5 billion worth of capital investment are due to be signed in 1995 under the PFI. He announced a further £1 billion of projects in January. Much more will follow as PFI becomes the procurement route of choice.

Tax Increases

17. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the economy of the direct and indirect tax rises announced in the 1994 Budget statement. [15292]

Sir George Young: The tax changes announced in the 1994 Budget statement are expected to have a broadly neutral effect on the economy.

Direct Taxation

18. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect on the economy of changes in the level of direct taxation since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [15293]

Sir George Young: Since 1979, we have reduced the standard rate of income tax from 33p in the pound to 25p in the pound, and a loser rate of 20p in the pound now covers over 5 million people. We have also reduced the main corporation tax rate, from 52 per cent. to 33 per cent. These changes have improved incentives and helped the supply side.

Interest Rates

19. Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect recent changes in interest rates have had on the economy. [15294]

Mr. Nelson: The recent rises in interest rates are intended to ensure inflation remains under control and healthy economy recovery is sustained.

Alcohol Smuggling

20. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress Customs and Excise has made in the past 12 months in tackling cross-border smuggling of alcohol. [15295]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise has continued to take vigorous action against those engaged in cross-border smuggling of alcohol. In the 12 months to 31 January 1995, it made 910 detections related to alcohol with a review value of £1,970,953.

Government Debt

21. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the gross general Government debt as a percentage of gross domestic product for European Union member states in 1994 in descending order. [15296]

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is shown in the following table. This shows that among EU member states, only Luxembourg has a lower debt-GDP ratio than the United Kingdom.

Personal Debt

22. Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present level of personal debt in the United Kingdom. [15297]

Mr. Nelson: At the end of December 1994, total personal sector debt was £523 billion. Personal sector financial assets were £1,645 billion.

Inheritance Tax

23. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of money raised via inheritance tax for the last year for which figures are available. [15298]

Sir George Young: Net receipts of inheritance tax for the year ending March 1995 are provisionally estimated at £1,425 million.

Gaming Machines

24. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the income in 1995–96 from the tax on fruit machines and other game machines in public houses; and if this estimate takes into account the withdrawal of some machines as a result of his proposals. [15299]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 1995–96 forecast for all betting and gaming duties in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" is £1.2 billion. This figure takes account of policy measures announced in the Budget; there are no separate forecasts for the different duties.

Direct Taxation

25. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he had made of the effect on the economy of reductions in the levels of direct taxation since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [15301]

Sir George Young: Since 1979, we have reduced the standard rate of income tax from 33p in the pound to 25p in the pound, and a lower rate of 2p in the pound now covers over 5 million people. We have also reduced the main corporation tax rate, from 52 per cent. to 33 per cent. These changes have improved incentives and helped the supply side.

Small Businesses

26. Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of measures to help small business announced in his November 1993 and 1994 Budgets. [15302]

Mr. Aitken: The Government have taken action to implement all measures aimed at small businesses announced in the November 1993 and 1994 Budgets. Progress on the main measures is as follows:

Enterprise Investment Scheme

The scheme, announced in 1993 and enhanced in the 1994 Budget, has been implemented with effect from 1 January 1994. Early indications are that, on average, companies are raising £80,000 under the EIS and over 50 per cent. of EIS equity issues involve a business angel.

Venture Capital Trusts

The necessary legislation is expected to come into force from 6 April 1995 following Royal Assent.

Relaxation of audit requirements

In August 1994, regulations were introduced exempting most small companies with a turnover of up to £350,000 from the statutory requirement to have their annual accounts audited; companies with a turnover of up to £90,000 may dispense with audit altogether, while the remainder only need a simple report by an independent accountant.

Prompt payment

A package of measures aimed at improving payment performance in the public sector has now been implemented. The Government are also working with the business community through a CBI working group to develop proposals for a British standard for prompt payment; consulting on the implementation of a requirement on public companies to state their payment policies in their directors' reports and reviewing court systems and procedures for debt recovery. These measures are aimed at bringing about a change in business culture and hence, shorter payment times.

Insolvency reform

A further consultation paper will be issued shortly.

Financial Management Certificate

A consultation paper will be issued shortly.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

A consultation document was issued on 10 March.

Small businesses have also benefited from the various tax measures and refinements announced in these budgets and from the continuation of the scheme of transitional relief to ease the impact of the revaluation in business rates.

Feel-good Factor

27. Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of when the feel-good factor will permeate the economy. [15303]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I believe that consumer confidence will strengthen as people come to feel more secure about their jobs and living standards. This will happen progressively through sustained economic growth, which Government policies are achieving.

Privatised Utilities (Executive Pay)

28. Ms. Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new proposal he has with regard to executive remuneration in the privatised utilities. [15304]

Sir George Young: Remuneration is a matter for the companies and their shareholders. The Greenbury committee is reviewing best practice for companies and we will consider the need for any Government measures, if appropriate, in the light of its conclusions.

Funding Programme

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the Government's funding programme for 1995–96. [17875]

Mr. Nelson: Yes. The Government today published the 1995–96 debt management report. This report, the first of an annual series, includes details of the 1995–96 funding programme. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15231]

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury participates in the Westminster holiday playscheme. Until the end of July 1994, my Department also offered subsidised places at a Westminster-based nursery for short-term emergency use. However, due to lack of demand, it gave poor value for money and the contract was not renewed.

The use by Treasury staff of the Department's child care and nursery facilities in 1994 broken down by grade and gender is set out in the following tables.

Economic Recovery

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from employee organisations about the progress of economic recovery. [15459]

Mr. Aitken: Treasury Ministers meet representatives from employee organisations from time to time and discuss a wide range of issues.

EC Budget

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year from 1979 to the present, in 1994 prices (a) the total budget of the European Community, (b) the total cost of the common agricultural policy, (c) Britain's gross contribution to the EC budget, (d) Britain's net contribution to the EC budget and (e) total payments to British farmers from the common agricultural policy. Mr. John Bercow

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conditions have been attached to the employment contract of Mr. John Bercow as special adviser to the Chief Secretary to the Treasury to avoid conflicts of interest with his previous employers and their clients. [15832]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are standard terms and conditions for all special advisers. They are subject in this respect to the same rules of conduct as other civil servants, who must not make use of their official position to further their private interests or those of others. Where a conflict arises, it must be declared.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the precise terms of John Bercow's appointment to be his special adviser; and what pecuniary interests he retains in public relations companies. [15759]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Mr. John Bercow took up appointment as special adviser to the Chief Secretary on 20 March 1995. There are standard terms and conditions for all special advisers, based on those for other civil servants. In particular, the general principles of conduct for civil servants—that is, relating to business interests or shareholdings—apply to special advisers. Mr. Bercow has retained no pecuniary interest in any public relations company.

Mr. Mick Newmarch

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings he, his ministerial colleagues or his officials have had with Mr. Mick Newmarch; and what matters relative to the sale of pensions and other investment products were discussed. [16570]

Mr. Nelson: Ministers and officials have met senior figures from firms in the financial services industry, including Mr. Mick Newmarch, from time to time and discussed a range of issues.

Investments and Pensions (Sales)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about progress by the regulators set up under the Financial Services Act 1986 (a) to compensate people who were mis-sold pensions and other investment products and (b) to deter and punish those found guilty of deliberately mis-selling such products. [16608]

Mr. Nelson: I have received a number of such representations.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has of the number of people mis-sold pensions and other investment products since sections 44 and 47 of the Financial Services Act 1986 came into operation. [16657]

Mr. Nelson: As far as personal pensions transfers and opt-outs are concerned, I refer to the reply I gave on 25 October 1994 to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks), Official Report, column 508. For other investment products, some of the cases compensated by the investors compensation scheme and through the financial services regulators may have involved mis-selling. There are no central records which distinguish such cases.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his officials, and those of the regulators established under the Financial Services Act 1986, are instructed to inform those complaining about mis-selling of pensions and other investment products, that they have redress through the criminal law as well as through the regulatory system. [16568]

Mr. Nelson: No. Although investors can seek redress through the courts, the regulatory system under the Financial Services Act should provide redress in a more timely fashion and with less administrative cost for investors.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) criminal investigations and (b) criminal prosecutions have been brought under section 47 of the Financial Services Act 1986. [16569]

Mr. Nelson: The Department of Trade and Industry, the Serious Fraud Office, the Crown Prosecution Service and the procurators fiscal in Scotland have powers to bring prosecutions under section 47 of the Financial Services Act 1986. Disaggregated figures do not exist showing cases brought by the SFO or the CPS and no cases have been brought by the procurators fiscal. The DTI has mounted criminal investigations in six cases; four cases have been prosecuted resulting in two convictions.

Civil List Audit

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to transfer the audit of the civil list from the Treasury to the Comptroller and Auditor General. [16924]

Mr. Kenneth Clark [holding answer 28 March 1995]: None.

National Debt

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many years it would take before the existing national debt could be fully paid off from the present value of the national fund on the assumption of a compound tax free rate of 8 per cent. per annum. [16803]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 28 March 1995]: Based on the most recent figures for the value of the fund and of the national debt and assuming a compound tax-free interest rate of 8 per cent. it would take approximately 100 years before the existing national debt could be fully paid off under the terms of the trust.

Taxation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the additional annual taxation which will be incurred in the financial year 1995–96 versus the year 1992–93 as a consequence of intervening changes in income tax, tax reliefs, national insurance contributions and duty rates, beyond those due to standard indexation for inflation, for average taxpayers in the pre-tax income bands (a) 0 to £2,500, (b) £2,001 to £5,000, (c) £5,001 to £10,000, (d) £10,001 to £20,000, (e) £20,001 to £30,000, (f) £30,001 to £50,000, (g) £50,001 to £100,000 and (h) over £100,000.

Sir George Young [holding answer 29 March 1995]: The change in annual taxation for the average taxpayer in these income bands will depend on their personal circumstances and spending pattern as well as on their income.

ENVIRONMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 550, whether copies of all letters from Ministers in his Department to local government leaders sent in (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987, (d) 1988, (e) 1989 and (f) before March 1990 have now been destroyed. [15848]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This could be ascertained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 550, if it is the practice of his Department to destroy all general correspondence after five years; and when this policy was introduced. [15849]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department's practice is to destroy files of general correspondence not later than five years after they have been closed. This practice accords with the provisions of the Public Records Act 1958 and with guidance from the Public Record Office.

National Parks (Quarries)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated working life of the quarries in each national park. [15889]

Mr. Atkins: The significant active quarries in the national parks are listed, together with the approximate lifespan provided for under the current permissions. The information shown in the table has been supplied by the national park authorities.

	Threshfield	47

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the lifespan for the disused quarries in each of the national parks. [15888]

Mr. Atkins: There is a very large number of disused quarries in the national parks, but no comprehensive records of their working life.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what carbon dioxide emissions savings he now expects to be delivered by 2000 by (i) the imposition of VAT on fuel, (ii) energy savings in the public sector, (iii) new combined heat and power plant, (iv) new renewable capacity, (v) stricter building regulations and (vi) increases in efficiency of domestic appliances. [15897]

Mr. Atkins: As announced by the Secretary of State on 8 March, VAT on domestic fuel and power is expected to deliver savings of 0.4 million tonnes of carbon—MtC. I continue to expect combined heat and power to deliver savings of 1 MtC and the new building regulations to contribute 0.25 MtC. I expect the contributions of the public sector and renewable energy to be as set out in the UK climate change programme subject to adjustment to reflect the reduced carbon intensity of the electricity displaced. The adjusted figures are 0.8 MtC from the public sector and 0.4 MtC from new renewable energy capacity. The carbon savings expected from improved efficiency of domestic appliances have not been separately quantified at present.

Local Authorities (Restrictive Covenants)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to allow local authorities to be able to disregard restrictive covenants in the provision of certain public facilities and amenities; and if he will make a statement. [16157]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to prevent previous owners from using restrictive covenants to profit from agreeing to allow present freeholders to make a planning application and from the subsequent development; and if he will make a statement. [16156]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply. The Government have received a number of comments on the Law Commission's report on obsolete restrictive covenants, Law Com. No. 201, and it is discussing these with the commission. An announcement will be made when those discussions are concluded.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what organisations and other bodies have made representations to him on the subject of local government reorganisation since his statement of 2 March, Official Report, columns 696–97; and if he will make a statement; [16492]

(2) with whom he has held discussions on the subject of local government reorganisation since his statement of 2 March; and if he will make a statement; [16493]

(3) what discussions he will have with county councils and other district councils in those areas where a hybrid solution is (a) being proposed or (b) may be proposed following the fourth local government review; and if he will make a statement. [16494]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Secretary of State has received a large number of representations from organisations and other bodies since 2 March, but it is not possible to identify all these representations individually except at disproportionate cost. The Secretary of State has met the following organisations specifically to discuss local government reorganisation since his announcement on 2 March: South Hams district council, meeting arranged before the announcement of his decision on Devon; Unison; GMB and the Transport and General Workers Union.

All those district councils mentioned in the announcements on 2 and 21 March as possible cases for further review will be invited to discuss their cases for unitary status. These are: Broxtowe, Gedling and Rushcliffe; Dartford and Gravesham; Exeter; Gloucester; Huntingdonshire; Halton; Norwich; The Wrekin.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which former county boroughs are to be reconsidered under the new review for unitary status; [16487]

(2) which former county boroughs are to regain unitary status following local government reorganisation; [16486]

(3) which areas that were not former county boroughs are to be given unitary status following local government reorganisation; [16488]

(4) which areas that were not former county boroughs are to be considered for unitary status under the new review; [16489]

(5) which former county boroughs will remain as district authorities in a two-tier system following local government reorganisation; [16490]

(6) what is the population of each of (a) the new proposed unitary authorities, (b) those areas under the new review for possible unitary status and (c) those districts remaining within a two-tier system. [16491]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We intend to refer the following districts to the Local Government Commission for a further review—those marked '*' were, or have within their areas, former county boroughs:

Blackburn* 139,528

Apart from those mentioned above, the following districts were, or contain within their areas, former county boroughs and are to remain in a two-tier county:

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what compensation will be available for staff who are obliged to take lower paid jobs as a result of the reorganisation of local government in England and Wales. [18053]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: On 5 December 1994 my Department issued a consultation paper on proposals for compensating local authority staff who may be obliged to accept lower paid jobs as a result of local government reorganisation in England and Wales. Having carefully considered the responses, I intend shortly to bring forward draft regulations setting out a compensation scheme which will allow for staff to have their salary maintained for a transitional three-year period if they are appointed to a new job at a lower salary during the reorganisation period—between the shadow elections and 18 months after reorganisation in England; between shadow elections and 31 March 1997 in Wales.

By avoiding the need for redundancy payments and encouraging councils to restrain existing employees in new jobs, the scheme should benefit staff, employers and the taxpayer.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16614]

Sir Paul Beresford: Departmental annual reports were published for the first time in 1991. The quantifiable costs to the Department, in the five years of publication, of producing and circulating the report have been as follows:

(£ real terms—1993–94 prices using GDP deflators)

1991: 21,724

1992: 45,700

1993: 56,473

1994: 67,774

1995: 51,938

These are the costs of designing and typesetting the report, and of purchasing copies for the Department's own use or for complimentary distribution.

Other costs include the staff time involved in drafting the report, which is not separately recorded, and the costs of printing and publishing, which have been borne by HMSO with the aim of recovering the outlay for sales revenue.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16613]

Sir Paul Beresford: The quantifiable costs to the Department of producing and circulating the 1995 annual report, CM 2807, were £52,977. Of this, £26,747 was for design, indexing and typesetting, and £26,230 was for purchasing copies for the Department's own use and for distribution free to interested bodies, including to Opposition spokesmen, the Environment Select Committee and the English local authorities. Of the 3,350 copies produced, 1,800 were bought by the Department.

Other costs include staff time in drafting the report, which was not separately recorded, and the costs of its printing and publishing, which were borne by HMSO with the aim of recovering the outlay from sales revenue. The cover price of the 1995 report is £18.60.

Council Tax, Gloucestershire

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the level of council tax set by local authorities in Gloucestershire for the financial year 1994–95. [16260]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The level at which an authority sets its council taxes is a matter for councillors to decide in the light of all its authority's circumstances. Only if an authority is designated under the "capping" provisions at section 54 of the Local Government Finance Act 1992 would the Secretary of State take a view on whether an authority's budget requirement is excessive.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his policy on other EU states exporting hazardous waste to the United Kingdom, with particular reference to mercury; what representations he has made in the last three years to other members states that they should treat such waste in their countries; and what measures he proposes to encourage other EU states to pursue a policy of dealing with their own waste material; [16224]

(2) what evaluation he has made of the incentives applying to countries who currently export hazardous waste to (a) become self-sufficient in dealing with hazardous waste and (b) develop suitable technology to effectively treat and render harmless hazardous waste. [16229]

Mr. Atkins: It has been the Government's policy since the 1990 environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", that developed countries should become self-sufficient in disposing of their own waste. The United Kingdom negotiated successfully for the principle of national self-sufficiency in waste disposal to be incorporated into the EC waste shipments regulation—259/93.

The Government have long made clear their intention to implement as far as possible national self-sufficiency in waste disposal. This policy aim is pursued in the draft management plan for imports and exports of waste, which has recently been the subject of public consultation and copies of which are in the Library. In particular, the draft plan proposes banning most imports of waste for disposal, except where the importing competent authority is satisfied that the exporting country does not have, and cannot reasonably acquire, the facilities to dispose itself of the wastes in an environmentally sound manner.

All EC member states are required to implement Council directive 75/442/EEC, as amended, on waste. This requires member states to take appropriate measures to establish an adequate network of disposal installations, to enable the Community as a whole to become self-sufficient in waste disposal and the member states to move towards that aim individually.

The UK and other EU states became parties to the Basel convention in 1994. Parties are under the general obligation to minimize the generation and transboundary movement of hazardous wastes, and to ensure the provision of adequate disposal facilities within their territory.

Lancashire Local Authorities

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the budget implications for Lancashire county council and the other Lancashire district councils for 1995–96 in respect of both income and expenditure; if Blackburn and Blackpool are to be given unitary status; and if he will make a statement. [16493]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Our assessments of the need to spend and of the income from business rates and council taxes for Lancashire authorities for 1995–96 are as follows:

£ million

	Standard spending assessment	Business rate income	Council tax income
Lancashire	845.369	258.272	185.846
Blackburn	17.221	4.665	2.931
Blackpool	18.596	5.138	3.476
Burnley	10.009	3.059	2.047
Chorley	8.192	3.248	2.403
Fylde	6.216	2.465	2.153
Hyndburn	7.600	2.642	1.795
Lancaster	14.236	4.469	3.161
Pendle	8.323	2.872	1.989
Preston	15.662	4.421	2.960
Ribble Valley	4.051	1.731	1.539
Rossendale	5.824	2.201	1.579
South Ribble	7.921	3.461	2.584
West Lancashire	10.004	3.676	2.742
Wyre	9.388	3.476	2.838

The Secretary of State has accepted the recommendations of the Local Government Commission that the existing two-tier system of local government for Lancashire should be retained. However, he intends to invite the commission to carry out further reviews of a small number of individual districts, including Blackburn and Blackpool.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16219]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department issued guidance to its non-departmental public bodies in August 1990 on publicity and advertising. This included guidelines on the use of public relations consultants and I am placing a copy of this guidance in the House of Commons Library.

General guidance for public bodies is contained in the Government publicity and advertising conventions, set out in annexes 1 and 2 to the National Audit Office report, "Publicity Services for Government Departments", House of Commons paper, 1 December 1989.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what debt the Property Services Agency left upon its disbandment; how much of that was owed to private companies; how much of that debt is still owed; if he will list the companies that have made representations to Her Majesty's Government asking to be paid; how much each one is currently owed; when, and by whom, he expects the debts to be fully paid off; and if he will make a statement. [16518]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Property Services Agency ceased to exist on 31 March 1990, when its responsibilities were split between its successor organisations: PSA Services and Property Holdings. The operating activities of PSA Services were privatised or closed down over the period December 1992 to October 1993 and since then the remaining staff in PSA Services have been responsible for completing residual activities, including the personnel management of staff seconded to the privatised companies. Liability to pay works contractors generally transferred to client departments in the period prior to the sale of the PSAS businesses. Liability for outstanding payments to suppliers of services at the point of sale generally passed to the purchasers of the PSA Services businesses, while PSA Services retained liability for only a limited number of completed projects which were not sold. These cases are progressively being resolved. I would be happy to look into any specific problem that is brought to my attention.

Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions the Government are taking to support the CITES enforcement resolution; what financial, training and technical support the Government are giving to CITES enforcement measures; and if he will make a statement. [16939]

Sir Paul Beresford: We are actively implementing the enforcement resolution which was adopted by last November's CITES conference following a United Kingdom initiative. My Department has allocated £240,000 to fund the secondment of an officer from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to the CITES secretariat to strengthen its enforcement capacity. We will also participate in a new EC enforcement working group to improve CITES implementation in the Community. At home, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise plans further increase in its specialist CITES team. Last month, police visits to oriental pharmacies in London, Birmingham and Manchester resulted in the seizure of large numbers of products suspected of containing parts of endangered species like tigers and rhinos. Code-named "Charm", the operation was planned with the assistance of my Department.

Limestone

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the use of high-quality limestone for roadstone is in accordance with his policy objectives as set out in "This Common Inheritance"; [16895]

(2) if he will take powers to specify appropriate end uses for very high-quality limestones quarried in the national parks. [16894]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government's objectives with regard to sustainable development of minerals resources is set out in minerals planning guidance note 6 issued in April last year. This gives the Government's aim that the best use should be made of the total aggregates resource by minimising waste, avoiding the use of higher quality materials where lower quality material would suffice, and encouraging the use of recycled and secondary materials in place of primary materials where possible. The Department aims to achieve these objectives by various means set out in MPG6, including undertaking research with the Department of Transport into the scope for further use of recycled materials in road construction and maintenance, and the setting up of an advisory service to inform and encourage the construction industry on the opportunities for use of alternative materials. It is not proposed to take powers to specify the end use of high-quality limestone since this would be unenforceable.

New Towns

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contributions have been made by the Commission for the New Towns towards promotional activities in each local authority covered by a former new town development corporation since 1993–94. [16786]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information for 1993–94 is as follows:

Local authority area	Contribution (£'000)
Halton BC	159
Milton Keynes BC	1,178
Peterborough CC	40
Warrington BC	75
West Lancashire DC	25

No comparable figures are available for 1994–95 as 1993–94 was the last year of operation of the agreement under which the Commission for the New Towns made annual contributions to agencies set up to promote individual towns.

Council Housing

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of council tenancies, the total amount of housing revenue account subsidy payable to that authority, and the total housing benefit element within the housing revenue account for each local authority in England, for each year since 1990–91. [17043]

Mr. Curry: I have placed a copy of the information requested by the hon. Member in the Library.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he will make a statement on the conclusions of the consultation on the case for licensing houses in multiple occupation; and what legislation he proposes to introduce; [17027]

(2) how many responses his Department has received in respect of the consultation on the case for licensing houses in multiple occupation; and what proportion of these responses favoured the introduction of a national licensing scheme. [17028]

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones), to the hon. Members for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Jones) and for Sheffield Heeley (Mr. Michie) on 20 March 1995, Official Report, columns 57-58.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17034]

Sir Paul Beresford: An analysis of all legislation introduced by the Department and its predecessors since 1965 for any reference to the type requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of State, and occasional general references are made to persons who are members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Lightbulbs

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many energy-efficient lightbulbs were subsidised by the Energy Saving Trust during the Little Bill-Large Savings campaign in October and November 1994. [17216]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This is a matter for the Energy Saving Trust and the regional electricity companies. However, I understand that the subsidised sales figures for electronic compact fluorescent lamps during last year's promotion were 981,000. In addition the publicity generated by the promotional campaign resulted in additional sales of 500,000 electro-magnetic CFLs, which were not subsidised.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15242]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department provides 10 workplace nursery places in Westminster; three places at an inter-departmental nursery in Bristol and 12 places at the Building Research Establishment agency's own nursery in Garston. Some of these places are shared by staff who work part time. The breakdown of current nursery users by grade and gender is as follows:

In addition to a holiday play scheme run by the Building Research Establishment, my Department supports interdepartmental holiday playschemes in Westminster, Birmingham, Bristol and Bedford. These schemes are open to the children of all staff. The take-up—by gender and grade of parent users—varies between location and holiday period. Available information on parents who have used the schemes in 1994–95 is as follows:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17029]

Mr. Baldry: An analysis of all legislation introduced by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration and their predecessors since 1965 for any references to hon. Members could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, it would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an hon. Member though references are customarily made to offices of state..

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender.

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO has 10 places for the under-fives at nurseries in London and 22 places in a workplace nursery for staff working at Hanslope Park, Milton Keynes.

The places are allocated as follows:

Grade	Male	Female
DS5/HCS6	1	1
DS6/SEO	2	-
DS7/HEO	4	2
DS9/EO	4	5
DS10/AO	–	4

Note:

Figures include four children with both parents employed by the FCO.

The FCO provides holiday playschemes in London and at ODA sites in East Kilbride and at NRI Chatham. Over the last 12 months play scheme places have been used by staff in the following grades:

Grade	Male	Female
DS4/HCS5	2	—
DS5S/HCS6	2	—
DS5/HCS7	6	1
DS6/SEO	4	2
DS7/HEO	8	7

Former Prisoners of War

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 779, regarding former British prisoners of war of Japan, what alternatives for compensation to direct payments from the Japanese Government are being discussed. [15813]

Mr. Goodlad: We have been in touch with the Japanese Government about the implementation in the UK of the "Peace, Friendship, and Exchange Initiative", as well as exploring what other possibilities may exist.

Colombia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received that British nationals are operating as mercenaries in Colombia. [16749]

Mr. David Davis: There were allegations in 1990 that a British citizen had renewed an association with drug traffickers in Colombia. We strongly condemn such alleged activities. There have been no allegations since 1990. We remain in close contact with the Colombian authorities about all security issues of mutual interest.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the murder of trade union activists in Colombia between August 1992 and August 1993. [16750]

Mr. David Davis: I have seen various reports on these lines. The Colombian authorities are fully aware of the concern felt in Britain about human rights in Colombia.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support his Department gives to encourage the activities of trade unions in Colombia. [16751]

Mr. David Davis: None. The embassy in Bogota maintains contact with a wide range of organisations in Colombia, including unions.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support his Department gives to police forces in Colombia; and how much the support has cost in each year since 1990. [16452]

Mr. David Davis: Our aid includes non-lethal equipment, technical expertise and training to the Colombian law enforcement agencies combating the drugs trade.

The figures are:

1990: £3.5 million
1991: £2 million
1992: £432,000
1993: £286,000
1994: £271,000

Publicity

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of total departmental expenditure on publicity and advertising for 1994–95. [17191]

Mr. Goodlad: Total estimated expenditure on promotional material and recruitment advertising in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, diplomatic wing and Overseas Development Administration, for 1994–95 is £2,417,000.

Turkey

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the use by Turkish security forces of military equipment with special reference to helicopters and armoured vehicles, to commit human rights violations; and if he will make a statement. [17145]

Mr. David Davis: None. Proposed United Kingdom arms sales to Turkey, as to other countries, are considered on a case-by-case basis and are subject to stringent licensing procedures. Before a license is granted, a wide range of factors are taken into account, including an assessment of the recipient country's human rights records and of the use to which the equipment will be put. We do not grant licences for the sale of equipment which we believe is likely to be used for internal repression.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Pension Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the Senior Salaries Review Body report on parliamentary pensions is to be published; when the Government Actuary's valuation report on the parliamentary contributory pensions fund will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [17800]

Mr. Newton: In my letter of 29 September, I invited the Senior Salaries Review Body to undertake a review of the parliamentary pension scheme to assess whether the scheme was still in line with good current practice. This was the first of the regular reviews resulting from the review body's recommendation, in 1991, that it should review the scheme regularly at the time of the Government Actuary's triennial valuations of the parliamentary contributory pension fund.

The SSRB report has been published today, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available in the Vote Office. I am most grateful to the review body for its thoughtful and thorough report.

The SSRB has recommended that:

i) the existing accrual rate of fiftieths should apply to all service for currently sitting MPs in respect of their future pension entitlement, with appropriate augmentation for those who have been making up the shortfall voluntarily;

ii) the death in service gratuity should be increased to three times the Member's annual salary;

iii) the scheme should allow Members to nominate individuals, institutions and trusts to receive the death in service gratuity;

iv) a formal dispute resolution procedure should be established involving three stages, with questions directed first to the fund secretary, secondly to the trustees themselves and, if still unresolved, referred to an independent expert such as the occupational pensions advisory service or the pensions ombudsman.

The Government propose to accept all these recommendations, except the backdating of the fast rate of accrual introduced in 1983. A retrospective change of the kind suggested would not be justified.

The Government Actuary's valuation report on the PCPF is today being laid before the House in accordance with section 3 of the Parliamentary and Other Pensions Act 1987.

Since the previous valuation in 1990, the fund has grown by about 38 per cent.: the market value at the valuation date was just over £150 million. Income from investments over the period has been less favourable than assumed in 1991, and the level of pensions increases has been slightly higher, although these are now decreasing.

The overall financial position shows little change from 1990. The current valuation discloses a small excess of assets over liabilities of £1.1 million—which is less than one per cent. of the value of the fund—after taking account of the implementation of the benefit improvements and reductions in contributions agreed at the time of the last report.

Taking account of the improvement in the lump sum death in service benefit, the assessed long-run total cost of the pension benefits under the scheme is now 24 per cent. of salary, compared with 23.5 per cent. at the 1990 valuation. The Member contribution was reduced in 1990 to 6 per cent., as a result of an SSRB recommendation. Under section 3 of the 1987 Act, the Exchequer pays the balance of costs, as recommended by the Government Actuary. Without the increase in benefits, the Exchequer contribution would have remained at its level following the 1990 valuation, of 6.8 per cent. of pay, for a further six-month period. Taking account of the benefit improvements recommended by the SSRB in the report published today, the actuary recommends that the Exchequer contribution from April should be 7.6 per cent. until September 2000. Assuming future experience is in line with the assumptions made for this valuation, the Exchequer contribution can then be expected to increase to 18 per cent.

As required by section 2 of the 1987 Act, I shall consult about the changes to the scheme with the trustees of the scheme and other interested parties. As is customary, the Government will hold a debate on an amendable motion to give the House a chance to consider both reports, as well as the draft regulations implementing the SSRB recommendations.

Consultants

Mr. Fisher: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 50, if he will publish the name of (a) the architect, (b) the designer employed on a consultancy basis by the House of Commons Commission (c) the annual cost of each consultancy and (d) the annual amount of time for which each consultant is contracted. [16185]

Mr. Beith: This is a matter for the Director of Works and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Fire Fighters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if he will make a statement on the provision of fire fighters to tackle a fire in the Palace of Westminster; what changes have been made to the staff complement in each of the last three years; and what particular provisions apply to deal with the special nature of the building. [16519]

Mr. Beith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 8 March 1995, Official Report, column 218. As a result of the recent review of the fire section by the staff inspector in conjunction with the staff adviser of the House of Lords a complement of one principal fire officer, four senior fire officers and 24 fire officers has been agreed. This will be subject to review in two years' time. Particular provisions to minimise the fire risk within the Palace of Westminster are specified in the fire strategy for the Palace of Westminster and parliamentary outbuildings which was approved by the relevant Committees of both Houses in 1993. I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to write to the hon. Member with further details.

Sittings of the House

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what assessment he has made of the effects of the implementation of the procedural reforms in respect of the sittings of the House on attendance in the House.

Mr. Newton: The reforms to which the hon. Member refers will be reviewed and assessed towards the end of the experiment.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the outside consultancy practice assisting the inquiry into the links between the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts and Welsh Fourth Channel Authority S4C; what remit they have been given; on what date the inquiry started; when it is anticipated to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [17299]

Mr. Dorrell: As I told the hon. Member on 27 February, Official Report, column 680, my Department has commissioned a report from a senior Treasury official, Mr. John Beastall. The terms of reference of the review are:

> To review the circumstances of the applications for matching funding under the business sponsorship incentive scheme made by Pengwyn Pinc and certain other Welsh bodies. In particular, the review will consider:
> (a) the reports already produced by the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts and the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority;
> (b) the financial and other relationships between S4C and the bodies which applied to BSIS; between S4C and Teledwyr Annibynnol Cymru; and between S4C and organisations which applied to them or to TAC for sponsorship;
> (c) the understanding, in S4C, TAC and the bodies which applied to BSIS, of rules for applying to BSIS, including any guidance and procedures they may have circulated;
>
> (d) the understanding of BSIS rules within ABSA and the information and advice that ABSA and its staff provided to S4C and the other bodies involved about the rules and operation of BSIS;
>
> (e) the criteria adopted by S4C, TAC and the bodies which applied to BSIS for supporting an application for sponsorship; and
> (f) the action that was taken by S4C and ABSA in response to the discovery of irregularities in applications and in the operation of their internal procedures.
> The report will make recommendations about action to be taken.

Mr. Beastall commenced his review on 20 February and expects to deliver his report to my Department shortly after Easter.

Telephone Conversations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to introduce legislation which fill the gaps which exist in relation to the protection of private telephone conversations, as indicated on 14 January 1993, Official Report, column 1068; and if he will make a statement. [17215]

Mr. Dorrell: The Government will announce their conclusions, on this as on other matters, in their response to the National Heritage Committee's report on privacy and media intrusion. We will publish this response when we have completed consideration of the legal issues surrounding the proposed criminal and civil remedies.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15224]

Mr. Dorrell: The provision of child care facilities within my Department is two-fold: one nursery place for a child aged between six months and five years at the Stepping Stones nursery based at Napier Hall, Pimlico. A female senior information officer in this Department used the nursery between November 1993 and August 1994. Since that date, no DNH member of staff has expressed an interest in securing a place at the nursery. My Department has therefore offered the place to the Department of the Environment on a temporary basis.

DNH staff can also use places at the Westminster holiday playscheme which caters for children aged between five and 12 years old and which operates during all the main school holidays. The playscheme is currently used by two DNH female members of staff at grade 7 level.

Royal Palaces

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total cost to his Department of the maintenance and running costs of the occupied and unoccupied royal palaces in 1993–94. [16921]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 March 1995]: The cost to my Department in 1993–94 of maintaining and running the occupied royal palaces was £19.8 million. The cost for the unoccupied royal palaces was £6.7 million.

Royal Household Fuel Bills

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the fuel bills paid by his Department on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen. [16922]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 March 1995]: My Department pays for Her Majesty the Queen's fuel bills incurred for official purposes through its grant-in-aid payment to the royal household. The 1993–94 fuel bill was £826,000 and included the cost of electricity, gas, oil, coal and other fuels.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department, includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15575]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 27 March 1995]: This is already a high priority for me and my officials.

DEFENCE

Joint Service Command and Staff College

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the location of the proposed Joint Service Command and Staff college. [18009]

Mr. Soames: During the "Front Line First" consultation process on the establishment of a Joint Service Command and Staff college, my Department received responses from a number of individuals and organisations to our proposals.

All these responses have received the most careful and sympathetic scrutiny, and I have thoroughly reviewed the costings associated with our proposal. Although there was general support for the proposal to establish a Joint Service Command and Staff college, there have been understandable local concerns, especially in Greenwich. However, no significant arguments have emerged, nor have any new suggestions been made which have caused us to alter our original proposals. The costings continue to demonstrate that Camberley is the most cost effective option.

I can therefore confirm that we shall establish the Joint Service Command and Staff college at Camberley, and that we plan to open it and close the colleges at Bracknell and Greenwich in late 1997. We shall not develop our plans along the lines indicated in the consultative document. The Bracknell site will be considered for disposal.

With regard to the future of Greenwich, I reaffirm the Government's commitment to finding suitable occupants for this most important and historic site. Our work on this continues. In terms of defence candidates, we have concluded that a restructured Defence school of languages would be one suitable occupant. This would generate at least the same level of occupancy as the two staff colleges currently at Greenwich. The nature of this establishment is such that, unlike the Joint Services Command and Staff college, it would be able to move in with only very minor changes to the fabric of the buildings and at a capital cost of only some £6,000,000.

We have also concluded that we should not continue to pursue the Tri-Service Chaplaincy school as an option for Greenwich. Work on an appropriate location for this school will continue, and I hope shortly to make an announcement.

In addition to the potential defence candidates, interest in the Royal Naval college has been shown by organisations outside the Ministry of Defence, including the university of Greenwich and the National Maritime museum. We do not intend to reach any firm conclusions on the future of the Royal Naval college, Greenwich at this stage, but will shortly be seeking expressions of interest in the site from organisations able to propose uses sympathetic to the character of the buildings.

In considering the options, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will have very much in mind his role as sole trustee of Greenwich hospital, and also the imaginative proposals for Greenwich park, including the Royal Naval college, by Dame Jennifer Jenkins in her report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage. I hope to be in a position to announce firm proposals to the House for the future of the Royal Naval college by the end of the year.

Naval Recruiting and Training Agency

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future status of the Royal Navy's Flag Officer Training and Recruiting organisation. [18011]

Mr. Soames: The Flag Officer Training and Recruiting organisation will be launched as a defence agency of the Ministry of Defence on 1 April 1995, and will be called the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency.

The NRTA's owner will be the Second Sea Lord and Commander-in-Chief Naval Home Command. It will carry out its training activities at a number of training schools based in naval establishments in the south of England and operate recruiting centres in all regions of the UK. The chief executive's headquarters is collocated with that of the Second Sea Lord and Commander-in-Chief Naval Home Command with HM naval base, Portsmouth.

The agency's primary role is to recruit to the Royal Navy and Royal Marines and to train and develop personnel, both service and civilian, for their individual tasks in the naval service, as and when appropriate throughout their subsequent careers.

As the first chief executive of the new agency, Rear Admiral J. P. Clarke will be offered new opportunities to build on the current organisation's professional expertise and high performance standards. In maintaining the NRTA's contribution to front-line capability, the chief executive will actively seek to improve efficiency and value for money of his organisation.

The chief executive has been set the following key targets for the financial year 1995–96:

1. To achieve 90 per cent. of deliveries of categories of personnel to the trained strength from initial training within accepted variances.
2. To achieve wastage rates for new entry officers, apprentices and ratings no greater than 25 per cent., 30 per cent. and 20 per cent. respectively.
3. By 31 March 1996, to complete the process of establishing optimum pipeline times for all categories of initial training, and determine baseline figures for overruns against which future performance can be measured.
4. To maintain a success rate in excess of 95 per cent. in career and pre-joining training.
5. By 31 March 1996, to agree with NRTA's key customers a positive feedback system and criteria for the measurement of the extent to which personnel trained by NRTA satisfy the customers' requirements.

Army Districts

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to restructure the Army districts. [18012]

Mr. Soames: Following the "Front Line First" announcement, proposals to restructure the Army districts were explained in a consultative document issued on 19 December 1994. The most significant effect of the reorganisation is the splitting of the current southern district leaving the existing headquarters at Aldershot commanding only units based in the south-east, and creating a new headquarters at Bulford, to be known as HQ3 (UK) Division, to have administrative and budgetary responsibilities for all Army units in the south-west. There will be changes to the subordinate brigade headquarters structure and adjustments to the boundaries of the current districts. To emphasise the operational aspects of their role, and to reflect that administrative responsibility for Army units in the UK will no longer be on a purely geographical basis, the headquarters at York, Bulford, Aldershot and Shrewsbury will be known as 2, 3 (UK), 4 and 5 Division respectively. No structural changes are planned for Scotland or London district.

In total, 17 responses to the consultative document were received from one MP, trade unions and local authorities, all of which have been given careful and sympathetic consideration. Understandable concerns were expressed about the effects on local employment where job losses will occur, and every effort will of course be made to redeploy staff where possible to alternative locations.

As part of the restructuring programme I am pleased to be able to highlight an increase of 100 jobs in the south-west; this was warmly welcomed by the local communities. The vast majority of the jobs will be filled by local recruitment and will boost the employment opportunities in the area.

I can therefore confirm that the restructuring will take effect from 1 April 1995. I am confident that these changes will create a more efficient and economic structure which will enhance operational and administrative effectiveness.

We will continue to consult with staff and trade unions about the implementation of this restructuring exercise.

Military Schools

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the triennial review of the Duke of York's Royal Military School and Queen Victoria School defence agencies. [18013]

Mr. Soames: A review of the agency status of the Duke of York's Royal Military School and Queen Victoria School is now due and will commence shortly. As next steps agencies, the performance of both schools will be evaluated and their activities will be subjected to the normal "prior options" tests.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in the work of these agencies would be welcome and should be sent by 12 May to:

Mr. W. A. Perry
Command Secretary (Adjutant General)
Ministry of Defence
Headquarters Adjutant General
(Personal and Training Command)
Trenchard Lines

Army Industrial Training Organisation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for the Army's individual training organisation. [18014]

Mr. Soames: As originally announced to the House by the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 2 November 1993, Official Report, column 124, the Army's individual training organisation has been included in the Department's list of candidate agencies. A "Prior Options" study of Army individual training as a whole is being undertaken to determine whether agency status would be appropriate. Any comments that interested parties may wish to contribute would be welcome and should be sent, by no later than 12 May to:

Mr. W. A. Perry
Command Secretary (Adjutant General)
Headquarters Adjutant General (Personnel and Training)

Reserve Forces Bill

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the Reserve Forces Bill. [17171]

Mr. Soames: We are today publishing the draft Reserve Forces Bill, copies of which are available from the Vote Office. Outside the House, the document is being distributed widely to reserve units, employers and others, and is available on request from the Ministry of Defence.

The Bill is an important one. It brings legislation on reserves up to date, to take account of changes in both the security environment and British society since the last substantial revision in 1966. The Bill principally provides:

(a) A new power of call-out for peacekeeping, humanitarian and disaster relief operations;

(b) Two new categories of reserve:

—the high readiness reserve: individuals with skills in short supply who, voluntarily and with the consent of their employer, accept a greater call-out liability; and

—the sponsored reserve, which will permit us to let more support activities to contract knowing that the reserve element allows the task to be continued in an operational environment by uniformed personnel.

(c) A new opportunity to enable reservists to undertake tasks other than training in peace time;

(d) Three new safeguards:

—for individuals, powers for MOD to make payments to reservists in cases where their military pay when called out is less than their civilian pay;

—for employers, powers for MOD to make payments whenever a reservist who is also an employee is called out;

—for both, new, formal, rights to seek exemption from and deferral of call-out or recall, exercisable by employers or reservists themselves.

All this work is set within a comprehensive tri-service legal framework for the reserves, which will greatly simplify their use in the future.

Particular attention has been given to the tripartite relationship between the Ministry of Defence, the reservist, and his or her employer. Full account has been taken of the comments received following the publication of a consultation document in October 1993, and I believe the Bill will meet with widespread acceptance from those affected by it.

The Bill's publication in draft forms part of the Government's commitment to improving the quality of legislation brought before Parliament, and I look forward to receiving many constructive comments. The consultation period lasts until 15 June.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Teignbridge of 20 March, Official Report, column 73, if he will give such statistics as have been asked for on water and sewerage costs which can be provided without disproportionate cost. [15999]

Mr. Freeman: Statistics can be provided for most expenditure on water and sewerage on class I, votes 1 and 2 for the years 1992–93 to 1994–95. Expenditure by the procurement executive on class I, vote 3 is not separately distinguishable from other utility costs.

The figures are:

1992–93: £55 million
1993–94: £52 million
1994–95: £49 million (expenditure until 27 March 1995).

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer 20 March, Official Report, column 73, if he will define 'disproportionate' cost. [15998]

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr Burns) on 18 February 1993, Official Report, column 307

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received of facsimile messages sent from the Defence Research Agency at Portsdown, Portsmouth, being received by private telephone subscribers due to incorrect dialling and if he will make a statement. [15898]

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for such matters rest with the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Peter Griffiths, dated 30 March 1995:

In today's written answer the Minister for State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question concerning the misdirecting of Facsimile messages from the Defence Research Agency (DRA) site at Portsdown, Hampshire.

I can confirm that Mr. Wallis of Waterlooville has received a number of facsimile messages from DRA offices at Portsdown which should, in fact,have gone to other DRA offices at Farnborough. This has occurred as a result of a change to the dialling code used by DRA staff to obtain a British Telecom telephone line and the fact that Mr Wallis' facsimile number was then very similar to a small number of our Farnborough numbers.

The two main issues of concern in this matter are firstly, the inconvenience and irritation caused to Mr. Wallis. A member of DRA security staff has spoken to him, explained how the error has occurred, and apologise for the inconvenience that he has clearly been caused.

I am also concerned about any possible breach of national security. Standing DRA security instructions covering the use of the facsimile machines involved here does not permit the transmission of confidential material. We have no evidence to suggest that these rules have been breeched. The location of the machines in question also suggests that only messages of an administrative nature have been misdirected. We do not therefore believe there has been and serious lapse of security.

In the normal course of events we would overcome the problem of misdirection by ensuring that staff take more care and by changing all of our facsimile numbers involved. In this case, however, the change to the national telephone dialling codes, on 16 April 1995 should resolve this particular problem. We have discussed this with Mr. Wallis and he is content to wait until the codes change. I have of course taken steps to ensure that all staff take more care when using facsimile machines and are fully aware of their security obligations.

Military Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what proportion of military exports the assistance given by the Defence Export Services Organisation is a crucial factor. [16178]

Mr. Freeman: DESO assistance to industry ranges from the crucial, in such sales as the Government-to-Government arrangements with Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, to a variety of small, but in some cases very significant, instances of advice and support. It is difficult to quantify this in terms of a proportion but I believe that UK defence industries would rate DESO assistance generally as an important factor in their achievement of export orders, which in 1993 were worth £7 billion.

United Nations Register of Conventional Arms

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will press for the inclusion of fuel-air explosives in the United Nations register of conventional arms; [15873]

(2) if he will press for the inclusion of airborne early warning and reconnaissance aircraft in the United Nations register of conventional arms; [15875]

(3) if he will press for the inclusion of land mines in the United Nations register of conventional arms; [15871]

(4) if he will press for the inclusion of small arms in the United Nations register of conventional arms; [15872]

(5) if he will press for the inclusion of submersibles in the United Nations register of conventional arms. [15874]

Mr. Soames: The seven current categories of equipment subject to reporting in the UN register were chosen to reflect the register's aim of identifying excessive and destabilising build-ups of major, conventional offensive weapon systems. An international group of governmental experts met last summer to discuss the operation of the register and ways in which it might be developed. Adding further categories of equipment to the seven already covered by the register was discussed, but there was no consensus for change. A United Nations resolution on transparency in armaments of December 1994 requests the Secretary General, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts to be convened in 1997, to prepare a report on the continuing operation of the register and its further development. In the meantime we shall direct our efforts at ensuring the continued successful operation of the register in its current form.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of battle tanks; [15877]

(2) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusions in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of policies and regulations concerning arms transfers; [15879]

(3) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of military holdings; [15881]

(4) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of warships; [15883]

(5) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusions in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of combat aircraft; [15885]

(6) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of armoured combat vehicles; [15878]

(7) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of procurement through national production; [15880]

(8) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of missiles and missile launchers. [15882]

(9) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of attack helicopters; [15884]

(10) what information has been submitted to the United Nations for inclusion in the United Nations register of conventional arms in respect of large calibre artillery systems. [15886]

Mr. Soames: Copies of the United Kingdom returns to the UN register of conventional arms for 1992 and 1993 have been placed in the Library of the House. Each return includes information on the imports and exports of equipment in the seven categories covered by the register. The seven categories are: battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large calibre artillery systems, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships and missiles and missile launchers. The UK return also includes information on national military holdings and procurement through national production in the seven categories and a statement of procurement and export policies. The UK return for 1994 is due to be submitted to the United Nations by 30 April. A copy of the return will be placed in the Library of the House when it is submitted.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who the British representatives are on the group of experts set up to review the operation of the United Nations register of conventional arms. [15876]

Mr. Soames: An international group of governmental experts met last summer to discuss the operation of the register and ways in which it might be developed. The UK representative on the group was the director of the proliferation and arms control secretariat from the Ministry of Defence. There is no standing group of experts, but it was agreed that a similar group should be formed when the UN next reviews the operation of the register in 1997.

Queen's Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the journeys by the royal family on the Queen's Flight in 1993–94 were (a) in fixed-wing aircraft and (b) abroad. [16512]

Mr. Soames: Of the 968 occasions when the Queen's Flight was used by the royal family during financial year 1993–94, 608 flights were in fixed-wing aircraft and 185 flights were either from or to overseas locations.

Defence Housing Executive

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of severance pay to executives and staff of the Ministry of Defence, Defence Housing Executive. [16240]

Mr. Soames: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tauton (Mr. Nicholson) on 16 March, Official Report, columns 721–23.

Air Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year for the last four years, and the current year to date, the number of two-seat Royal Air Force military jet aircraft that have crashed which resulted in the death of either the pilot or navigator; and what was the date, location and type of aircraft involved in each accident. [16258]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Date	Aircraft	Location
13 January 1991	Tornado GR1	Oman
29 August 1991	Jaguar T2A	Carno, Powys
30 October 1991	Phantom FGR2	Falkland Islands
9 July 1992	Buccaneer S2B	38nm east of RAF Leuchars
30 September 1992	Hawk T1A	RAF Chivenor
8 July 1994	Tornado F3	15nm south of Akrotiri, Cyprus
1 September 1994	Tornado GR1A	Killin, Central Scotland
10 March 1995	Tornado F3	5nm east of Spurn Head

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum rank in the prison service which is approved to request and the minimum rank in the RAF which can approve low-level air passes over prisons; and what provisions exist to protect the local population from noise pollution. [16253]

Mr. Soames: There are no regulations specific to the request for, and approval of, low-level passes over prisons; the circumstances behind the overflights of Stocken prison on 27 September 1994 were unique. I have nothing further to add to my answers of 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 906, 10 January, Official Report, column 105 and 13 February Official Report, col. 545.

Redundancy Terms

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of redundancy of senior service officers; and if he will make a full statement on the details of the redundancy terms over the last five years. [16612]

Mr. Soames: The total cost of redundancy compensation paid to two-star officers and above since the start of the armed forces redundancy programme resulting from "Options for Change" is £606,125.

The terms of the armed forces redundancy scheme have been in place since 1975 and remain largely unchanged. These terms provide for the payment of lump sum compensation, known as the special capital payment, in all cases. The amount of special capital payment is calculated by reference either to each year or part year of the uncompleted portion of career to normal retirement age, or by reference to the number of years paid service given from age 18. In addition to the benefits normally available through the armed forces pension scheme, redundant personnel may qualify for early payment of pension and terminal grant provided they have completed 12 years full-paid service.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16655]

Mr. Soames: Two thousand copies of the Ministry of Defence departmental report, Cm 2801, were printed and published this year on 2 March. In addition to those copies required by Parliament and the Government Departments and agencies concerned, just over 1,250 copies were produced for sale at a price of £8.15 net. The costs of printing and publishing the report were borne by HMSO, which aims to recover these costs from sales revenue.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16656]

Mr. Soames: Departmental reports were first produced in 1991, and since then have been published as Command Papers by HMSO, which has borne the printing and publishing costs with the aim of recovering these from sales revenue.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16288]

Mr. Soames: Expenditure by the MOD headquarters information division during financial year 1993–94 was £5,450,000. Within this figure, the cost of contracts placed with the private sector was £2,427,000. This includes stand construction, graphics for various exhibitions, production of publicity films and videos, brochures and the printing of the MOD house journal, "FOCUS". The remaining £3,023,000 relates to miscellaneous programme costs as well as staff and operating costs, including the MOD press office and service directors of public relations.

Expenditure on public relations outside my Department's HQ is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16221]

Mr. Soames: My Department, and the agencies and other public bodies under its authority, adhere closely to guidelines produced by the Cabinet Office concerning the use of public relations consultants. My Department has also produced instructions for the guidance of budget holders on the use of external consultants in general.

Dartmoor National Park

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the advertised usage of Okehampton range in the Dartmoor national park for live firing in the year ended December 1994 expressed by way of days; and how many days firing took place. [17084]

Mr. Soames: The advertised usage of Oakhampton range for live firing for the year ended December was 115 days, and firing took place on 50 days.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the advertised usage of Willsworthy range in the Dartmoor national park for live firing in the year ended December 1994 expressed by way of days; and how many days firing took place. [17085]

Mr. Soames: The advertised usage of Willsworthy range in the year ending December was 232 days, and firing took place on 108 days.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was a the advertised usage of Merrivale range in the Dartmoor national park for live firing in the year ended December 1994 expressed by way of days; and how many days firing took place. [17086]

Mr. Soames: The advertised usage of Merrivale range for live firing to the end of December was 174, and firing took place on 73 days.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when RAF Llandwrog was last tested for traces of chemical weapons; [17294]

(2) when Fort Belan was last tested for traces of chemical weapons. [17295]

Mr. Soames: The standard certificate confirming that all areas of the RAF Llandwrog site, including Fort Belan, were free from explosives and chemical contamination was issued in 1956. My Department is not aware of any further monitoring of the site having taken place since the land was handed back to its original owners at the conclusion of Operation Sandcastle.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what measures his Department has taken to assess the long-term success of Operation Sandcastle; [17296]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the state of the scuttled sea vessels (a) SS Empire Claire, (b) SS Vogtland and (c) SS Kotka. [17293]

Mr. Soames: The vessels scuttled in Operation Sandcastle sank in water up to 2,000 deep some 80 miles north-west of Northern Ireland. No monitoring of these dump sites has been undertaken because of the depth of water and also because the cargo, comprising the nerve agent Tabun, is destroyed by hydrolysis and rendered harmless in sea water. The potential hazards of chemical weapon dump sites and possible remedial action have been reviewed in a number of international maritime fora, and the consensus of international expert opinion is to leave such sites undisturbed.

Land Sales

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 257, if he will provide a breakdown of the (c) £14.7 million in the financial year 1994–95 in respect of receipts received for the sale of land and buildings. [17195]

Mr. Soames: The figure of £14.7 million quoted in my earlier reply related to the projected costs incurred during the current financial year in respect of land and building sales. These costs comprise of planning and other consultancy costs, £3.7 million; works to facilitate disposal including maintenance and guarding, £9.7 million; and legal costs, £1.3 million.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the total (a) acreage and (b) market value of land and buildings that his Department is currently planning to sell. [17196]

Mr. Soames: A substantial number of sites are at present being sold and others are at various stages in the disposal process. It is also expected that further sites will become available for disposal as a result of on-going rationalisation of the defence estate. At this stage it is not possible to be certain about which sites will be released, when they will be sold or the receipts which will accrue. Estimates provide for some £697 million of receipts for the 10 years to financial year 2004, however, which is broadly the same as has been achieved in recent years.

Gulf War

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what non-medical monitoring his Department undertakes on the activities of (a) serving and (b) non-serving soldiers with relation to Gulf war syndrome. [17168]

Mr. Soames: There is no monitoring of the activities of serving or former members of the armed forces in relation to the alleged Gulf war syndrome. As part of our investigation, however, all available material relating to the alleged syndrome is collated. This material includes: potential claims for compensation received from Gulf war veterans; media reports concerning the alleged syndrome which may refer to Gulf veterans; and correspondence with my Department from Gulf veterans and others. Where appropriate, individual veterans whose concern for their health comes to the attention of my Department are contacted and invited to take part in the medical assessment programme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will rule out the possibility that chemical weapons were used during the 1990–91 Gulf war. [17177]

Mr. Soames: No confirmed reports of the detection of chemical warfare agent have been received relating to the Gulf conflict.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations the MOD police have undertaken in respect of Gulf war syndrome. [17169]

Mr. Soames: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports from other countries concerning analysis of weapons usage by Iraq in the Gulf war his Department has received. [17176]

Mr. Soames: My Department regularly exchanges information and assessments with allies, including data on analysis of weapons usage by Iraq in the Gulf war.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a register is maintained by his Department of membership of the Gulf War Veterans Association. [17178]

Mr. Soames: No such register is held by my Department.

Warrior Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what technical problems with bolt fittings to secure machine guns in Warrior fighting vehicles in Bosnia have been encountered; and if he will make a statement. [17170]

Mr. Soames: None.

Air Bases

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many air bases his Department currently has for sale; if he will name the bases together with the counties that they are located in; and if he will specify the asking price or market value of each of these sites. [17174]

Mr. Soames: The following are the former RAF sites currently being sold which represent the whole, or a significant part of an establishment:

	Acres
RAF Upper Heyford, Oxfordshire	1,300
RAF Greenham Common, Berkshire	1,000
RAF St. David, Dyfed	350
RAF Swinderby, Lincolnshire	629
RAF Bentwaters, Suffolk	1,057
East Camp, Hendon, Middlesex	24
RAF Medmenham, Marlow, Buckingham	90
RAF West Drayton, Middlesex	43

It is not our practice to disclose the sale price of sites as that information is commercial in confidence.

Army Bases

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army bases his Department currently has for sale; if he will name the counties that they are located in; and if he will specify the asking price or estimated value of each of these sites. [17175]

Mr. Soames: A number of units or establishments may share parts of a single site and closure of one unit may therefore lead to the disposal of only a part of that site. However, the main sales of sites previously occupied by the Army which are currently in hand are as follows:

	Acres
Hilton Vehicle Storage Depot, Derbyshire	249 (phased sale)
Ruddington Storage Depot, Nottinghamshire	35 (phased sale)
Royal Arsenal West, Woolwich, SE London	76
Royal Arsenal East, Woolwich, SE London	15
Old Park Barracks, Dover, Kent	210
Beavers Lane Camp, Hounslow, Middlesex	29

It is not our practice to disclose the sale price of sites as that information is commercial in confidence.

Reserve Forces Bill

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of his Department are currently working on the Reserve Forces Bill; and how many of these are lawyers. [17172]

Mr. Soames: The Reserve Forces Bill team in the Ministry of Defence consists of four administrative civil servants—a grade 6, a grade 7, a higher executive officer and an administrative officer; a service officer, currently a commander RN; and a legal adviser grade 6. They are supported by other staff in the legal adviser's and reserves policy branches, and elsewhere in the Ministry of Defence, when required. In addition, a team of five members of the volunteer reserve forces, who are lawyers in civilian life, have provided valuable advice on a part-time basis as the work has progressed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from employers' organisations regarding the Reserve Forces Bill. [17173]

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had correspondence about the proposed Reserve Forces Bill with Sir Alexander Graham GBE, chairman of the National Employers's Liaison Committee, which is responsible for promoting support of the reserve forces among employers. The NELC will be conducting an advertising campaign in the national press, starting tomorrow, 31 March 1995, to publicise the proposed legislation, and to ask employers to give their reactions and contribute their views.

COBRA Radar System

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to date of the COBRA counter-battery radar system at current prices; what was the original total cost at current prices; when the COBRA will be in service; and when it was first estimated to be in service. [17194.]

Mr. Freeman: The latest estimated total cost to the United Kingdom of developing the COBRA counter-battery radar system is £63 million at current price levels which remains in line with the original estimate.

However, the project has not yet entered production, and the total estimated costs of the production phase are commercially sensitive. Current production cost estimates predict an increase to the UK of some £30 million at current prices owing to exchange rate variations and a change in our VAT liability arising from revised deployment plans.

The in-service date—ISD—for COBRA is classified. The currently endorsed ISD is five years later than that originally forecast in 1985 and further slippage of 18 months is expected. This delay is principally due to a reassessment of ISD following the project definition phase, protracted negotiations with collaborative partners and industry, and further development work that is aimed at reducing production costs.

Excess Equipment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 256, if he will provide a breakdown of the £72.4 million of receipts for the sale of excess equipment forecast for financial year 1994–95. [17197]

Mr. Freeman: The answer is as follows:

	£ million	Per cent.
Ships	25.4	35.1
Aircrafts	9.7	13.4
Vehicles	14.1	19.5
Armaments	4.7	6.5
Miscellaneous stores and equipment
Army	8.9	12.3
Navy	6.1	8.4
Air	1.0	1.4
PE	1.1	1.5
Marketing agreements	1.4	1.9
Total	72.4	100

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what forecast he has made of the total receipts for the sale of excess equipment in the financial year 1995–96. [17198]

Mr. Freeman: The forecast for financial year 1995–96 is £51.1 million.

Child Care

Mr. McNamar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15234]

Mr. Freeman: At present, there are seven nurseries available for use by my Department's staff, with a further five planned. In addition, there are a number of holiday playschemes in operation. Responsibility for the provision of child care facilities is delegated to individual budget holders and information related to their use is not held centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 30 March. [15458]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

No. 10 Downing Street (Disabled Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made at No. 10 Downing street to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access, with special reference to the fitting of a permanent ramp for wheelchairs; and if he will make a statement. [16931]

The Prime Minister: No. 10 Downing street already has a number of facilities for the disabled: portable ramps are available to give access to the house; a passenger lift which can accommodate wheelchairs and gives access to all floors; and a stair climber to enable wheelchairs to be taken up the main stairs. An additional lift to enable disabled people to move more easily to the state rooms and a disabled toilet will be installed shortly.

Commonwealth Youth Ministers Meeting

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister will be representing Her Majesty's Government at the forthcoming meeting of Commonwealth Youth Ministers in Trinidad; and if he will make a statement. [17298]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom delegation to this meeting will be led by the British High Commissioner of Trinidad and Tobago, assisted by a social development adviser from the Overseas Development Agency and the vice-chairman of the British Youth Council.

Bank of England

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what recent assessment he has made of whether confidential matters can safely be discussed between the Chancellor and officials of the Bank of England; [17121]

(2) what account he will take in considering candidates for appointment to the deputy governorship of the Bank of England of reports concerning their private lives; [17119]

(3) if the usual steps were taken to check Mr. Pennant-Rea's background before he was appointed Deputy Governor of the Bank of England. [17122]

The Prime Minister: I will take all relevant considerations into account in deciding who should be appointed Deputy Governor of the Bank of England. Mr. Pennant-Rea was subject to security vetting before he took up his appointment. I am satisfied that sensitive matters can be discussed in confidence between the Chancellor and bank officials.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15227]

The Prime Minister: For this purpose my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science.

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister what were the total costs of operating the pay review bodies for (a) teachers, (b) doctors and dentists, (c) armed forces, (d) nurses and midwives, etc. and (e) senior salaries, including details for each of consultancy costs, members' expenses and site visits in the latest year for which figures are available. [17322]

The Prime Minster: The pay review bodies are serviced by the Office of Manpower Economics whose total operating costs, including some functions and activities not related to review bodies, amounted to £1.4 million in 1993–94, the latest period for which information is available. This figure includes staff salaries and costs, office infrastructure and support costs, but excludes rent and rates, members' travel and incidental expenses and consultancy.

Members and chairmen of pay review bodies are unpaid. Consultancy costs for review bodies vary significantly from year to year. Details of consultancy costs and members' incidental expenses are set out in the table.

£ pounds

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what was the cost of producing and circulating the annual report of the Cabinet Office for each of the last 10 years in real terms; [16648]

(2) what was the cost of producing and circulating the last annual report of the Cabinet Office; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16648]

The Prime Minister: For this purpose my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science on 29 March at column 651.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cost of producing and circulating the annual report of the Cabinet Office for each of the last 10 years in real terms.

Mr. Horam: The annual Cabinet Office departmental report was first published in 1991. The printing and publishing costs are borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which aims to recover these from sales revenue.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cost of producing and circulating the last annual report of the Cabinet Office; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price.

Mr. Horam: The printing and publishing costs were borne by HMSO who aim to recover these from sales revenue. The report was circulated to the Prime Minister, OPSS Ministers, Opposition spokesmen, Parliament, Cabinet Office senior management, and contributors in HMSO, COI and other organisations included within the report. There were 1,500 copies printed, and just over 900 copies were distributed for sale to the public, at a cover price of £11.55.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average period being taken by the intervention board to process the leasing of milk quotas and to inform Milk Marque of the transfer. [15935]

Mr. Jack: The leasing period for the 1994–95 milk quotas year during which our target was to process acceptable leases within 14 days of their receipt ended on 31 December 1994. Processing of acceptable leases was completed some weeks ago. The only leases now being processed are those with queries which are being processed as soon as they have been resolved. As they are cleared individually there are no statistics showing average clearance rates. Milk Marque, and other milk purchasers, are informed on a weekly basis of all changes in the quota registered with them confirmed in the preceding week.

Fruit and Vegetables

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the United Kingdom trade deficit or surplus in respect of indigenous fruit and vegetables as defined by "Food from Britain" for each year from 1990 to 1994. [14925]

Mr. Jack: The crude overseas trade deficit in respect of indigenous fruit and vegetables is given in the following table; the information for 1994 is not yet available.

£ million

	1990	1991	1992	1993[1]
Crude trade gap	861	883	896	919

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the latest European Commission estimate for the amount of tonnes of (i) apples, (ii) tomatoes, (iii) cauliflowers and (iv) peaches and nectarines withdrawn from the market to raise consumer prices and (b) the cost of this policy to public funds in the United Kingdom, breaking this figure down into (1) the running costs of the policy and (2) the amount which the policy adds on food prices. [16152]

Mr. Jack: The latest estimates from the European Commission for the 1995 budget year (16 October 1994 to 15 October 1995) are:

(i) apples - 950,000 tonnes
(ii) tomatoes - 70,000 tonnes
(iii) cauliflowers - 80,000 tonnes
(iv) peaches - 800,000 tonnes
(v) nectarines - 195,000 tonnes

It is not possible to estimate the UK contribution to the cost of withdrawals of fruit and vegetables across the European Community as the UK contributes to the common agricultural policy budget as a whole and not to individual parts of it.

Estimates of the amount that the policy adds to retail prices of fruit and vegetables are not available, but are likely to be relatively small.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the child care and nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15239]

Mr. Jack: During the last six months MAFF has increased the number of subsidised nursery places available to MAFF and agency staff from 48 to 84. Seventy-five of these places are currently taken up. A 33-place nursery is under construction at the Central Science Laboratory's new site at Sand Hutton, near York, which is due to open in 1996.

Current use by grade and gender is as follows:

Grade or Equivalent	Gender
G7	4 Female 5 Male
SEO/SSO	9 Female 3 Male
HEO/HSO	15 Female 6 Male
EO/SO	17 Female 6 Male
AO	8 Female 2 Male
AA	1 Female
Support Grades	1 Female

Twenty of these places are used by families where both parents work for MAFF. The higher grade has been used in the breakdown of users.

Holiday playscheme provision is available to staff based at a number of sites throughout the country. The facilities are available to all grades and use varies during the year.

EU Proposals

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) Commission proposals and (b) fiches d'impact there were in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [17087]

Mr. Jack: Full details of the proposals issued by the European Commission were published in its 1993 and 1994 general reports on the activities of the European Union, paragraphs 1025 and 1202 respectively. The Commission does not publish similar information on fiches d'impact. However, in line with central requirements, MAFF actively presses the Commission to prepare fiches for legislative proposals which have the potential to impose substantial burdens on business.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, columns 775–808, what consideration underlay the decision not to produce a fiche d'impact in relation to industry costs for the minced meat directive; and what steps are being taken to ensure that in each member state for every directive the Community produces a fiche d'impact concerned with the likely cost to industry of implementation. [17090]

Mrs. Browning: It is for the Commission to explain the considerations behind its decision not to produce a fiche d'impact when it proposed the minced meat directive in 1990. In commenting on the Commission's annual work programme, the Government identify legislative proposals which have the potential to impose substantial burdens on business and urges the European Commission to prepare fiches d'impact where it has not volunteered to do so in the programme. MAFF, like other Departments, actively presses the Commission to prepare fiches at the earliest practicable point in the process.

Pesticides Safety Directorate

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Pesticides Safety Directorate in 1995–96. [17946]

Mr. Waldegrave: I have set the Pesticides Safety Directorate the following targets relating to financial performance, efficiency, the delivery of pesticides approval services and policy advice in 1995–96:

To achieve 100 per cent. recovery of costs and an overall efficiency gain of 2 per cent. To meet the targets for delivery of services as follows:

Application stream	Applications completed	Maximum processing time (working days)
Technical secretariat
Normal	310	270
Fast	275	110
Experimental permit	30	185
Off label	115	60
Administrative fast	350	20
Upgrade	50	—
New substances
Sift	11	120
New substance	16	235-275
Reviews
Reviews (UK and EC)	14	—

Notes:

1. The processing time targets apply to 85 per cent. of new applications.
2. The quality of the directorate's scientific and policy work will be subject to separate quality audits.
3. The agency will carry out a customer satisfaction survey to assess the service delivery defined in its customer service statement published in 1994.
4. Details of performance in 1994–95 will be set out in the agency's annual report and accounts to be published during July 1995.

Sheep Rustling

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to combat sheep rustling. [15650]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have taken a number of steps, such as encouraging the formation of farm watch schemes, to combat a range of crimes in rural areas. However, it is a matter for individual chief officers of police to decide operational priorities according to local needs.

WALES

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department or its predecessors, since 1965. [16096]

Mr. Redwood: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department since 1965 has not been carried out. However, it would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state, and general references are made to both Houses of Parliament and to membership of the House of Commons.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the TEC schemes his Department sponsors for the unemployed; and if he will list the schemes in operation since the TECs were set up. [16218]

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:

Youth training (previously youth training scheme)
Youth credit (previously training credit)
Modern engineering apprenticeships
Training for work (previously employment training, employment action and higher technology national training)
Business start-up (previously enterprise allowance scheme)
Open learning credits

From 1 April 1995, the modern apprenticeships and accelerated modern apprenticeships schemes are being introduced.

In addition, TECs are able to offer support at local level through the local initiative fund and the use of their reserves.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what has been his Department's expenditure on each of the TECs in North Wales 1994–95; and what his plans are in 1995–96 and 1996–97. [16745]

Mr. Richards: Negotiations are continuing with TECs on the contracts for 1995–96. When these negotiations are completed I will write to the hon. Member.

Final outturn figures for the 1994–95 will not be available until the appropriation accounts are approved. When I write to the hon. Member on TEC contracts I will let him also have the latest provisional outturn figures at the time.

Expenditure in 1996–97 will be dependent on TEC contract negotiations which will take place early in 1996.

Press Officers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press officers there are in his Department and what the figure was in 1979. [16747]

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16546]

Mr. Redwood: There are currently seven press officers in my Department. The figure for 1979 is not available.

Nitrous Oxide

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the quantity of nitrous oxide emissions in Wales in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [16589]

Mr. Redwood: Estimated figures for the United Kingdom appear at table 1.4 in the latest "Digest of Environment and Water Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Figures for Wales are not separately identified.

Former Development Areas

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to assist those areas in Wales which lost development area status; and if he will make a statement. [16831]

Mr. Redwood: The assisted areas map settled by the Government in July 1993 represented a fair and very satisfactory settlement for Wales. I believe that the map provides an excellent basis to continue the great economic success that has been achieved in Wales in recent years.

Non-Domestic Rating

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of rating revaluation on small business in Wales. [16933]

Mr. Redwood: The 1995 rating revaluation has resulted in an estimated average increase in Welsh rateable values of 18 per cent. which, under the statutory formula, means a reduction in the poundage from 44.8p to 39p. For properties with a 1995 rateable value below £10,000, the average increase in rateable value is 28 per cent. Transitional arrangements limit increases in bills for premises with a rateable value less than £10,000 to 7.5 per cent. a year in real terms. This compares with 10 per cent. in real terms for premises with a rateable value of £10,000 or more.

Employment in House Building

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people employed in the house building industry in Wales. [16829]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information is available only for the construction industry as a whole. Latest estimates from the autumn 1994 Labour Force Survey show that there were 88,000 people employed in this industry in Wales.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions and on what dates between 1 September 1994 and 2 March 1995 he has had formal meetings with (a) the board and (b) the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales. [16760]

Mr. Redwood: I had a formal meeting with the chairman on 10 January 1994 and with the chairman and the board on 24 January 1995. In addition to these meetings, discussions have taken place between my officials and officials from the Countryside Council for Wales.

Low Pay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on low pay in Wales. [16832]

Mr. Redwood: Since April 1990, wage levels have risen faster in Wales than in Great Britain as a whole.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources he is making available to combat drug abuse on Deeside, Clwyd. [16834]

Mr. Richards: Following the recommendations of the efficiency scrutiny of health promotion in Wales, central Welsh Office resources to combat drug and alcohol misuse were added to the allocations of Welsh district health authorities from 1 April 1994. The funding of local initiatives to combat drug misuse in Wales is the responsibility of the local agencies involved.

Child Care

Mr. Kevin McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15225]

Mr. Redwood: My Department is a member of a consortium that provides nursery places for staff who are primary carers of children aged between six weeks and five years. The use of these places by grade and gender is as follows:

Grade	Female	Male
Grade 6	1	0
Grade 7	2	3
SEO	0	2
HEO	2	3
EO	11	1
AO	6	0

Places are reserved on holiday playschemes for children aged between four and 14 years during the Easter and summer school holidays. Information on the use of these places is not available in the form requested.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to introduce controls on Welsh Office spending on the promotion of grant-maintained schools similar to those which are to be imposed on local authorities in accordance with section 36 of the Education Act 1993; when he proposes to publish the result of his consultation with local councils on this issue; how much time he allowed local authorities to respond to his circular on the matter; and if he will make a statement. [16950]

Mr. Richards: Welsh Office expenditure in respect of grant-maintained status for schools in limited to what is already considered to be the minimum necessary to ensure that interested parties have sufficient information which is factual and non-political in content, tone, and presentation to enable them to take an informed view about the grant-maintained option.

The consultation paper on the joint draft Education (Ballot Expenditure) Regulations was issued on 27 January 1995. Consultees were invited to submit comments by 24 February. In the light of the comments received, my right hon. Friends have modified upwards several of the expenditure limits described in the regulations which will now come into force on 1 April this year.

The provisions to limit local authority expenditure and put modest sums at the disposal of governing bodies are designed to achieve a balance between LEAs' and governing bodies' abilities to inform local debate on the matter.

TB and Cancer

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were reported as suffering from (a) tuberculosis, (b) breast cancer and (c) cervical cancer in 1994; and if he will make a statement. [16744]

Mr. Richards: Information on the total number of people suffering from diseases is not collected centrally. However, provisional figures for 1994 show that there were 184 new cases of tuberculosis in Wales notified to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. In 1989, the latest year for which complete data are available, there were 1,674 new female breast cancers and 342 new cervical cancers registered by the Wales Cancer Registry.

Local Education Authority Staff

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of administrative staff employed in each of the local education authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [16746]

Mr. Richards: Information on the number of people employed by local authorities in Wales is compiled by the Local Government Management Board. Figures for staff employed in administration are not separately available. The estimated number of full-time and part-time non-manual staff employed in the education service, other than lecturers and teachers, in June 1994 was 11,050—8,870 full-time equivalents. This comprises all non-manual staff identified as employed within the education service and includes administrative, secretarial and clerical staff, youth and community workers, nursery and other non-teaching classroom assistants, library staff serving educational establishments, educational psychologists and careers guidance staff. Figures for individual education authorities are not released into the public domain because estimates at this level of disaggregation are not considered sufficiently reliable by the LGMB.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which police headquarters he has visited in Wales since taking office. [16748]

Mr. Redwood.: None. The police force is a responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to reduce the numbers of mixed-sex wards in Welsh hospitals. [17350]

Mr. Richards: Hospitals are already required to provide services which take account of an individual's privacy and dignity, and I have told the NHS that the next edition of the patients charter, to be published later this year, will emphasise the need for the service to take better account of patients' preferences when arranging hospital accommodation.

To prepare the ground for the requirements of the new charter, I have asked the chairman of each health and NHS trust in Wales to develop proposals by the end of April for improving performance in this area.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Publicity

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimate of departmental expenditure on advertising and publicity for 1994–95; and what was the actual number for 1993–94. [17192]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Total expenditure on publicity from my Department's centrally managed budgets was £8.47 million in 1993–94 of which £.78 million was in respect of advertising. The corresponding figures for 1994–95 are estimated to be £7.89 million and £.56 million respectively.

Indonesia (Visits)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the exact dates of ministerial visits to Indonesia since 1 January 1990, naming the Ministers and giving the reasons for the visit in each case. [16510]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The following ministerial visits to Indonesia covered by my present departmental responsibilities have taken place since 1 January 1990:

26 February 1992: Lord Rae Minister for Technology and Aerospace. Trade promotion visit.

7-10 January 1993: Richard Needham, Minister for Trade. Trade promotion visit.

1-3 June 1993: Richard Needham, Minister for Trade. Trade promotion visit.

10–15 September 1993: Tim Eggar, Minister for Energy. Trade Promotion Visit.

1-3 December 1993: Richard Needham, Minister for Trade. Trade promotion visit.

18-23 October 1994: Richard Needham, Minister for Trade. Trade promotion visit.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the exact dates of visits by officials in his Department to Indonesia since 1 January 1990 and the reason for the visit in each case. [16511]

Mr. Ian Taylor: This information is not held on a central database and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

West Midlands Economy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings he has held in the last two years about future programmes to regenerate and develop the west midlands economy through the European structural funds; and what these programmes will be. [16226]

Mr. Page: My colleagues and I have on occasion met Commissioners to discuss matters generally concerning the European structural funds. No meetings have been specifically about west midlands issues. The west midlands will benefit from structural fund assistance through the following programmes already approved:

West Midlands/Objectives 2 Single Programming Document 1994–1996.

The Marches 5b Single Programming Document 1994–96.

The Great Britain Objective 3 Programme.

I expect the eligible parts of the West Midlands also benefit from structural fund community initiative programmes including, EMPLOYMENT, KONVER, RETEX, SME, RECHAR, LEADER and URBAN.

Dounreay

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals have been submitted for decommissioning the Dounreay fast reactor, the prototype fast reactor and the HMS Vulcan reactor test establishment. [16054]

Mr. Page: The responsibility for the decommissioning of nuclear plant at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's Dounreay site rests with UKAEA Government division. The DTI has accepted responsibility for funding most of the work. Proposals for the decommissioning of the Dounreay fast reactor and the prototype fast reactor, which form part of the programme of work, have been agreed between the UKAEA Government division and the DTI. Both reactors are currently undergoing the first stage of decommissioning.

The decommissioning of the HMS Vulcan reactor test establishment is a matter for the Ministry of Defence.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what comparative studies were carried out into the options for managing the final load of spent nuclear fuel from the Dounreay prototype fast reactor; and what studies were done to justify the reprocessing of the fuel, as referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) on 14 February 1994, Official Report, column 573.

Mr. Page: The UKAEA has carried out a study of the management options for the final load of spent fuel from the Dounreay prototype fast reactor. The study considered the following alternatives to a continuation of reprocessing in the Dounreay PFR reprocessing plant:

(a) Reprocessing at Sellafield, in France, in CIS countries or in Japan;

(b) Long term storage pending either reprocessing or direct disposal;

(c) Direct disposal.

The study is presently being reviewed and updated to incorporate current data. It provisionally concluded that, on technical and economic grounds, continued reprocessing at Dounreay is the preferred option.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action will be taken concerning installation of a nitric acid neutralising plant at Dounreay. [16053]

Mr. Page: Specifications for a nitric acid neutralisation plant at Dounreay are currently being prepared. It is expected that construction and installation of the necessary equipment will be completed by 1997.

Top Executives' Pay

Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress of the talks between his Department and the CBI committee established to look at the pay of the top executives. [15300]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The formation of a committee under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Greenbury to review the framework for determining and disclosing executive remuneration is a private sector initiative. The Government have no direct involvement in the committee's work. The committee's recommendations will be addressed in the first instance to companies and their shareholders, but the Government will be ready to consider whether any recommendations require legislative action.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15235]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The DTI—excluding the following executive agencies: Companies House, the Insolvency Service, the National Engineering Laboratory, the National Physical Laboratory, the Laboratory of the Government Chemists, the National Weights and Measures Laboratory, the Patent Office and the Radiocommunications Agency—provides school holiday playscheme places in London and a number of regional locations.

The figures showing the number of staff whose children used the playschemes during 1994–95 are set out in the following table:

Grade level	Male	Female	Total
5	2	2	4
6	1	—	1
7	12	2	14
SEO	5	3	8
HEO	6	10	16
EO	1	7	8
AO	—	19	19
AA	1	9	10
Total	28	52	80

The chief executives of the DTI's executive agencies will respond direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 30 March 1995:

I have been asked by the President of the Board of Trade to respond to your question concerning child care and nursery facilities.

Companies House does not provide nursery facilities, but we do provide financial assistance (50% of the cost) to staff who wish to use our approved Holiday Play Care Scheme during the Easter and Summer school holidays. This assistance has been available since the Summer of 1993.

I have detailed below the average usage, grade and gender split for the last three holidays ie Summer 1993, Easter 1994 and Summer 1994.

Average number of staff using the scheme	Average gender split %	Average grade split %
19	Female 93 Male 7	Clerical 71 Management 29

Please let me know if you require any further details.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Kevin McNamara, dated 30 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about childcare or nursery facilities in the Insolvency Service.

The Service participates in the DTI Playscheme in Central London, operational in school holidays, and provides a number of places at a subsidised rate. Usage in the 21 months period from April 1993 to December 1994 was:

	Playscheme days	Staff grade	Gender
	3	Assistant Official Receiver (B)	Male
	27	Examiner (D)	Female
	34	Administrative Officer	Female
	67	Typist	Female
Total	131

Letter from Richard Worswick to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 30 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question concerning childcare/nursery facilities available at the laboratory of the Government Chemist (LGC).

The three DTI Agencies based at Teddington, Middlesex (National Physical Laboratory, National Weights and Measures Laboratory and the Laboratory of the Government Chemist) together provide a nursery facility at the Teddington site for employees' children of pre-school age and babies over 3 months old. An analysis (by grade and gender) of the 17 LGC employees who have children attending the nursery is given in the table below.

In addition, two children of employees of DTI's Chemicals and Biotechnology Division (some of whose staff are co-located with LGC on the Teddington site) attend the nursery facility. The data for these employees is shown in brackets in the table below.

		Gender of employee
Employee grade	Number in grade	Male	Female
Grade 7	2	1	1
S–level grades	4	3	1
H–1level grades	3	1	2
EO and equivalent grades	4	1	3
Administrative, support and equivalent	(+2 CB) 4	—	(+2 CB) 4
Totals	(+2 CB) 17	6	(+2 CB) 11

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Kevin McNamara dated, 30 March 1995:

I would refer to your Parliamentary Question to the President to the Board of Trade concerning child care and nursery facilities available within his Department. I would confirm that this agency does not provide any such facilities.

Letter from Peter Clapham to Mr. Kevin McNamara dated, 30 March 1995:

I am writing in response to your question to the President of the Board of Trade regarding child care facilities within the DTI, and their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender.

The National Physical Laboratory, in conjunction with the Laboratory of the Government Chemist and the National Weights and Measures Laboratory, provides an on-site nursery at Teddington.

As at February 1995, usage of the nursery by staff at NPL was:-

	Grade	Number
a) by grade	Grade 7	6
	SSO & equivalent	1
	HSO & equivalent	5
	SO & equivalent	6
	ASO & equivalent	1
b) by gender	Male	7
	Female	12

I hope the above provides the information you require.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 30 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of this Agency to your Parliamentary Question about child care and nursery facilities.

There is a nursery facility on the Teddington site shared by NWML with the National Physical Laboratory and the Laboratory of the Government Chemist. Three members of NWML staff currently use the facility as follows:

Grade

1 Higher Professional & Technical Officer

1 Higher Scientific Officer

1 Scientific Officer

Gender

1 female

2 male

Letter from P.R.S. Hartnack to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 30 March 1995:

I have been asked to reply—with respect to the Patent Office—to your recent Parliamentary question to the President of the Board of Trade concerning child care or nursery facilities.

The Patent Office occupies the Duffryn site at Newport, South Wales, alongside the Central Statistical Office, and has access to the nursery facilities operated by CSO. At the moment six Patent Office employees (two female executive officers, four female administrative officers) place children in the nursery during the working day.

In addition, the Patent Office operates playschemes during the Easter and Summer school holidays, when staff at work may find it difficult to arrange care for children at home. We bus children from the Newport site to a larger nursery in Cardiff (about nine miles) at the beginning of the working day, and return them to the site at the end.

Usage in 1994 was as follows:

Grade	Gender	Number
Easter playscheme
HEO	F	2
HEO	M	1
EO	M	1
AO	F	1
AO	M	1
Support grade	M	1
AA	F	2
Summer playscheme
HEO	F	2
HEO	M	2
EO	F	3
AO	F	2
Support grade	M	1
AA	M	1
AA	F	1

(HEO stands for higher executive officer and AA for administrative assistance). I hope this is helpful.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 30 March 1995:

CHILD CARE AND NURSERY FACILITIES

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about child care and nursery facilities.

The Agency does not have any child care or nursery facilities at present and there are no plans to introduce such facilities in the foreseeable future.

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list imports as a percentage of the United Kingdom market for manufacturers by main sector for the latest date for which figures are available. [17128]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The latest available information was published in 1990 by the Central Statistical Office in "Business Monitor MQ12", available in the Library of the House. Information for 1993 is expected to be published by the CSO in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics", at the end of April 1995.

Financial and Advisory Services

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what leaflets are published by his Department which list the forms of (a) financial and (b) advisory assistance available from public or private sector sources to businesses in Britain. [16900]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The DTI brochure "Services for Business" sets out the range of services available from the DTI; supported by secondary publications providing more detailed information on the individual services.

Increasingly, DTI services are being delivered by Business Links. These private sector-led partnerships are bringing together the full range of business support services in their areas—providing "one stop" access.

Business Links are putting together lists of the financial and advisory assistance available from public and private sector sources in their areas. The information is not held centrally and the DTI does not have a comprehensive list of all the business support services available.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what forms of financial assistance outside areas receiving regional development assistance are available for assisting established companies (a) to expand premises or production and (b) to pilot new brands of machinery; and how many applications for such assistance are processed. [16870]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Outside the areas qualifying for regional aid there is no financial assistance from the DTI specifically to help businesses to expand premises or production or to pilot new brands of machinery. However, the SMART—small firms merit award for research and technology—and SPUR—support for products under research—schemes help small businesses research and develop new products and processes involving innovative technology. In the past year, there were 1,494 entries for the SMART competition, resulting in 180 offers of support, and there have been 168 applications for SPUR which, to date, have led to 73 offers of support.

Contract with America

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the Washington DC embassy's reports of 9 and 18 January concerning the Republicans' contract with America. [17083]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have arranged to deposit the documents requested in the Library of the House.

Deregulation Initiatives

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which overseas posts have reported on deregulation initiatives since the start of the current year. [17088]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Since the start of the current year, 14 overseas posts have reported formally and informally on deregulation in their host countries. These posts were:

Austria; Canada; Finland; France; Germany; Greece; Ireland; Italy; Japan; Luxembourg; Netherlands; Spain; Sweden; and the United States of America.

Argentina

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the policy of Her Majesty's Government on trade with the Argentine; and what plans he has to review it. [16231]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry), on 7 December 1994, Official Report, columns 259–60. Our overall policy is to promote the continued growth of trade with and investment in, Argentina and we have no plans to review that policy. There remains an embargo on the sale of arms and military equipment to Argentina.

Overseas Investments

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the contribution of overseas investment to the profitability of (a) British Gas, (b) British Telecom, (c) the privatised water companies and (d) the privatised electricity companies; and if he will make a statement. [16233]

Mr. Eggar: Decisions about overseas investment are matters for the companies themselves and not for me, but I am always pleased at the successes of the privatised companies in overseas markets.

Arms Exports to Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 483, what were the five applications for the export of arms to Indonesia that were refused by his Department in 1994; what were the arms involved; which were the firms promoting them; and what were the reasons for refusal. [15995]

Mr. Ian Taylor: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of export licences or applications for licences.

Post Office

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many crown post offices are currently in operation throughout (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom; and if he will list the crown post offices still in operation in Scotland and the parliamentary constituencies within which they lie. [16311]

Mr. Page [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I understand from the Post Office that, at the end of February 1995, there were 61 crown post offices operating in Scotland and 735 crown post offices operating throughout the United Kingdom. A list of the crown post offices operating in Scotland, showing the parliamentary constituencies within which they are located, is being placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are employed at each of the crown post offices operating within Scotland. [16310]

Mr. Page [holding answer 27 March 1995]: A copy of the list provided by the Post Office of the 60 crown post offices currently operating in Scotland and the numbers of staff employed at each of them is being placed in the Library of the House.

Indonesia (Exports)

Ms Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what export licences have been granted to British firms for export to Indonesia of (a) crowd control technologies and (b) CS gas. [16728]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 28 March 1995]: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of export licences or applications for export licences.

Iraq (Export Credit Guarantees)

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the potential export credit guarantee liability in respect of contracts entered into with companies in Iraq or the Government of Iraq; how much of this amount is in respect of defence contracts; and what amount of export credit guarantee liability has been actually paid. [16994]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 28 March 1995]: The ECGD's current exposure on Iraq is estimated at £652 million, of which £593 million relates to un-recovered claims payments. Over the period 1985–90, ECGD supported about £52 million for exports with potential defence applications.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the estimated total number of liable parents for child maintenance without care responsibilities prior to the Child Support Act 1991; what is the most recent estimated number of parents without care responsibilities but potentially liable for child support; and what is the estimated total number in each category who were or are not paying any child support at all and the estimated total numbers who paid £500 or less per child. [15264]

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested. Estimates at the time the White Paper "Children Come First" was published in 1990 indicated that only 30 per cent. of lone mothers and 3 per cent of lone fathers received maintenance. The average amount of maintenance paid was £25 a week.

Incapacity Benefits

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of incapacity benefits have been found (a) capable of work, (b) capable of alternative work and (c) capable of their usual occupation during each of the last four quarters; and in each category, how many of these were examined and how many were not. [16102]

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

Outcome of claims referred to Benefits Agency medical service.

Quarter ending	December 1993	March 1994	June 1994	September 1994
Capable of alternative work	25,000	28,000	25,000	27,000
Capable of normal occupation	5,000	5,000	4,000	4,000

Notes:

1. Based on a 100 per cent. count of cases, rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. References are for sickness benefit, invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance claimants, but excludes those references where the national insurance contribution conditions for sickness/invalidity benefit have not been satisfied and benefit is payable because the person's incapacity is the result of an accident at work or a prescribed industrial disease.

3. Figures for June and September do not include references to Durham medical examination centre. Figures for September do not include references to Swansea reference office.

All these claimants were examined by the Benefits Agency medical service.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if Mr. Harold Fairs' entitlement to incapacity benefit will cease on 1 June; if his retirement pension will be payable from the first pension pay day on 5 June; and from which public funds during the period 2 to 4 June Mr. Fairs will meet the needs for which his incapacity benefit is intended. [17354]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 24 February, Official Report, columns 351-52.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16286]

Mr. Hague: This Department spent the following on public relations with the private sector during the financial year 1993–94:

Department	£
Headquarters	nil
Benefits Agency	nil
Contributions Agency	nil
Child Support Agency	nil
War Pensions Agency	nil
Resettlement Agency	nil
Information Technology Services Agency	2,765

The activities covered by the contractor to ITSA were to assist the agency in the establishment of its public relations function; to advise on dealing with the IT press, and to make recommendations on both internal and external communication.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16623]

Mr. Hague: The Department has produced only three separate departmental annual reports. Costs, in March 1995 prices, for these are as follows:

1995–96: £34,104

1994–95: £27,342

1993–94: £33,476

For the years 1991–92 and 1992–93 the Department's expenditure plans were published as part of a Treasury series and separate figures are therefore not available.

For the years 1985–86 to 1989–90 expenditure plans for all Departments were published by the Treasury in its expenditure White Paper. Separate figures are not available.

Benefits (Capital Limits)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the current capital limits to the entitlement to benefits and other assistance together with the year of introduction; what was the value of each in real terms at the time of introduction; and if he will make a statement. [16611]

Mr. Roger Evans: The five income-related benefits—council tax benefit, disability working allowance, family credit, housing benefit and income support—all have a lower capital limit, above which deductions are made from benefit, and an upper capital limit, above which no benefit can be paid. The lower capital limit in all those benefits is also the level above which no personal allowance can be paid for a dependent child if he possesses that amount of capital or more.

Additionally, in qualifying for a social fund maternity or funeral payment, community care grant or budgeting loan, if capital is held above a certain limit, deductions are made from any payment awarded.

The limits, and the dates when they were introduced or last increased, are set out in the table.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people who will receive the jobseeker's allowance; and if he will make a statement. [16830]

Mr. Roger Evans: On current assumptions, 2,110,00 people would be receiving a jobseeker's allowance at any one time in 1996–97. Once transitional protection has ended, on the same assumptions 2,070,000 would be receiving a jobseeker's allowance.

Notes:

1. Assumes in 1996–97 and 1997–98 claimant unemployment in Great Britain of 2.4 million and an unemployment benefit case load of 500,000.

2. Estimates rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17037]

Mr. Hague: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department and its predecessors since 1965 for any reference to the type requested, could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It is exceptional for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state, and occasional general references are made to persons who are members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Performance Targets

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance targets he has set his Department's agencies for 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [18010]

Mr. Lilley: The targets I have set my executive agencies for 1995–96 are given.

The targets represent a significant challenge to each agency, and support the continued success of the citizen's charter and next steps programmes.

As well as performance targets, I have also set resource management targets requiring agencies to deliver their services within agreed financial resources.

Further information on my agencies' plans for 1995–96 is contained in their individual business plans which have been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

[2] The maintenance target comprises the following two forecast components:

£140 million of maintenance will be collected by the agency and £160 million assessed by the agency for direct payment by absent parents to parents with care; and £540 million benefit savings are expected to result from the achievement of CSA targets.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) gender. [15240]

Mr. Hague: The Department provides a range of subsidised child care facilities to its staff, including nurseries, 646 places; holiday playschemes, 2,560 places; and child care referral services. A breakdown of child care usage by grade and by gender is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the Department's child care facilities are open to men and women of all grades.

National Insurance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how long it takes the Contributions Agency to respond to requests for records of national insurance payments made; [15988]

(2) what are the performance targets set for the Contributions Agency when clients seek a record of payment contributions. [15992]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The administration of national insurance is the responsibility of Mr. George Bertram, the acting chief executive of the Contributions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from George Bertram to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 29 March 1995:

As Acting Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the National Insurance scheme. I have been asked to reply to your questions about requests from customers for information about their National Insurance Contributions records. In view of the nature of the questions I have combined the responses.

There is no specific performance target for the Agency to respond to requests from customers for information about their contributions records. However, one of the targets set by the Secretary of State for the Contributions Agency is to send either a full reply, or an informative response, to 95% of all customer enquiries within 10 working days of receipt. We treat requests for records of National Insurance payments as falling within the scope of this target.

In many cases, eg where contributions are paid by direct debit and the enquiry relates only to contributions paid by that method, we can readily provide the information from the computer sub-system which processes those payments. Similarly where the question is simply how much was paid in specific years we can quickly obtain a copy of an individual's National Insurance account.

Where however customers require a comprehensive statement of their National Insurance position, usually because they are concerned about entitlement to retirement pension, a computer produced statement, detailing yearly contributions paid, is normally issued. The statement also advises customers of any years in which insufficient contributions have been paid towards retirement pension, how much would need to be paid to make good any shortfall, and how much contributions can be paid. In line with the customer enquiry target set for the Agency we respond to those requests within 10 working days and advise the customer that normally it takes about six weeks to provide the required statements. On an exception basis, where an urgent response is required, it is possible to obtain the information from the computer and then process the application clerically. But to do this for all cases would be a costly way of dealing with the large numbers of requests we receive.

I hope you find this reply helpful. If I can be of any further assistance, please let me know.

TRANSPORT

Tourist Signs

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the results of his review of tourism signing and proposals for deregulation. [18054]

Mr. Watts: I have been reviewing, in close collaboration with the Department of National Heritage, and the Welsh and Scottish Offices, the policy and regulations dealing with the provision of white and brown tourist traffic signs on local authority roads. We have concluded that there should be much more flexibility in the provision of signs, to help tourists and tourist businesses. In particular we have decided that the definition of tourist establishments eligible for signs should be extended to a wider range of destinations and facilities that attract or are used by visitors, including retail and catering establishments. This will involve an amendment of the existing Traffic Signs Regulations, and we are about to consult further on specific proposals for an amending statutory instrument. Copies of the consultation documents for England including revised draft guidance to local authorities, will be placed in the Library on 3 April.

Automatic Train Protection

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received from the Health and Safety Commission and Railtrack on British Rail's report on automatic train protection; and if he will make a statement. [17947]

Dr. Mawhinney: Serious railway accidents are relatively rare and there has been a significant improvement in railway safety in recent years. Accidents involving signals passed at danger, overspeeding and buffer stop collisions, which ATP would prevent, are infrequent and account for about 3 per cent. of fatalities and injuries, excluding trespassers and suicides. The trend in the number of serious incidents where signals have been passed at danger has been downward in the last five years. But there is no room for complacency about the need to pursue cost effective measures to reduce the risk of accidents to the lowest reasonably practicable level.

The British Rail report on ATP examined the technical feasibility, costs and benefits of two pilot ATP systems. Copies of the report were placed in the Library of the House last July. The HSC and Railtrack have concluded that the report was thorough and sound. I welcome that conclusion.

On the basis of advice I have received from the HSC, I have concluded that applications of ATP, other automatic devices or measures giving protection against ATP-preventable accidents may be justified on parts of the network. In particular, the HSC has asked the Health and Safety Executive to explore with Railtrack the options for tackling ATP-preventable accidents, and the criteria that might be used for identifying parts of the network where such measures could yield value for money, with a view to receiving a proposed strategy from Railtrack by June 1995. In addition and in the longer term, the HSC has advised me that ATP or automatic train control should be adopted as standard on new high speed lines including the channel tunnel rail link, and that full consideration should be given to installing ATP functions within future major resignalling works, such as modernisation of the west coast main line.

BR and Railtrack have advised me that network-wide fitment of ATP as piloted is not justifiable because the costs far outweigh the benefits. The HSC has endorsed this view and, furthermore, considers that there are alternative safety investments which would be likely to yield greater effectiveness in terms of lives saved, and better value for money. The BR report on ATP has demonstrated the importance of assessing the costs and benefits of all investment aimed at improving safety to ensure that funding goes to schemes which maximise the benefits for rail users. Copies of the HSC's full advice, which I accept in full, have been placed in the Library of the House.

British Rail and Railtrack remain committed to a co-ordinated programme to reduce the risks associated with signals passed at danger, overspeeding and buffer stop collisions. As part of this programme, the feasibility of a drivers' reminder device is being researched which will help prevent drivers stopped at danger signals for inadvertently starting against these signals when the train is ready to move, for example at a station. This is one of the more common type of SPAD leading to serious consequences and such a device could potentially deliver up to 25 per cent. of the benefits of network-wide ATP. An early trial of this device is proposed.

A further project is examining enhancement of the present automatic warning system so that the brakes are applied automatically if a train approaches a red signal at excessive speed indicating an impending signal passed at danger or over-speeding incident. A detailed specification is being drawn up.

Risk analysis is also being applied to track layout and signalling design, to ensure that safety factors are taken into account quantitatively in the design of the network. Protective signalling measures have already been introduced at a number of vulnerable locations and examinations of other vulnerable locations is ongoing.

Railtrack is giving high priority to the development of appropriate techniques for quantifying the costs and benefits of all these projects and considering their application at individual locations.

ATP and other devices are not the only way of preventing or mitigating certain risks. The human factors involved will continue to be addressed through driver selection, training and motivation and supervision programmes. This includes close attention to driver familiarisation when new rolling stock and signalling is introduced, and a rigorous alcohol and drugs policy.

The Chiltern line and Great Western pilot ATP installations will continue in service, and ATP will be extended to the new Heathrow express link in due course. The scope for improvement in the cost/benefit ratio of ATP will continue to be examined through these schemes.

I have asked the HSC for an overall progress report in July.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the childcare or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15232]

Mr. Norris: Staff in DOT central and its agencies have access to 10 holiday playschemes and three nursery facilities throughout the United Kingdom.

Due to the varying number of places taken up at different times of the year, and the changing client group, it is not possible to supply precise numbers, by grade and gender of all parents/guardians whose children use the playschemes.

The table confirms the gender breakdown of parents/guardians who use the available nursery facilities. Figures are not available in relation to grade.

Nursery	Female	Male
Swansea on site DVLA	49	9
Bristol Acorns Nursery	2	3
Hastings CSA Nursery	3	3

Computer Associates

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action British Rail is taking to stop Computer Associates terminating its software licences before privatisation; what damages and costs are being sought; if a counter-claim has been made against British Rail; and if he will make a statement. [17319]

Mr. Watts: This is a matter for the British Railways Board.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate has been made of the costs incurred by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency as a result of Computer Associates' court action limiting access to software.

Mr. Norris: The cost of migrating from CA to substitute products was borne by EDS, the Department's IT supplier.

Bull Bars

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what obstacles in European law would prevent the introduction in the United Kingdom of a ban on the use and manufacture of bull bars; [17252]

(2) what plans he has to introduce a ban on the use of bull bars on the fronts of road vehicles; [17251]

(3) what is his most recent assessment of the numbers of additional road fatalities and serious injuries that are likely in the next two years as a result of collisions involving cars fitted with front bull bars. [17253]

Mr. Norris: We would expect to be in a position to take powers at a national level to ban the fitment of bull bars as aftermarket accessories. However, certain vehicle models with bull bars fitted as original equipment have received European whole vehicle type approval and no EU member state can prevent the free circulation and use of a vehicle so approved.

The Transport Research Laboratory has estimated that an extra 35 deaths and 350 serious injuries to vulnerable road users could result from collisions with vehicles fitted with bull bars. As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Gentleman on the 31 January 1995, Official Report, column 586, we have taken steps to identify specific injury accidents involving bull bars to determine the effects of bull bars in practice. It would be premature to propose legislative action until the results of this exercise are analysed, which should be towards the end of this year.

Fatal Accident Injuries

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 385, and his statement in the answer that the costs of relatives at inquests or fatal accident inquiries are not generally a charge on public funds, if he will list the exceptions to this general practice since 1979 and state the criteria or tests applied in making any such determination.

Mr. Norris: It is not usual Government practice to meet the costs of legal representation for relatives of accident victims because inquests are intended to be informal and legal representation is not considered necessary. Any exceptions to this have been judged on individual merits.

The Lockerbie disaster was the only recent instance where Department of Transport funds have been used to meet relatives' legal costs at a transport-related fatal accident inquiry or at an inquest. As regards other Government Department funds, the Lord Chancellor considered that the wholly exceptional circumstances of the Marchioness disaster, particularly the fact that this is effectively the second inquest, justified making assistance available in this case in the interests of justice.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how many contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16278]

Mr. Norris: Nothing was spent on such activity.

Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many tests for vehicle exhaust emissions were conducted in each of the past five years on heavy goods vehicles; [16943]

(2) how many tests for vehicle exhaust emissions were carried out on coaches in each of the past five years; [16944]

(3) how many tests for vehicle exhaust emissions were carried out on buses in each of the past five years. [16896]

Mr. Norris: All heavy goods vehicles, coaches and buses have their emissions checked as part of their annual roadworthiness test. The number of tests has remained fairly constant over the last five years: with 663,757 HGVS and 86,499 buses and coaches being tested on average each year.

In addition, emissions are checked at the roadside as part of the general enforcement checks carried out by the vehicle inspectorate and also at operators' premises as part of maintenance assessments. The number of such checks carried out over the last five years are as follows:

Year	HGVs	Buses/coaches
1993–94	148,365	37,810
1992–93	146,952	33,023
1991–92	129,850	28,394
1990–91	150,853	27,313
1989–90	119,867	26,991

The 1993–94 figures include 10,589 heavy goods vehicles and 5,165 buses and coaches which had special checks on emissions only.

Air Traffic Services

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received in opposition to the proposed privatisation of national air traffic services. [16712]

(2) what discussions he has had with the chief executives of airport authorities and air traffic control officers concerning the proposed privatisation of national air traffic services; and if he will make a statement. [16713]

Mr. Norris: The then Secretary of State for Transport conducted a public consultation into the proposed privatisation of the national air traffic services between May and July 1994. Comments on the proposal were received, inter alia, from airport authorities and from individual air traffic controllers and their representatives, including the Civil Aviation Authority trade unions. The then Secretary of State for Transport also held a meeting with the Civil Aviation Authority trade unions to discuss the proposal.

Of those who responded to the consultation, privatisation in principle was supported by the airlines, airport operators, ATC providers, and aviation consultants. A majority of individual respondents and their representatives argued that NATS should remain in the public sector. The Secretary of State published a response to the consultation on 22 November 1994; copies were placed in the Library of the House.

The Government continue to favour the proposed privatisation in principle, but wish the concerns raised in the consultation to be properly considered before proceeding further. This process is still under way, and the Secretary of State will announce his intentions in due course.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17033]

Mr. Norris: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Clinical Outcome Indicators

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to publish health service clinical outcome indicators similar to those published in December 1994 by the Secretary of State for Scotland in respect of individual health boards and hospitals in Northern Ireland. [15868]

Mr. Moss: No. I intend to await the outcome of the Department of Health working group which is looking at clinical indicators before taking a decision on publication of indicators in Northern Ireland.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 614, if he will give the costs of water and sewerage charges incurred in respect of the Department's premises in the mainland of Britain. [15933]

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland Office pays water and sewerage charges for two premises in mainland Britain in which they are minor tenants. The charges form a proportion of the annual rental charge which includes the cost of utilities and are not separately identified on the quarterly basis of accounts sent by Property Holdings. It would be possible to provide an answer only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 614, if he will give such information regarding the water and sewerage charges paid by his Department as can be supplied without disproportionate cost. [15932]

Mr. Moss: It is not possible to supply any information except at disproportionate cost.

Special Branch

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to transfer Special Branch and associated covert police agencies from anti-terrorism operations to working against the leading importers/suppliers of illegal drugs. [16412]

Sir John Wheeler: The deployment of Special Branch and associated police covert agencies in anti-terrorist and anti-crime operations is a matter for the Chief Constable. However, as publicly stated recently by the head of the RUC Special Branch, it is currently providing its expertise in combating areas of criminality, including the import and supply of illegal drugs.

Corncrakes

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has a contingency plan and adequate financial resources to offer crofters and farmers conservation grants to help the conservation of corncrakes should this bird species return to Northern Ireland to attempt to breed. [16665]

Mr. Moss: The Department of the Environment will continue to operate a grant system which has been in operation for the past five years for farmers who have on their land corncrakes with an indication of nesting. Discussions have recently taken place between officials and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds on the detailed operation of this scheme which, despite the co-operation of the farming community, has failed to halt the serious decline of this bird.

RUC Officers

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC officers, by rank, are operating, full time, in (a) the anti-drugs unit, (b) the complaints and discipline branch and (c) the anti-racketeering unit. [16410]

Sir John Wheeler: Meetings of the Police Advisory Board took place in January 1988, July 1993 and November 1993. There are no meetings scheduled for 1995.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the evidence of trends in the level of drugs abuse in Northern Ireland during 1993 and 1994; and if he will give details of (a) drugs, by type, seized and their street value and (b) the number of convictions by category. [16409]

Sir John Wheeler: The drug scene in NI is similar to that of the rest of the UK and the Republic of Ireland with the exception of heroin and cocaine abuse, levels of which are extremely low. The trend in NI is for an increasing availability of ecstasy, LSD and cannabis. There is a strong drug culture among young people.

(a) Drugs seized in Northern Ireland 1993 and 1994

	1993	1994
Cannabis	44.5 kilos 419 plants	81.9 kilos (resin) 7.1 kilos (herbal) 66 plants

As the availability of drugs increases, supply outstrips demand and the cost of drugs reduces.

The street values of drugs in NI at present are as follows:

Cannabis: £10 per gram
LSD: £3–5 per tab
Ecstasy: £12–15 per tablet
Amphetamines: £10 per gram

[16415]

Sir John Wheeler: Separate figures are not maintained in respect of motorways.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16588]

Sir John Wheeler: Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. The five editions of the Northern Ireland departmental report produced since 1991 have been published as Command Papers by HMSO, which has borne the printing and publishing costs with the aim of recovering these from the sales revenue.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16587]

Sir John Wheeler: Some 1,400 copies of the Northern Ireland departmental report, Cm 2816, were printed and published. In addition to those copies required by Parliament and the Government Departments and agencies concerned, just under 1,000 copies were produced to satisfy other sales at a price of £22.50 net. The cost of printing and publishing Cm 2816 were borne by HMSO, which aims to recover these costs from sales revenue.

Home Helps

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what policy guidelines are set out in relation to the provision of home helps on holidays such as St. Patrick's day. [16235]

Mr. Moss: Where an individual is assessed as needing the home help service, health and social services boards or trusts are expected to make the necessary arrangements for the service to be provided, including appropriate cover for holiday periods.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what consideration he has given to funding for cross-border councils. [16709]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to receive the report of the planning inquiry into the electricity interconnector with Scotland. [16708]

Mr. Moss: As the scope of the public local inquiry is currently the subject of a judicial review, it is not possible to estimate when the Commissioner's report is likely to be received.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were employed in Northern Ireland (a) full-time and (b) part-time in 1993, 1994 and 1995. [16860]

Mr. Ancram: Estimates of the number of employees in employment in Northern Ireland are not yet available for 1995. The information for 1993 and 1994 is as follows:

1993	393,650	150,080	543,730
1994	394,450	156,240	550,690

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15238]

Sir John Wheeler: The current policy is that Departments can contribute to staff child care costs where this is justified on value for money grounds. The following facilities are currently available.

Department	Facility
Environment	Introduced a Nursery Subsidy Scheme in May 1994. Thirty places were made available where the Department met 35 per cent. of the costs for children attending a registered nursery. The scheme is greatly over-subscribed and places were allocated by means of a ballot. A review is due in May 1995.
Finance and Personnel	No child care or nursery facilities at present but, offer membership of the NI Childminding Association's "Parent Partnership Scheme" for staff applying for maternity/paternity leave.
Agriculture	An emergency childcare pilot scheme, which involved reserving a small number of places in private nurseries, commenced 30 January 1995 for a 3 month trial period. Staff are required to pay for this facility.
Northern Ireland Office (HCS)	A 50 per cent. subsidy on four places provided at a private day nursery in Westminster.
(NICS)	Nil.

The Departments of Education, Health and Social Services and Economic Development offer no child care or nursery facilities.

Department	Facility
Child Support Agency	On 1 September 1993 the CSA introduced a scheme to offer financial assistance to staff with child care costs. The assistance takes the form of a subsidy towards the cost of an employee placing a child in a nursery of the parents choice.

The breakdown of these schemes by grade and gender is listed in the following table:

The breakdown of these schemes by grade and gender is listed in the following table:

	Number

Social Security Officer 2	1
Social Security Officer 1	1

Typist	1
Personal Secretary	2

Deputy Principal Officer	1
Senior Professional Technical Officer	3
Higher Professional Technical Officer	5
Professional Technical Officer	2
Senior Audit Assistant	1
Higher Scientific Officer	1
Gender
Male	17
Female	38

The Northern Ireland civil service also financially assists eight holiday playschemes which cater for the children of staff during school holidays. A breakdown in their use by grade and gender could be provided only at disproportionate costs. However, approximately 290 children per day attended in 1994.

Irish Language Schools (Inspections)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what occasions in each of the past 16 years, any inspector who has reported on an Irish-medium school has not been fluent in the Irish language. [17352]

Social Fund Discretionary Budget

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the Northern Ireland social fund discretionary budget will be for 1995–96. [17951]

Mr. Moss: I am pleased to announce that the social fund gross discretionary budget for 1995–96 will be £31.84 million. £9.76 million will be allocated to grants, £21.98 million to loans and £0.1 million will be held as a contingency reserve. The new allocations represent an increase of almost £2 million over the gross budget set in April 1994.

Details of the individual district budget allocations, together with a note explaining the basis on which they have been made, will be placed in the Library today.

Cash Limits

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he plans to announce any further changes to cash limits within his responsibility. [17952]

Sir John Wheeler [pursuant to his reply, 3 February, c. 919–20]: The cash limit for class XVI, vote 1—the Northern Ireland Office—will be reduced by £3,000,000 from £928,905,000 to £925,905,000. The reduction in the cash limit reflects a projected underspend in police costs and will be used to offset increases elsewhere within the Northern Ireland block.

SCOTLAND

The Union

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the changes which have been made to the government of Scotland following the publication of "Scotland in the Union: A Partnership for Good".

Mr. Lang: The measures outlined in the Government's White Paper "Scotland in the Union: A Partnership for Good" were part of a new and continuing approach to the government of Scotland. They have all been implemented or represent continuing commitments and taken together have made government in Scotland more accountable; emphasised the distinct nature of government policy in Scotland; and ensured that within the Union there is a full recognition, as well as greater understanding, of Scotland's status as a nation.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [16095]

Mr. Lang: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department and its predecessors since 1965 for any reference to the type requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state, and occasional general references are made to persons who are Members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold and at what price. [16624]

Mr. Lang: Some 1,400 copies of the Scottish Office departmental report, Cm 2814, were printed and published, the cost of which was borne by HMSO which aims to recover these costs from sales revenue.

In addition to those copies required by Parliament, Government Departments and agencies, just over 1,100 were produced to satisfy other sales at a price of £18.10 net.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16625]

Mr. Lang: The first Scottish Office departmental report was issued in March 1991. That and subsequent reports have been published as Command Papers by HMSO which has borne the printing and publishing costs with the aim of recovering these from the sales revenue.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16578]

Mr. Lang: At 1 April 1995, my Department, including all its executive agencies, employed 41 staff in the information officer grades. Of these, 21 were designated as "press officers". At 1 April 1979, there were 25 staff in information officers grades—the number designated as "press officers" was not recorded.

Dounreay

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will examine the safety implications for employees and the public of radioactive contamination on and around the Dounreay shore and within the perimeter fence. [16052]

Sir Hector Monro: Detailed investigations of radioactive contamination of soil within the Dounreay site and on the adjoining shore are currently being undertaken by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. The results of these investigations will be considered by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate and Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate, which will have regard to safety implications for the employees and public.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds were in prison or young offenders's institutions (i) in 1993–94 and (ii) at the latest available date. [16055]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of this question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stewart to Mrs. Maria Fyfe, dated 30 March 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Chief Executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to reply to your Question relating to the number of 16 year olds and 17 year old in prisons or young offender institutions in 1993–94 and at the latest available date. I am replying in his absence.

Information on the age categories of the prison population is presently collected only on the basis of young offender (less than 21) and adult. In 1993–94 the average daily remand young offender population was 348 and the sentenced young offender population was 804. The corresponding figures for Friday 24 March were 343 and 744 respectively.

More disaggregate information on age is collected when an individual is received under sentence. In 1993–94 there were 182 sentenced receptions involving 16 year olds and 727 sentenced receptions involving 17 year olds.

It should be noted that sentenced receptions do not equate to "persons received". For example, where a person has several custodial sentences imposed on him by one court in one day this is counted as a reception. Where custodial sentences are imposed on person by two or more courts in one day, however, two receptions are recorded. Also, if a person is reconvicted while serving a custodial sentence and a further custodial sentence is imposed, this is also regarded as a reception.

Environmentally Sensitive Area Schemes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to extend the areas to be covered by environmentally sensitive area schemes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [16373]

Mr. Lang: There are no plans to designate any further areas at present.

Short-term Prisoners (Housing)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what financial provision is to be made to local authorities to provide for funding homes for released short-term prisoners and their families following housing benefit reductions imposed upon them; [16429]

(2) what guidelines he is issuing to local authorities regarding the reductions in housing benefit for short-term prisoners; and if he will make a statement. [16340]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for local housing authorities in the first instance to consider housing need within their areas in conjunction with other relevant bodies. Similarly, social work authorities should assess the need for social work support and residential accommodation. The Department of Social Security issued guidance to local authorities on 10 March on the new benefit regulations affecting, among others, short-term prisoners.

Psychiatric Beds

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the annual cost of a psychiatric bed in hospitals in (a) Renfrewshire, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland in each of the past five years. [16431]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following table has been derived from the Scottish health service costs book and contains the annual cost of a psychiatric bed in hospitals in (a) Renfrewshire, (b) health boards within the Strathclyde region area and (c) all Scotland. Prior to financial year 1991–92 this information was not collected centrally. The health boards within Strathclyde regional council's boundaries are: Ayrshire and Arran, Argyll and Clyde, Greater Glasgow and Lanarkshire.

		Annual cost per bed
	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
a) Renfrewshire	26,607	28,111	29,871
b) Strathclyde	27,198	30,394	33,824
c) Scotland	28,340	32,010	36,035

Gas Pipeline

Dr. A. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place with Premier Transco concerning the trenching or burying in traditional demersal fishing grounds of the proposed gas pipeline between Scotland and Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [16694]

Sir Hector Monro: Officials of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department have been party to discussions involving Premier Transco, representatives of the local fishermen's organisations and the Department of Trade and Industry concerning the issue of a DTI works authorisation for this proposed gas pipeline. I understand that Premier Transco has agreed to trench the proposed pipeline along its entire length and that in areas where trenching alone is regarded as insufficient, the pipeline will be covered with crushed rock profiled to reduce interference with fishing operations.

Well Woman Centres

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each well woman centre; and if he will indicate those that are presently part-funded by health boards and trusts. [16695]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally.

Local Government Reform

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff currently employed by Strathclyde regional council will be re-deployed to (a) the new Inverclyde unitary authority, (b) the new East Renfrewshire unitary authority and (c) the new Glasgow unitary authority. [16697]

Mr. Kynoch: This information is not currently available. Redeployment of staff presently employed by both regional and district councils to the new authorities will be for discussion between existing and new authorities in due course.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to create special prisons for mentally ill prisoners who do not warrant transfer to Carstairs hospital, which would be staffed by prison officers with the appropriate training skills and knowledge to deal with such inmates; and if he will make a statement. [16698]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 30 March 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the creation of special prisons for mentally ill prisoners who do not warrant transfer to Carstairs Hospital.

We have no plans to create special prisons for those prisoners suffering from mental illness. Prison medical officers are responsible for the medical treatment as necessary of such prisoners and can draw on the services of psychiatrists and psychologists. Prisoners may also be transferred to appropriate hospitals if necessary. The Scottish Prison Service is, however, conscious of the special needs of mentally disturbed offenders and will be drawing up guidance for their management in the light of best practice in the community.

Mental Health Treatment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assurance he can give that the resources currently allocated to mental health treatment and care will be retained and not allocated to other parts of the national health service; and if he will make a statement. [16818]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Allocations are made to health boards, as purchasers of health care services, on a weighted capitation basis to enable them to meet the care needs of their resident population. It is for individual boards to decide their priorities for expenditure within the amount available to them.

Chiropody Services

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average length of waiting time for a chiropody appointment in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland; what proposals he has to reduce (i) the waiting time for such appointments and (ii) the return dates for domiciliary visits by chiropodists; and if he will make a statement. [16817]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the staffing levels of departments of chiropody and podiatry in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland and the number of chiropody appointments carried out in each of these departments in the past three years. [16819]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on chiropody staffing levels in Inverclyde are not held centrally. Table A shows the staffing levels in departments of chiropody and podiatry in Strathclyde and Scotland in 1992–94.

Table B shows the numbers of chiropody appointments carried out in Iverclyde, Strathclyde and Scotland over the last three years.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has held with the chairman of the Renfrewshire health care national health service trust concerning the staffing of the department of chiropody and podiatry; and if he will make a statement. [16815]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Prisoners (Release under Licence)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of prisoners eligible for release under licence were successful in achieving release in the last year for which figures are available. [16826]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is published annually in the reports of the Parole Board for Scotland, copies of which are available in the House Libraries.

Prisons

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisons are currently assessed to be overcrowded; and if he will list them, indicating the number of places by which they exceed their quota. [16827]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 30 March 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about those prisons currently assessed as overcrowded.

During any year a number of cells are unavailable for use for a variety of reasons, including redecoration or damage repair work, refurbishment (including, in some cases, to install night sanitation) or for other policy reasons (eg being retained in the event of an emergency). The position on utilisation of available places varies between establishments, taking into account, among other things, that "local" prisons require to hold prisoners for short periods on remand from the Courts; that some establishments are suitable only for low security categories; and that there is a need to house separately various prisoner groups (such as those serving long sentences, or young offenders).

Against that background the information you requested—reflecting the position as at Friday 17 March—is set out in the table attached.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the costing of the closure programme for psychiatric hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [16814]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Closures of psychiatric hospitals normally result from a joint assessment of patients needs involving both the local authority and the health board. Where reprovision in the community is proposed, appropriate financial resources towards the cost of that provision transfer from the NHS to the local authority.

Value for money is, of course, taken into account in the health board's overall planning.

Mental Illness Specific Grant

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his proposed level of funding for the mental illness specific grant in the financial year 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [16816]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The level of the grant in 1996–97 will depend on estimates of the need for services, the adequacy of existing levels of service, the capacity of organisations to arrange services, possible sources of alternative funding and what can be afforded. Estimates for planning purposes will be provided to local authorities in the summer. Final figures will be announced later in the year.

Water Authorities

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures have so far been carried out regarding the appointment of chief executives for the three new Scottish water authorities; if the successful candidates have been offered appointments; if any of those offered an appointment are senior officials of the Scottish Office; when he expects to make a public announcement about the appointments; and if he will make a statement. [17300]

Mr. Kynoch: An executive search consultancy, Andrew Rait Ltd., was appointed in August 1994 to assist in identifying suitable candidates. Advertisements appeared in the Scottish and UK press in November 1994.

A short list of candidates has been interviewed and my right hon. Friend expects to make formal offers of appointment to the successful candidates in the near future. An announcement will follow.

Scottish Court Service

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has reached about executive agency status for the Scottish Court Service and what targets he will set for the Scottish Court Service. [17950]

Mr. Lang: I have decided that the Scottish Court Service will become an executive agency under the next steps initiative from 3 April 1995. I am arranging for copies of the framework document to be placed in the Libraries of the House. I shall remain accountable to Parliament for the activities of the Scottish Court Service. I am delegating to the chief executive full managerial authority for the agency and its day-to-day operation. For the future, I envisage greater flexibilities to help the Scottish Court Service meet increasingly demanding targets and further improve its standards of service.

Following consultation with the Lord President of the Court of Session and the Sheriffs Principal, I have set the following key performance targets for the Scottish Court Service for 1995–96:

1. That no cases should fall as a result of the statutory time limits being breached.

2. Targets for Waiting Periods:

— 80 per cent. of diets allocated in the Court of Session within waiting periods set by the Lord President;

— 80 per cent. of criminal and justiciary appeals allocated to a roll within waiting periods set by the Lord Justice General;

— 75 per cent. of Sheriff Courts to report summary criminal waiting periods agreed with the Sheriffs Principal, currently 12 weeks;

— 85 per cent. of Sheriff Courts to report waiting periods between request for ordinary civil proof or debate and diet agreed with the Sheriffs Principal, currently 12 weeks;

— 80 per cent. of Sheriff Courts reporting lack of time adjournments at 5 per cent. or lower.

3. Targets for quality of service and provision:

— To achieve 95 per cent. of the standards for administrative business in the Court of Session and the High Court of Justiciary set by the Lord President/Lord Justice General;

— 95 per cent. of Sheriff Courts to achieve the overall standards for administrative business agreed with Sheriffs Principal;

— 70 per cent. of courthouses to meet the "Coming to Court" standards set out in the Justice Charter for Scotland.

4. Cost and efficiency:

— staff, accommodation and administrative costs: to be kept within £1,060 per court sitting day;

— 70 per cent. of the total costs of civil business in the Court of Session and in the Sheriff Courts to be recovered through fee income.

Full details of the performance measures, including the agreed waiting periods, administrative standards and "Coming to Court" standards are set out in the Scottish Court Service framework document.

Cash Limits

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits and external financing limits for 1994–95 within his responsibility. [17949]

Mr. Lang: The cash limit for class XIV, vote 3, training programmes, roads and transport services and industrial support, Scotland, will be reduced by £200,000 from £902,139,000 to £901,939,000. This decrease takes account of a reduced requirement for regional enterprise grant and will be used to make a contribution towards providing for an EFL for David MacBrayne Ltd. of £0.8 million which has arisen due to the transfer of surplus funds from DML to the Secretary of State. In addition, the provision for an EFL for DML will be offset by a reduction in the EFL for the Scottish Transport Group from zero to minus £0.6 million. These changes will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15236]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department makes available 167 nursery day care places for children under five and holiday playscheme places for children five to 12 years old, at a variety of locations. These arrangements generally involve a subsidy of about 50 per cent. of the running costs involved.

A breakdown of staff by grade and gender using these facilities is shown in the following table.

Grade	Nursery users[1]		Holiday play scheme users[2]
	Male	Female	Male	Female
Administrative Assistant	2	8	—	15
Administrative Officer	8	48	2	35

Personal Secretary	—	7	—	2
Executive Officer	9	25	2	20
Higher Executive Officer	19	22	2	2
Senior Executive Officer	6	5	1	6
Grade 7	6	1	4	8
Grade 6	2	—	—	—
Grade 5	2	2	—	—
Total	56	118	11	88

[1] Refers to the number of staff who are currently using nursery places. Includes 53 places used on a part-time basis and 33 places jointly by spouses/partners who both work for the Department.

[2] Refers to the number of staff who have used the holiday play schemes over the past financial year.

Publicity

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 795, what was the total expenditure on all forms of publicity by his Department and its agencies for (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94; and what is his estimate for 1994–95. [17292]

Mr. Howard: Total expenditure on all forms of publicity by my Department and its agencies in 1992–93 was £13,130,371. The total in 1993–94 was £14,486,094.

The estimate for 1994–95 is £15,206,903.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the extent to which the ethnic minority grant paid to South Thames TEC has been spent on the purposes for which it was provided; and if he will make a statement. [17246]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My officials are in touch with the Receiver about ethnic minority grant payments made to South Thames training and enterprise council. My right hon. and noble Friend will write to the hon. Member about this matter as soon as possible.

Animal Experiments (Tobacco)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many project licences have been granted for studies using animals to assess the safety or effects of environmental tobacco smoke or passive smoking since 1987; [16874]

(2) how many animals were used in research involving tobacco and/or its products in each year from 1987 to 1993. [16873]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Seven project licences permitting the study of tobacco or its constituents in conscious animals have been granted since 1987.

In the period 1987 to 1993, 3,077 animals were used in the safety testing of tobacco or its products. Prior to 1 January 1995, figures for the number of animals used in fundamental or applied research involving tobacco or its products were not separately recorded.

Crimes (Wildlife)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what central record is kept of criminal activity concerning wildlife; and if he will make a statement. [16936]

Mr. Maclean: None. The investigation of crime is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Prisons (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the Prison Service establishments he has visited since his appointment as Home Secretary; for what duration each visit lasted; and if he will make a statement on the discussions he had with the prison authorities in each prison establishment. [16761]

Mr. Howard: Since my appointment, I have visited the following Prison Service establishments:

Aldington
Aylesbury
Belmarsh
Blantyre House
Bristol
Brixton
Cardiff
Channings Wood
Dartmoor
Reading
Swinfen Hall
Wandsworth
Whitemoor
Wormwood Scrubs
Wymott

Each visit lasted for about two hours. During these visits I have spoken to a wide range of staff on a large number of subjects.

Victims Charter

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Department of Health concerning the introduction of a charter of rights for victims whose offenders are deemed to be mentally ill comparable to those set out in the victims charter; and if he will make a statement. [16865]

Mr. Maclean: The principles in the victims charter apply to all victims of crime. The Home Office and the Department of Health keep in close contact about matters affecting the interests of victims in cases where the offender is found to be mentally ill.

Young Offenders

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been initiated by the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last three years utilising the powers contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 relating to the requirement of parents to pay fines, compensation orders or prosecution costs imposed on juveniles; and if he will make a statement. [16839]

Mr. Maclean: Information collected centrally by my Department identifies only the number of young offenders sentenced whose parents, or guardians, were ordered to pay fines and compensation. Table 7.27 of the Command Paper 2680, "Criminal statistics England and Wales 1993," refers to this. Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further measures he proposes to achieve the rehabilitation of young offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 9 March 1995]: My right hon. and learned Friend published on 9 March the 1995 national standards for the supervision of offenders in the community. The new standards include a number of provisions which should reinforce the effectiveness of supervision orders and probation orders in preventing further offending by young offenders.

He published on 15 March the consultation document, "Strengthening Punishment in the Community," which invites views on the creation of a new, integrated community sentence and on its application to younger offenders. Under these proposals, the courts would be enabled to specify activities under a community sentence which are directed at the prevention of reoffending.

We expect to issue shortly the invitation to tender for the construction and management of the first two secure training centres. The secure training order will provide a new power for the courts to sentence persistent young offenders to custodial periods of between three months and 12 months, to be served in purpose-built establishments offering a high-quality regime of education and training, followed by a similar period of compulsory supervision. We shall bring this new and demanding sentence into force as soon as the new centres are available.

In addition, the Prison Service agency will be reviewing the use made by young offender institutions of sentence planning to meet the individual needs of each young offender and to ensure that work began in custody can be built on during the period under supervision in the community after release, so as to maximise prospects of rehabilitation.

We have also received a report from Prison Service officials on their visit to boot camps in the USA and have asked for proposals to be brought forward for an innovative, demanding regime for young offenders. If appropriate, the proposals will incorporate the more positive aspects of the American boot camps.

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proportion of prisoners held in establishments where prisoners have the opportunity to exceed the minimum visiting entitlement laid down in the prison and young offenders institution rules and standing orders for each of the past 12 months in prisons in England and Wales. [16269]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 30 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the proportion of prisoners held in establishments where prisoners have the opportunity to exceed the minimum visiting entitlements laid down in Prison and YOI Rules and Standing Orders.

In February and March 1994, 99% of prisoners were held in establishments which allowed prisoners the opportunity to exceed minimum visiting entitlements. From April 1994 up to and including the end of February 1995, all establishments have been providing prisoners with the opportunity to exceed the minimum visiting entitlements laid down in the Prison and YOI Rules and Standing Orders.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16220]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The executive agencies of my Department and other public bodies under its authority are subject to the guidance contained in "A Working Guide for Government Information Officers" issued by the Office of Public Service and Science. A copy is available in the Library. The guide covers proprietorial and value for money issues which relate to the use of public relations consultancies. Tendering procedures are set out in the Home Office procurement manual.

Prison Escapes

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of escapes from prison establishments and from escorts for each of the past 12 months in England and Wales. [16259]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 30 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for the total numbers of escapes from prison establishments and from escort for the past 12 months in England and Wales.

Prison Costs

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will itemise where the costs fall for prisoners held (a) in police cells and (b) by the Prison Service. [16392]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 30 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking where the costs fall for prisoners held (a) in police cells and (b) by the Prison Service.

As a general principle, the Prison Service reimburses police authorities for all reasonable additional costs incurred by them as a result of the police holding prisoners, when these are duties which would normally be undertaken by Prison Service staff.

These costs are met from the provision voted by Parliament to cover the costs of the Prison Service, as are the costs of all prisoners held directly by the Prison Service.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost per prisoner per night (a) of a prisoner held in a police cell and (b) of a prisoner held in the custody of the Prison Service. [16391]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 30 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on the average cost per night (a) of a prisoner held in a police cell and (b) of a prisoner held in the custody of the Prison Service.

In 1993–94 the average daily cost of holding a prisoner in a police cell was £250. The average net operating cost per prisoner place, for prisoners held within Prison Service establishments, was £22,712 per year, which produces a daily cost of approximately £62.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16642]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of production and circulation borne by the Home Office was £22,265. I understand from HMSO that, as at 24 March, 2,000 copies had been produced for sale. The cover price is £14.55. I am placing a copy of the circulation list in the Library.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of producing and circulating the departmental annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16643]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. Data for the five years of publication are as follows—costs borne by the Home Office, calculated at 1993–94 prices using the gross domestic product deflator:

Production and Circulation

Year	£
1991	44.175
1992	31.841
1993	20.360

[16267]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 30 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of proved offences of assault at disciplinary proceedings in each of the past 12 months.

[16264]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 30 March 1995:

Parole

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners eligible for parole was successful in achieving parole in the last year for which figures are available. [16689]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 March 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 30 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the proportion of prisoners eligible for parole who were paroled.

The parole statistics are published in the Annual Reports of the Parole Board. The latest issue is for 1993 (Cm 450), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

The statistics for 1994 will be published in the 1994 issue of the Annual Report of the Parole Board. They comprise prisoners considered under the 1991 Criminal Justice Act and those under previous legislation. Provisional figures for 1994 show that 42 per cent of prisoners considered were paroled.

Written Answers to Questions

HEALTH

Nursing Staff

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of nursing staff were at any one time (a) on fixed-term contracts and (b) bank or agency staff (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last 10 years, in each regional health authority. [15368]

Mr. Sackville: Information on the percentage of bank and agency nursing and midwifery staff will be placed in the Library. Figures for 1994 onwards are not yet available.

Data on the percentage of nursing and midwifery staff on fixed-term contracts are not available centrally since this is a matter for local determination.

Speech Therapists

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many speech therapists per 1,000 population are provided for children in (a) Southwark, (b) Birmingham, (c) Manchester, (d) Kingston, (e) Lewisham and (f) England. [15325]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Dental Treatments

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the dental treatments currently available under the national health service, together with the amount paid by the Government to general dental practices for each treatment, for the five most recent years for which figures are available. [15402]

Mr. Malone: The information will be placed in the Library.

Prescription Fraud

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is taking to reduce the level of prescription fraud. [16887]

Mr. Malone: From 1 April 1995 patients who obtain dispensed items from community pharmacists or dispensing doctors will be asked to complete a written declaration stating the specific grounds for claiming exemption or remission of the prescription charge due, or the amount of the charge paid. The revised declarations will improve the effectiveness of confirmatory checks and are a significant first step towards reducing prescription fraud.

I am considering what further measures are necessary.

Birth Certificates

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the purpose of asking applicants for full and short birth certificates if they are the subject of the certificate or a relative of the subject. [17159]

Mr. Sackville: In their White Paper "Registration: proposals for change", Cm 939, the Government proposed new arrangements for the purchase of certificates of recent events and a different approach to the prevention of intrusions into privacy, personation and fraud. Statutory powers would be introduced to require applicants for certificates to identify themselves and complete a more comprehensive application form. They would also be required to state their relationship to the subject of the required certificate and the purpose for which the certificate was to be used. The application forms now in use by the Registrar General ask for this additional information, but applicants cannot, at present, be obliged to provide the answers.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how long application forms for full and short version birth certificates are kept after the certificates have been issued. [17161]

Mr. Sackville: The Registrar General currently retains application forms relating to the issue of birth certificates for a minimum of five years.

Thyroid Cancer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each of the last 10 years the number of cases of thyroid cancer that have been reported in (a) North Western, (b) Mersey, (c) Northern, (d) Yorkshire, (e) Trent and (f) West Midlands regional health authorities; and what the national average was for each of the years. [17137]

Mr. Sackville: The information is published in tables 2 and 7 of "Cancer statistics, registrations, series MB1, Nos. 11–22", HMSO, copies of which are available in the Library.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to improve the quality of diagnosis and certification of deaths involving asbestos-related diseases. [17078]

Mr. Sackville: Diagnosis is a professional issue and we would look primarily to the health care professions to provide guidance on it.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her current assumptions about the levels of asbestos-related deaths in the United Kingdom. [17080]

Mr. Sackville: The recorded numbers of deaths from asbestos-related diseases continue to grow. Such diseases are nearly always the result of occupational exposure to asbestos fibres, and are prescribed as industrial diseases. Asbestos-related diseases generally take a long time to develop. The deaths now occurring, and most of those expected to occur in the future, reflect past industrial exposure before the introduction of the controls whose enforcement is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Royal Liverpool University Hospital

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that the Royal Liverpool

University hospital obtains a fire certificate from the Merseyside fire brigade. [17221]

Herbal Medicines

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many herbal medicine products are currently being sold in Britain without a licence. [17130]

Mr. Sackville: All medicinal products on the market in the United Kingdom are subject to the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations Etc.) Regulations 1994 unless otherwise exempt. The Medicines Control Agency will investigate any case which appears to breach this.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average waiting time for admission by region in each of the last five years. [13396]

Mrs. Bottomley: I have today published the Government's response to the Select Committee report, Cm 2826. A copy has been placed in the Library.

The Government welcome the Committee's report on priority setting in the national health service. It sets out a thoughtful and wide-ranging investigation of the issues, from the Government setting national priorities to the choices faced by individual clinicians every day. The Government welcome the Select Committee's support for many of the policies that they are pursuing in this area.

EDUCATION

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the Internet electronic mail address of (a) her Department and (b) each Minister in her Department; and if she will make a statement on her Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17742]

Mr. Forth: The Department has a mailbox on the Internet—info@dfe.gov.uk—for general inquiries to the Department's public inquiry unit. This provides a service to those who have access to the Internet and prefer to use electronic mail as a method of communication.

The Government's consultation paper on broadband communications in education will be published after Easter.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the budget for the "Schools Update", 1993 to 1995, publication.

Mr. Forth: "Schools Update" is the Department's termly newsletter for school teachers and governors. Over the last two years, costs of producing and distributing copies are as follows:

Mr. Forth: The booklet "Education Means Business" was published as part of a wider strategy to promote the private finance initiative in education. Although it is difficult to separate the impact of the publication from other aspects of the initiative, about 2,000 inquiries have been received within the Department specifically referring to the booklet.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 17 March, Official Report, columns 732–34, what estimate she has made of the individual or combined cost of the campaigns and publications (a) DFE summer roadshow, (b) European choice booklet, (c) grant-maintained schools information and (d) the updated parents charter. [17297]

Mr. Robin Squire: For the financial year 1994–95, the Devon local education authority's planned expenditure on "management and administration" amounted to £10,163 per school. This figure relates to all county, voluntary and special schools maintained by the authority and is derived from the budget statement published by the authority under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was her response to the open letter to her from the staff of St. Philip's Roman Catholic sixth form college dated 22 March. [17160]

EMPLOYMENT

Union Carbide Corporation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now publish the safety report regarding the Union Carbide Corporation plant at Wilton, Teesside, submitted by ICI to the Health and Safety Executive in June 1989 and updated in June 1992.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive is currently discussing with the companies whether they would consent to the release of all or part of the report and I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Trade Unions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what representations he has received in favour of the trade union activity as a stabilising and helpful force in the workplace; [15657]

(2) what is his policy towards the retaining of union representatives experienced in understanding the employers' and employees' positions in a workplace; [15659]

(3) what assessment he has made as to the benefits for employers and employees of the maintenance of union facilities at workplaces; [15658]

(4) what action he takes to discourage employers from phasing out fair and legitimate union activity. [15660]

Mr. Oppenheim: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet trade union delegations periodically and listen to their views on their role. The Government believe that unions can make a useful contribution on issues close to the workplace, but to do so they must be accountable, well informed and able to speak with knowledge and authority. However, the Government also believe employers and employees should be free to conduct their own affairs with the minimum of interference. Individual workers must be free to decide whether to be members of trade unions and the law protects them from dismissal or acts of victimisation on grounds of trade union membership or activities. Employers must be free to decide whether or not to recognise trade unions for bargaining purposes.

Where an employer chooses to recognise an independent trade union, employees who are members of that union become entitled to reasonable time off during working hours to take part in any trade union activity. Employees who are officials of that union become entitled to reasonable time off with pay to carry out certain trade union duties and undergo training relevant to those duties.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17041]

Miss Widdecombe: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department and its predecessors since 1965 for any reference to the type requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. Frequent references are made to officers of state and occasional general reference are made to persons who are Members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Agencies

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of (a) building workers, (b) lorry drivers and (c) secretaries have been (i) directly employed or (ii) employed by agencies in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [17491]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested for 1991 to 1994 is provided in the following table. Comparable information prior to this is not available.

South London Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many contracts were issued by SOLOTEC to provide training for people with special needs in the financial year 1994–95; and how many are expected to be issued in 1995–96. [17431]

Mr. Paice: SOLOTEC issued 10 contracts providing training for special needs in the financial year 1994–95. Subject to final contracting, it is anticipated that there will be eight special needs contracts issued for 1995–96 for the current four boroughs. Provision for the boroughs of Greenwich and Lewisham is still under discussion.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if elected local authority representatives are eligible for the expanded board of SOLOTEC. [17432]

Mr. Paice: The eligibility conditions for training and enterprise council directors are laid down in the Department's contract with TECs. These require that at least two thirds are top executives from the private sector and that all TEC directors from the public sector must be at chief executive level or its equivalent. Any new directors recruited to SOLOTEC's board must meet these requirements. Status as an elected authority representative does not disqualify someone from being a TEC director so long as the eligibility conditions are met.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training providers are currently under contract to SOLOTEC for the provision of (a) training for youth credits, (b) training for work courses and (c) investors in people on 1 March; how many are expected to be contracted as at 1 April; and what advice he has received about the size of the supplier base for SOLOTEC when it accepts responsibility for training provision in Lewisham and Greenwich post-24 April. [17433]

Mr. Paice: SOLOTEC had 20 training providers under contract for youth credits and 24 for training for work as at 1 March 1995. Subject to final contracting, it is anticipated that there will be 20 youth credits providers and 18 training for work contractors from 1 April. SOLOTEC does not contract with providers for investors in people as the training and enterprise council has an in-house team which works directly with employers. Provision for the boroughs of Greenwich and Lewisham after 24 April 1995 is still under discussion.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training guarantees were made in the financial year 1994–95 to young people in the area covered by SOLOTEC; and how many are expected to be made in 1995–96. [17430]

Mr. Paice: Some 2,335 youth training guarantees were made in 1994–95 to young people in the area covered by SOLOTEC. The figure for expected guarantee starts in 1995–96 in the current SOLOTEC area is 2,250.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training providers are under contract to the receiver for South Thames TEC for the provision of (a) training for youth credits, (b) training for work courses and (c) investors in people as at 1 March; how many are expected to be contracted as at 1 April; and how many of these contracts he expects to be renewed by SOLOTEC by 1 May. [17434]

Mr. Paice: As at 1 March 1995, South Thames training and enterprise council had 41 training providers under contract for youth credits, 45 for training for work and 25 for investors in people. It is not possible to estimate how many of these providers will still be under contract to the TEC at 1 April 1995 or how many of these providers may be offered new contracts by SOLOTEC by 1 May 1995.

It is for SOLOTEC to determine which providers it wishes to contract with to provide services in the boroughs of Greenwich and Lewisham.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed by the receiver for South Thames TEC on (a) 1 February, and (b) 1 March; and how many are expected to be employed on 1 April and 1 May. [17435]

Mr. Paice: I understand from the receiver that the number of people employed by him at South Thames training and enterprise council was 82 on 1 February and 70 on 1 March 1995. The figure is expected to be 46 on 1 April. I am unable to estimate what the figure will be on 1 May.

Labour Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will provide a regional breakdown of the most recent labour force survey to identify separately the numbers of employed and self-employed people in part-time work who could not find full-time work, expressing the data by percentage, gender and age; [16103]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown by region and gender from the latest labour force survey of (a) the number of employees in temporary jobs because they could not find permanent employment and (b) the total number of employees in temporary jobs. [16105]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 March 1995]: This information is available from the labour force survey and can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

United States Wages

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is held by his Department about the minimum wage levels operating in Washington DC and the 50 states of the United States of America. [16927]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 29 March 1995]: The information is given is the following table. The federal minimum wage is currently $4.25 an hour and has been since 1 April 1991. Figures in the table set out the minimum hourly wage rates under state laws.

* District of Columbia and Puerto Rico are not states of the USA.

1. Where a state is shown as having a lower rate than the federal minimum of $4.25 this would apply only to workers whose work involves no interstate commerce. In practice, such a condition will apply to only a small minority of workers. Most workers in these states will be covered by the federal rate.

Health and Safety

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the details of the industrialists and insurance companies consulted by Touche Ross and the Health and Safety Executive in preparing HSC report 92/129. [17332]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 30 March 1995]: No. The basis on which the consultation was carried out did not include publicising the details.

TRANSPORT

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what outline contingency plans or policy options his Department has drawn up to provide for the reduction, by a range of percentages, of carbon dioxide emissions beyond 2000 from the United Kingdom transport sector. [16956]

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom climate change programme document—Cm 2427, published in January 1994—sets out the policy measures for meeting the United Kingdom commitment to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and other greenhouse gases across the whole economy up to 2000. Chapter 10 looks at some of the policy options beyond 2000. UK policies and measures for beyond 2000 will need to be decided in the context of international agreement on future commitments. The first conference of parties to the framework convention on climate change is currently taking place in Berlin.

Railways

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce British Rail's and Railtrack's external finance contributions for 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [18277]

Mr. Watts: British Rail's external finance contribution for 1994–95 will be £310 million. Railtrack's EFC will be £316 million. The railway industry external finance limit for this year will be £1,560 million, made up as follows:

	£ million
OPRAF and MRG grants	2,009
British Rail EFL	–310
Railtrack EFL	–316
EPS EFL	177
Total EFL	1,560

In setting the overall industry EFL and those for the individual businesses, we have taken account of BR's needs for additional resources—£64 million—as a result of working capital movements which have an unfavourable impact on BR. A number of further factors have also been taken into account. These include the final apportionment, between BR and Railtrack, of the costs of the signalling dispute. The EFLs also reflect the latest forecast of the BR—Railtrack trading account; and they include upward adjustment of £87 million to grant paid by the franchising director. This adjustment to grant comprises claims submitted by BR and accepted by the franchising director to the value of £52 million, and a £35 million grant payment to BR carried over from 1993–94. There is also a £2 million downward adjustment to the total of metropolitan railway grants.

Rail Passengers

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was (a) the number of passengers travelling on sleepers from London to Fort William and Fort William to London and (b) the percentage of capacity for each month over the last three years for which figures are available. [17302]

Mr. Watts: The number of passengers travelling on the London–Fort William sleeper between 1991–92 and 1993–94 was:

1991–92: 13,500
1992–93: 14,600
1993–94: 14,600

The percentage of available capacity used during the 1993–94 winter season was 50 per cent. and during the summer season 60 per cent. Figures are not available for 1991–92 and 1992–93, or on a month-by-month basis.

Great Western Railways

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that the tender document for the Great Western region includes a requirement to run services to and from Paddington to Castle Cary, Westbury and Pewsey, and a commitment that the Reading to Taunton rail link will remain in existence for the foreseeable future. [17529]

Mr. Watts: The franchising director's consultation document on Great Western includes a requirement to run services to and from Paddington to Castle Cary, Westbury and Pewsey. All services in both directions stopping at Castle Cary will also be required to stop at Taunton. The consultation period finishes on 31 March, and the franchising director will announce the Great Western passenger services requirement after consideration of the responses.

Sleeper Trains

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that the West Highland sleeper trains to Fort William will be kept in service in accordance with section 37 of the Railways Act 1993 until the consultation procedures for line closure which Parliament has laid down for the protection of the travelling public under that section have been carried out. [17496]

Mr. Watts: Section 37 of the Railways Act 1993 applies where the person providing all railway passenger services on any line or from any station proposes to discontinue all such services on that line or from that station.

I understand that the franchising director has not received from British Rail any notice of a proposal under that section relating to the discontinuance of any railway passenger services in Scotland.

Air Safety (Leases)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that all aircraft granted approval for (a) wet and (b) dry leasing by United Kingdom operators are maintained to required International Civil Aviation Organisation standards. [16297]

Mr. Norris: The leasing of aircraft by EC airlines is governed by EC Council regulation (EC) No. 1407/92. Under article 10 of this regulation, an airline licensed by a member state has to obtain the approval of its own licensing authority in order to operate a foreign registered aircraft. For the purposes of this regulation, the Civil Aviation Authority is required to approve any application by United Kingdom operators to lease foreign aircraft.

Before granting approval to UK airlines for both dry leases—the lease of an aircraft without crew—and wet leases—the lease of an aircraft with crew—the CAA is required to satisfy itself that the aircraft will be operated to acceptable safety standards equivalent to UK national standards.

For short-term wet leases, it has been agreed that, provided the foreign aircraft is registered in a state that is a signatory to the Chicago convention, prior approval is not required. This is to meet the operational requirements of UK operators where, due to unforseen circumstances, they might be unable to use their own aircraft at short notice.

Aircraft Movements

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last year for which figures are available an aeroplane touched down on United Kingdom land having originated its journey (a) in a foreign country and (b) in a country outside the European Union. [16671]

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority has supplied the following in relation to full reporting airports for 1994: (a) 463,416 and (b) 141,766. These figures do not include business and private light aircraft and military movements, which are not available, or arrivals at smaller airports, for which the statistics do not separately identify flights originating outside the EU.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the statement contained in the air accidents investigation branch bulletin No. 3/95 concerning the lack of a system in place to allow the joint aviation authorities to respond as a body to safety recommendations raised by national investigating authorities; and what actions he is taking in response to this situation. [16901]

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority will be raising this matter with the joint aviation authorities next month.

Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the number of roadside checks within the Greater London area on faulty exhaust emissions on motor cars and lorries in each of the last three months. [17233]

Mr. Norris: The number of vehicles checked at specific exhaust emissions roadside checks was as follows:

	December	January	February
a: heavy goods vehicles	46	27	22
b: cars (including light goods vehicles)	74	1	76

In addition, a visual assessment is made of vehicle emissions at other general roadside enforcement checks. The details for the last three months are:

	December	January	February
a: heavy goods vehicles	194	131	169
b: cars (including light goods vehicles)	75	28	53

Driving Licences

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to abolish the charge to motorists over 70 years of age required to renew their driving licences. [17649]

Mr. Norris: We have no plans to abolish the £6 fee for renewing driving licences from age 70.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution, Doncaster

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has available on air quality in south Yorkshire and Doncaster, with particular reference to quantities of black smoke, nitrogen oxides and carbon dioxide. [16706]

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment undertakes continuous automatic monitoring of the pollutants nitrogen dioxide and carbon monoxide at Sheffield. In addition, my Department, in co-operation with local authorities, operates a number of non-automatic national monitoring networks including those measuring the levels of black smoke and nitrogen dioxide. This includes monitoring of nitrogen dioxide in Doncaster, four sites, and Rotherham, four sites; and of black smoke at Doncaster, five sites; Barnsley, four sites; Sheffield, two sites; Grimethorpe, two sites; Brampton; Cudworth; Dinnington; Goldthorpe; Hoyland Nether; Maltby; Wath-upon-Dearne; Wombwell; and Worsbrough bridge.

A detailed summary of data covering the aforementioned pollutants at sites in south Yorkshire and Doncaster has been placed in the Library of the House.

High Sheriffs

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if high sheriffs will continue in counties proposed to be replaced by unitary authorities; what provision will be made in these counties for back-up staff for the lord lieutenant or the high sheriff; and if Berkshire will retain its title as a royal county. [16869]

Mr. Curry: In Berkshire, although the county council will be abolished, the county area will remain. Along with its lord lieutenant, it will retain its high sheriff and its title as a royal county. As regards other areas, we have yet to take decisions on Cleveland. High sheriffs will be appointed for the new counties of Bristol and the east riding of Yorkshire, and the remaining parts of Avon and Humberside will be associated variously with neighbouring counties for ceremonial purposes. We expect that local authorities will want to continue to provide support to their lord lieutenant and high sheriffs.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total level of (a) usable and (b) set-aside capital receipts for each local authority in England; and what estimate he has made of the proportion of set-aside receipts which remain available. [17042]

Mr. Curry: A list of the amounts of the total usable capital receipts held by each authority in England was placed in the Library of the House in response to the question of Thursday 9 February 1995 from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, column 343.

A list has also been placed in the Library of the amounts set aside by each authority as provision for credit liabilities and not yet applied. These include amounts set aside both from capital receipts and revenue. Separate figures are not available.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he makes of the amount by which carbon dioxide emissions in 2000 will exceed those in 1990, in the case of (a) the USA, (b) Canada and (c) Australia. [16951]

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend has made no separate estimate of the carbon emissions of other countries in 2000. Estimates by each country are included in their national programmes submitted under the UN framework convention on climate change.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government will be supporting the alliance of small island states' proposed target for the carbon dioxide emissions of industrial countries, of a reduction of 20 per cent. of the 1990 level in 2005. [16953]

Mr. Atkins: No. My right hon. Friend has called for developed countries to commit themselves to a challenging but achievable objective of reducing total greenhouse gas emissions to between 5 and 10 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010 within the framework of the convention.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates his Department has arrived at, assuming current trends for global carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gas emissions continue, of the likely date of the disappearance of the islands of (a) Trinidad and (b) Tobago. [16954]

Mr. Atkins: We have made no such estimates.

Climate Change Convention

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether United Kingdom Government representatives at the first conference of the parties for the climate change convention will support the proposal for an interim report on the Intergovernment Panel on Climate Change work on the cost-benefit analysis of global warming to be presented to and discussed at the meeting. [16957]

Mr. Atkins: There is no such proposal on the agenda for the first conference of the parties. The IPCC's second assessment report is not expected to be published until early 1996.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make arrangements to discuss with the high commissioner for the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago the United Kingdom Government's stance at the first conference of the parties for the climate change convention. [16955]

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend expects to hold discussions with the representatives of many countries during the conference.

Allerton Outreach Team

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what future funding has been agreed to support the Allerton outreach team; and if he will make a statement. [17255]

Mr. Curry: The Allerton estate is the subject of a comprehensive programme of housing and environmental improvements costing £31.9 million. It is being supported by £20.75 million estate action commitment under the single regeneration budget. We approved the first phase of work in December 1994. The Employment Service undertook to fund jointly with Bradford council, and for a limited three-month period until March 1995, the cost of outreach work to help unemployed adults access the training and employment opportunities created by the estate action programme. Discussions have been taking place with the council to explore how the scheme might be extended into 1995–96. Bradford training and enterprise council has offered to contribute £10,000 towards the cost of an outreach worker in 1995–96, and to arrange for up to £10,000-worth of guidance vouchers to be ring-fenced for use by Allerton's residents. It is hoped that the local authority will also make a contribution. These discussions are continuing.

Cash Limits

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to his Department's cash limit for 1994–95. [18062]

Mr. Gummer: I propose to make the following changes:

a. The DOE/OES—other environmental services—non-voted cash limit will be increased by £15,828,000 from £30,390,000 to £46,218,000. This increase reflects the take-up of end year flexibility (£2,384,000), as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–34; a transfer of £580,000 from the vote 5—central environmental services etc.—cash limit from savings there; and a technical transfer of £12,864,000 from the DOE/NT—new towns—cash limit.

b. The DOE/HC—Housing Corporation—non-voted cash limit, covering capital expenditure financed by the Housing Corporation in England, will be increased by £2,250,000 from £1,484,540,000 to £1,486,790,000. This increase reflects transfers from vote 5 and vote 8—revenue support grant, payment of non-domestic rates, Valuation Office services etc., England—and will be used to fund additional expenditure under the corporation's approved development programme.

c. The DOE/LACAP—local authority capital—non-voted cash limit will be increased by £44,000 from £2,221,200,000 to £2,221,244,000. The increase will be matched by a corresponding reduction in the DOE/NT cash limit. This results from the provision of additional supplementary credit approval resources to Wrekin district council to purchase residual rented housing stock from the Commission for the New Towns.

d. The DOE/RI—regeneration initiatives— non-voted cash limit will be increased by £321,000 from £1,298,357,000 to £1,298,678,000. The increase will allow the issue of an all capital purpose supplementary credit approval in respect of the East Manchester regeneration programme grant expenditure. The increase reflects the transfer of £321,000 from the cash limit for class VII, vote 5, which will be reduced accordingly.

e. The DOE/NT—new towns—non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £11,280,000 from—£123,346,000 to —£134,626,000. This net reduction is the result of an increase of £1,628,000, reflecting the take-up of end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–34; and the reductions of £44,000, being transferred to DOE/LACAP, and £12,864,000, being transferred to DOE/OES, resulting from additional receipts from local authorities.

f. The DOE/LGR—local government reorganisation—non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £4,435,000 from £44,660,000 to £40,225,000. The savings are due to lower than expected take-up of SCAs for the transitional costs of local government reorganisation and the delayed start-up of the Local Government residuary body, but partially offset by an increase in the granting of other SCAs.

g. The cash limit for class VII, vote 5—central environmental services, etc.—will be reduced by £2,601,000 from £437,145,000 to £434,544,000. This reduction, possible because of forecast savings will allow increases of £1,700,000 to the DOE/HC cash limit; £580,000 to the DOE/OES cash limit; and £321,000 to the regeneration initiatives cash limit to be made.

h. The cash limit for class VII, vote 8—revenue support grant, payments of non-domestic rates, Valuation Office services, etc. England—will be reduced by £550,000 from £29,633,432,000 to £29,632,882,000. This reduction is due to a £300,000 saving on valuation tribunals and a £250,000 saving on the Local Government Commission and will allow increases of £550,000 to the DOE/HC cash limit.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

EU Habitats Directive

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will commence consultations on special areas of conservation to be designated under the EU habitats directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to announce today that the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland and I are launching a wide-ranging public consultation on a list of areas which have been proposed as qualifying for designation as special areas of conservation under the EU habitats directive. The proposals constitute the advice of English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage and the Countryside Council for Wales and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, co-ordinated through the Joint Nature Conservation Committee to ensure UK-wide consistency.

The habitats directive requires member states to submit national lists to the European Commission by 5 June 1995. The SACs will build on our existing framework of designations. I am looking at a simplification of that framework in preparing the rural White Paper. In Scotland, the Government have asked Scottish Natural Heritage to carry out a review of designations and look forward to receiving its advice.

The Government are committed to full and effective public consultation before deciding which areas to include in the United Kingdom national list. The consultation will be at both national and local level. My colleagues are writing today to national organisations inviting comments on the proposals. At the same time, site-by-site consultations of landowners and occupiers and other interests, including local authorities, are being undertaken at local level by the appropriate country nature conservation agency and DOE(NI). The views expressed in the consultation will be considered fully before any decisions are made about the list of sites to be put to the Commission.

The habitats directive, adopted in 1992, was one of the most important milestones for nature conservation in Europe. The Government played an active part in its negotiation and we have pursued implementation in accordance with its requirements. This latest step is the next phase of implementation which identifies those sites considered by the nature conservation agencies and DOE(NI) to represent an appropriate contribution from the UK to the Union-wide Natura 2000 network.

The consultation package, which I am making available in the Library of the House, includes a document which explains the way the scientific advice has been formulated. The directive requires that sites selected as SACs should be significant in terms of the biogeographical region. The habitat types and species listed for site protection are among the rarest or most threatened in Europe. The aim of the SAC network is to maintain or restore these habitat types and species at a favourable conservation status. The sites eventually selected will be those which make a significant contribution to that aim, to the coherence of the network or to the maintenance of biological diversity. The Natura 2000 network will therefore consist of sites which are the most precious in the European Union and these proposals should be considered in that context.

The sites on the list cover both land and marine areas. All land-based sites in Great Britain which are included in the consultation are already notified as sites of special scientific interest and in Northern Ireland all land-based sites are, or shortly will be, declared areas of special scientific interest. The nature conservation agencies advise that there are some habitat types and species for which SACs will, in due course, be recommended which are not yet SSSI. Further SSSI notifications are planned to cover, in particular, certain rivers and riverine species, active raised bogs and blanket bogs and some inter-tidal areas. This notification work will be undertaken before consultation on possible SAC designation for them takes place. The consultation list is also incomplete for certain species. Further scientific information is being sought on the freshwater pearl mussel, the great crested newt and the otter before a full range of possible sites is proposed and consulted on for these species. The Government also await further scientific advice on an additional estuarial site.

I look forward to receiving comments on the proposals. There is already a constructive dialogue between landholders on the one hand and the country agencies and DOE(NI) on the other. There is similar discussion between these statutory bodies and users of the marine environment. This present consultation continues and reinforces the dialogue which is fundamental to the co-operation and consensus we must have to secure effective and lasting conservation.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce compulsory retirement for judges (a) at age 65 and (b) at age 70 years. [16256]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993, which is coming into force today, establishes a compulsory retirement age of 70 for those first appointed to full-time judicial office on or after that date, subject to provision for the service of office-holders below the level of the High Court to be extended, up to an age limit of 75, for periods not exceeding one year at a time, where the Lord Chancellor considers it in the public interest to do so. He expects to exercise this power sparingly. There are no plans to reduce the compulsory retirement age for judges to 65.

Appeals Delays

Mr. Pike: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions he has had and what representations he has received in respect of delays in dealing with (a) social security benefit appeals, (b) immigration case appeals and (c) other appeals; and if he will make a statement. [16500]

Mr. John. M. Taylor: Information is not collated in the form requested, and the question can therefore be answered only at disproportionate cost. I can confirm, however, that I received 320 letters from hon. Members during the course of 1994 relating to tribunals. The great majority of these related to immigration appeals, and many of them expressed concern about delays.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what efforts his Department has made to reduce delays in dealing with (a) social security benefit appeals, (b) immigration case appeals and (c) other appeals; and if he will make a statement. [16499]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is as follows:

(a) Additional staff have been appointed to the Office of the Social Security and Child Support

Commissioners to deal with the increased work load. Further, the chief commissioner has introduced streamlined procedures for certain categories of appeal and a computerised case tracking system is being developed to improve administrative efficiency.

(b) In response to increased waiting times at certain centres of the immigration appellate authorities measures have been introduced to ensure that available court rooms are used as effectively as possible. Furthermore appellants at the London and Feltham centres are offered hearings at one of the regional centres, where waiting times are shorter.

(c) Additional staff have been recruited for the pensions appeal tribunals to give administrative support. Extra judicial members have also been appointed and additional tribunal sittings have been arranged to help reduce waiting times for a hearing.

Magistrates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 346, if he will take steps to bring the political balance among magistrates in Doncaster into line with the national political opinion. [16248]

Mr. John. M. Taylor: It is the wish of the Lord Chancellor that each lay bench should broadly reflect the community it serves. To that end, the Lord Chancellor has already asked his advisory committee for Doncaster to take appropriate steps to improve the political balance of the bench and that is being done. The Lord Chancellor would be grateful for any encouragement to this aim that the hon. Member can give locally.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many press officers there are in his Department currently, and what the figure was in 1979. [16576]

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are currently six press officers in my Department. There were no press officers employed by the Lord Chancellor's Department in 1979.

Legal Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give in each of the last five years the number of cases where the defence legal aid costs have exceeded £1 million. [16245]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The numbers of cases where the defence legal aid costs have exceeded £1 million, including VAT, in each of the last five years, in criminal proceedings, were as follows:

1989–90: 1
1990–91: —
1991–92: 1
1992–93: 3
1993–94: 14

Mrs. Danielle Souness

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the cost to the legal aid funding of Mrs. Danielle Souness's case against Mr. Souness. [16417]

Mr. John M. Taylor: No moneys have been paid from the legal aid fund.

Tribunal Staff

Mr. Pike: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact of staffing shortages on the time taken to deal with (a) before and (b) after the appeal itself has been held; and if he will make a statement. [16501]

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are presently five vacant posts from a total complement of 220 administrative staff for all the tribunals run by my Department. These vacancies have not had a significant impact on the time taken to deal with cases either before or after an appeal hearing.

SCOTLAND

Secondary Education

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future relationship between the Scottish Examination Board and the Scottish Vocational Education Council in the light of the proposals he announced for the reform of upper secondary education in Scotland last year. [17948]

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce that I am publishing a consultation paper entitled "Options for the Future Relationship between the Scottish Examination Board and the Scottish Vocational Education Council" today. The paper looks at possibilities for the future relationship between the two bodies and seeks respondents' views on the way forward. Copies of the document have been deposited in the Libraries of the House.

Registers of Scotland

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the targets he expects the Registers of Scotland executive agency to achieve in 1995–96. [18275]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have set the Registers of Scotland the following key targets for 1995–96:

to reduce the turnround time over the year for recording writs on the sasine register from 35 working days to 33 working days, with performance in any quarter not exceeding 36.5 working days;

to reduce the turnround time over the year for dealings on the land register not attached to a first registration or a transfer of part from 57.5 working days to 55 working days, with performance in any quarter not exceeding 60.5 working days;

to reduce unit costs in real terms by 4 per cent. against 1994–95 target for sasines and 7 per cent. against 1994–95 target for dealings;

to continue the land register extension programme and achieve the transfer of Aberdeen and Kincardine on 1 April 1996;

to achieve trading fund status by 1 April 1996;

to recover full operating costs; and to achieve at least 97 per cent. of customers expressing themselves satisfied with the accuracy of work and helpfulness of staff for all parts of the business.

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to set targets for Caledonian MacBrayne for 1995–96. [18276]

Mr. Lang: I have decided to set the following targets for Caledonian MacBrayne for the year 1995–96. The company will be required to achieve as a financial target that fares income should meet at least 58 per cent. of operating costs, including depreciation charged on a replacement cost basis and provision for an 8 per cent. forgone rate of return on capital. As an efficiency target, the company will be asked not to exceed a maximum unit cost of 84p per passenger car unit capacity kilometre. As a quality of service target, the company will be asked to achieve a figure of 97 per cent. of sailings arriving on time, excluding sailings which are delayed or cancelled for safety reasons, for example, adverse weather conditions. I consider that the setting of these targets will provide a clear framework for the operation of the company in 1995–96, which is consistent with the Government's objectives of securing continued improvement in operational efficiency and standards of service.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to issue consistent advice through the Benefits Agency offices on how to treat men and women who receive training grants from the European social fund. [16841]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 30 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the advice issued to Benefit Agency offices when people are receiving training grants from the European Social Fund (ESF).

To ensure national consistency in the adjudication of benefit claims the Chief Adjudication Officer issues an interpretation of legislation in the form of the Adjudication Officer's Guide (AOG). The AOG is available in all Benefits Agency (BA) offices. AOG paragraphs 25468 to 25471 gives guidance on the meaning of training allowance.

BA Central Services issues operational guidance for all benefits to BA offices in the form of various manuals. An Income Support Handbook entitled "Directory of Training and Education Programmes", paragraphs 450–499, specifically covers the treatment of income from the ESF.

Staff in BA Central Services and Central Adjudication Services (CAS) are also available to discuss any queries staff in offices may have with any guidance that is issued.

Copies of the AOG and the Income Support handbook are available in the Library.

The Chief Adjudication Officer's view, reflected in the national guidance, is that payments from the ESF do not constitute a training allowance for the purposes of benefit entitlement because they are not paid out of public funds. Income from this is therefore taken fully into account in determining entitlement to Income Support (IS).

This is based on caselaw which says that where a regulation says public funds that means the public funds of Great Britain unless the draftsman explicitly states otherwise. He has not in the case of ESF payments. Therefore ESF payments do not receive the same special treatment that is given to other training allowances paid by or on behalf of Government Departments.

The Chief Adjudication Officer's view of these payments is however currently being tested in a case awaiting a hearing before the Social Security Commissioner.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances employed status participants in training for work, or in independent programmes supported by the European social fund, can claim in-work benefits including family credit and disability working allowance; and if he will make a statement. [15155]

Mr. Roger Evans: In general, any employee, including a participant in a training scheme supported by the European social fund, can claim family credit or disability working allowance, provided that he satisfies the other conditions of entitlement. However, because the Training for Work (Miscellaneous Provisions) Order 1993 and the Training for Work (Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise Programmes) Order 1993 specify that participants in those schemes shall not be treated as being employed, employed status trainees under those schemes are currently unable to qualify for family credit or disability working allowance although they may qualify for income support. My hon. Friends the Under-Secretary of State for Employment and the Minster with responsibility for industry and local government at the Scottish Office propose to lay new orders shortly in order to enable such trainees to qualify for family credit and disability working allowance on the same basis as other employees.

Participants in any training scheme can claim housing benefit and council tax benefit and will continue to be able to do so.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those in residential care and nursing homes on 31 March 1993 were in receipt of (a) income support; (b) attendance allowance and (c) disability living allowance. [16263]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is not available for the date requested that includes attendance allowance or disability living allowance. In May 1993 the following number of residents were in receipt of:

(a) Income Support: 284,000

(b) Income Support and Attendance Allowance: 113,000

(c) Income Support and Disability Living Allowance: 31,000.

The number of residents in residential care and nursing homes in receipt of income support on the 27 March 1993 was 281,000.

Note:

The figures for income support for May 1993 are for preserved rights cases only.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the findings of the Health and Safety Executive-Peto report, "Continuing Increase in Mesothelioma Mortality in Britain", and its consequence for his Department's policy. [17073]

Mr. Hague: Diffuse mesothelioma is already included in the list of prescribed diseases for which industrial injuries disablement benefit is payable. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is advised on the list by the independent Industrial Injuries Advisory Council which is aware of the Peto report. The council monitors developments in the field of occupational disease, and intends to review asbestos-related diseases as part of its work programme for the current year.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral statement of 21 March, Official Report, column 259 what is the global figure for the number of people who have won their appeals against refusal of benefit under the habitual residence test. [17437]

Mr. Roger Evans: In the debate on 21 March I referred to certain global figures which had been supplied to the hon. Member. Unfortunately these figures relate to the application of the habitual residence test at the point of claim, not the appeal stage.

The position on appeals is as I have previously explained. The reasons for an appeal are not routinely identified and figures for past appeals could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. Department officials are looking at whether this type of information could be extracted without disproportionate cost for future appeals.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his latest estimates of the numbers of people who will receive (a) short-term incapacity benefit at the lower rate, (b) short-term incapacity benefit at the higher rate and (c) the long-term rate of incapacity benefit, in each of the years (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and 1998–99. [17440]

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

Estimated number of people in receipt of Incapacity Benefit at the end of March in each year

Thousand

	1996	1997	1998	1999
Short-term Incapacity Benefit (lower rate)	145	145	145	145
Short-term Incapacity Benefit (higher rate)	110	110	110	115
Long-term Incapacity Benefit	1,545	1,430	1,380	1,340

Notes:

1. Estimates are provisional and as such will be subject to revision at a later stage.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000.
3. Figures take account of the estimated effect of the new medical test.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 83, if he will explain how the 48 per cent. of savings resulting from the exclusion of existing claimants of incapacity benefit is to be achieved; and whether this 48 per cent. includes the 41 per cent. of savings arising from the exclusion of existing claimants by the medical test. [17436]

Mr. Hague: The answer was incorrectly printed in the Official Report. It should have read:

> "In 1995–96, 13 per cent. of the estimated savings are accounted for by the exclusion of new claimants as a result of the medical test of incapacity and 41 per cent. by the exclusion of existing claimants. In 1996–97, 17 per cent. of the estimated savings are accounted for by the exclusion of new claimants as a result of the medical test and 48 per cent. by the exclusion of existing claimants."

All the estimated savings to which the answer refers are to be achieved by the application of the medical test of incapacity.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16216]

Sir John Wheeler: No specific guidelines in respect of the employment of public relations companies have been issued. General guidance on the use of consultants, which covers public relations companies, was issued in 1989. A copy has been placed in the library.

The Northern Ireland Office, NI Departments and their agencies and public bodies can, and do, avail themselves of advice on purchasing issues, including tendering procedures, from the Government purchasing service, which is a specialist purchasing unit within the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16283]

Sir John Wheeler: Public relations and other forms of publicity within Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office fall primarily to departmental information officers and the information services. In addition, departmental staff carry out an extensive range of public relations activities. To disaggregate the total cost of these activities from their other duties would involve disproportionate cost.

The total cost of public relations contracts with the private sector in 1993–94 was £996,118. These involved the following projects:

Preparation of Department of Education's corporate image, including logo.

Department of Education (NI) stand at the ideal home exhibition.

Advertising and publishing of parents charter for Department of Education (NI).

Updating Department of Education's database (Touch screen exhibition equipment).

Promotional video for the Department of Education (NI).

Public relations contracts in the Industrial Development Board's (IDB) target markets of North America, Germany, Japan, Korea and Taiwan.

Consultant employed by the Department of Economic Development (DED), in the fair employment field.

Privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity (NIE).

New corporate identity for Making Belfast Work (MBW).

Best of Northern Ireland exhibition at Westminster.

Stormont castle publicity booklets and promotional material.

Launch of Valuation and Lands Agency.

Government purchasing service (NI) stand at HMT public procurement exhibition at Olympia.

Public Records Office publications.

Miss Shirley Robbins

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which Government Department is responsible for paying the extra costs of electricity arising from the use, for medical reasons, of a new ventilator machine for Miss Shirley Robbins of Morpeth street, who suffered from polio as a child. [16715]

Mr. Moss: As this matter involves personal information relating to Miss Robbins, I will write to the hon. Member.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his Department will undertake a review of the application of all provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 to all alleged offenders in the north of Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [16784]

Sir John Wheeler: The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 applies only to England and Wales. Virtually identical legislation was introduced in Northern Ireland in the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989. A number of amendments are currently being considered to the order and my right hon. and learned Friend will make an announcement shortly.

Police Authority

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the salary paid to the chairman of the Northern Ireland Police Authority; and to what other allowances he is normally entitled. [17046]

Sir John Wheeler: The chairman of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland presently receives a remuneration of £31,865 per annum. Travel and subsistence allowances in line with civil service rates are payable for official business.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Attorney-General how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979.

The Attorney-General: There are currently eight press officers employed in the departments for which I am responsible. There were no such officers in 1979, on which date the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office, which currently employ six press officers and two press officers respectively, were not in existence.

PRIME MINISTER

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d), and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising, for each year since 1979–80 or for each year since 1979–80 or for each of its existence if it has been created since then; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17632]

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Rupert Pennant-Rea

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether he approved the terms of the letter sent by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to Mr. Rupert Pennant-Rea in answer to his resignation letter; and what is the Government's policy on standards of behaviour of senior public officials. [17120]

The Prime Minister: My approval was neither sought nor required to the letter my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer sent to Mr. Rupert Pennant-Rea. I have now read it and agree with it. The Government's policy is to uphold the highest standard in public life.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Sales

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Turkish Government to ensure that no arms given to Turkey by NATO are being used in the attacks now taking place against Kurdish safe havens in northern Iraq. [17234]

Mr. David Davis: None in this context. Proposed United Kingdom arms sales to Turkey, as to other countries, are considered on a case-by-case basis and are subject to stringent licensing procedures. In particular, we do not grant licences for the sale of equipment which we believe is likely to be used for internal repression.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what equipment Her Majesty's Government consider is covered by its ban on arms sales to China.

Mr. Goodlad: Since 7 June 1989 the United Kingdom has enforced an embargo on the sale to China of > "weapons, and equipment which could be used for internal repression".

The EU introduced a ban on arms sales to China on 26 June 1989 but the scope of that ban has, in the absence of agreement on a common interpretations, been left for national interpretation. In the interests of clarity we have decided that henceforward the embargo will include:

lethal weapons such as machine guns, large calibre weapons, bombs, torpedoes, rockets and missiles; specially designed components of the above, and ammunition;

military aircraft and helicopters, vessels of war, armoured fighting vehicles and other such weapons platforms; any equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

All applications will be considered on a case-by-case basis in the light of these criteria as well as our usual criteria governing all defence exports.

Obscene Publications

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will publish the text of his letter to the hon. Member for Congleton of 13 March in connection with the agreement for the suppression of the circulation of obscene publications; [16525]

(2) pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Congleton of 28 February, what inquiries have now been made of the United Nations by his Department in connection with the status and operative provisions of the agreement for the suppression of the circulation of obscene publications; what proposals there are to comply with those provisions of the agreement which require the five-yearly consideration of the desirability of calling a conference on the matters covered by the agreement; and if he will make a statement. [16523]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 March 1995]: The United Nations treaty department has confirmed that an agreement for the suppression of the circulation of obscene publications was signed in 1910 and amended by a protocol in 1949, and a convention for the suppression of the circulation and traffic in obscene publications was concluded in 1923 and amended by a protocol in 1947. Article 16 of the 1923 convention, not the 1910 agreement, contains the provision for calling a conference at the end of each period of five years. As amended in 1947 it states:

> "Upon a request for a revision of the present Convention by five of the signatory or acceding Parties to the Convention, the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations shall call a conference for that purpose. In any event, the Council will consider the desirability of calling a conference at the end of each period of five years".

There is no record of five members asking for a conference. The secretariat of ECOSOC has confirmed to us that it has come under no pressure from signatories to review the 1923 convention, nor has it opted to call a conference as provided for under article 16.

The convention is still active: the Czech and Slovak Republics succeeded to it—independently—on 28 August 1993. If there were a proposal by five member states signatory to the convention, the Economic and Social Council would call a conference. We are not aware of any current proposals to do so.

Copies of the texts of the 1910 agreement and the 1923 convention will be lodged in the Library of the House in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Quotas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the prosecutions pursued by his Department against fishermen for breaching non-sector quotas and what fines or other penalties were imposed in each successful case in each year since 1988 in England and Wales. [15590]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The number of prosecution cases involving breaches of non-sector quota limits is summarised in the table. Some of the vessels prosecuted may have belonged to producer organisations but fished against non-sector quota limits for certain stocks.

Year of offence	Number of successful prosecution cases	Total fines incurred £
1988	1	10,000
1989	3	35,095
1990	7	10,050
1991	14	75,803
1992	25	140,237
1993	13	97,086
1994	3	310,000

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16658]

Mr. Waldegrave: The circumstances in which a commercial public relations company may be employed by Government Departments are strictly limited. They are set out in central guidance, as are the procedures to be followed in respect of contract tendering. Agency framework documents explicitly reiterate the need to observe central Government requirements in purchasing of any external services.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16285]

Mr. Waldegrave: In the financial year 1993–94, my Department, excluding agencies, spent £4.3 million publicity, publications and pamphlets. Central rules specifically preclude the engagement of commercial consultants for direct representational tasks and none was so employed.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of the common agricultural policy per citizen in the European Union in each year since 1973. [16131]

Mr. Jack: The only readily available estimates of the total transfers to agriculture from consumers and taxpayers in the European Community are those based on analysis by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. The information, which is available only on an annual basis from 1986 and as a three-year average back to 1979, is given in the table:

Year	Total transfers billion ECUs
1979–81	57
1983–85	58
1986	105
1987	104
1988	102
1989	92

Year	Total transfers billion ECUs
1990	104
1991	116
1992	111
1993	116

Notes:
The estimates relate to the EC Twelve except for the period 1979–85 when they relate to the EC10. The ex-GDR is included from 1990.

It should be noted that these estimates are likely to overstate the true cost of the CAP because the consumer cost element is based on the difference between EC producer prices and world prices. In the absence of support, world prices would almost certainly be higher.

Estimates of population are given in the EUROSTAT's "Basic Statistics of the Community", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a comparison between the documents required in support of the integrated administration and control system in each member country; and if he will make a statement. [16146]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 March 1995]: Documentation relating to IACS produced by other member states is reviewed periodically. During our last review, we found that the explanatory literature produced in some other member states is short. But this is achieved in a number of ways. In some countries the booklet contains only general material, while instructions on completing the forms appear in separate leaflets. Some simply use much smaller print. Others give only basic information and instruct farmers to consult their local offices if they need more or refer back to EC or national rules. Others may rely on producer groups to help farmers with their applications, on the basis of software provided by the Government. We have preferred a comprehensive approach which takes the applicant step by step through the forms. This approach is also generally favoured by the industry whose views we sought this year and who have preferred not to change a format which is now familiar to farmers.

The EC rules on IACS recognise that there will be differences of approach between member states because of different administrative structures. Thus, the Commission's role in ensuring uniform adherence to the rules is a vital one.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Ministry has to review the allocation and method of allocation of milk quotas (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) between EU countries. [17015]

Mr. Jack: Milk quotas have been allocated to producers in the United Kingdom in accordance with current EC legislation. That legislation will be reviewed before 31 March 2000 when it is due to expire. In the meantime the Government are pressing, so far without success, for a change in the rules to permit the leasing of milk quotas across member state frontiers.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the UK's estimated milk production capacity; and what is the United Kingdom's total milk quota.

Mr. Jack: Conditions in much of the United Kingdom are ideal for producing milk. But we are prevented from making the most of our natural advantages by the EC milk quota system. The UK's total milk quota is currently 14,590,047 tonnes.

Milk Imports

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk is imported annually into the United Kingdom; and how much of this comes from the EU. [17020]

Mr. Jack: In 1993, the latest year for which figures are available, a total of 92,887 tonnes of milk were imported into the UK. This entire amount came from other EU member states.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17035]

Mr. Jack: An analysis of all legislation introduced by this Department since 1965 for any reference of the type requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member, although frequent references are made to officers of state.

Poultry

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of birds slaughtered under programme code PP2:02; and what was the cost of compensation for these birds. [17022]

Mrs. Browning: The total number of poultry birds compulsorily slaughtered in Great Britain because of salmonella infection and the compensation paid for these birds since the introduction of the policy in March 1989 are set out in the following table.

Type of bird slaughtered	Total slaughtered	Compensation paid £
Layer	2,340,254	3,717,952
Layer breeder	106,121	903,805
Broiler breeder	1,131,178	3,258,998
Total	3,577,553	7,880,755

Sheep (Salmonella)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what programmes his Ministry has to reduce the occurrence of salmonella in sheep. [17023]

Mrs. Browning: There are no formal programmes to reduce the occurrence of salmonella in sheep which remains relatively low. However, all isolations have to be reported to a veterinary officer of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who, on the basis of the information received, will decide the need for further action or advice.

Hormones

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation he has made of the findings of the Consumers Association in respect of traces of EU banned hormones in United Kingdom meat samples; and if he will reconsider current monitoring standards in the light of the European test findings on hormones in meat. [17280]

Mr. Waldegrave: The concentrations of banned hormones found in the United Kingdom meat samples taken by the Consumers Association are unlikely to pose a threat to human health. Nevertheless, the findings are a cause for concern. Officials at the veterinary medicines directorate have been in contact with the Consumers Association which has provided some additional information on the samples, but, in view of the time that has elapsed since they were purchased and the results published, coupled with the absence of any packaging material, it is proving very difficult to establish the source.

Surveillance for banned hormones is carried out in the UK under the national surveillance scheme for residues in meat, which implements directive 86/469/EEC. The number of samples taken each year is based on a statistical analysis of the numbers of animals slaughtered in the previous year, so that within prescribed confidence limits, we can be satisfied that the results obtained are truly representative. The number of samples can be increased in the light of developments, but, although the position is being kept under review, we have no plans at this stage to change the level of monitoring as a result of these findings.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his Ministry's tests on meat samples are carried out to monitor for the use of banned substances. [17281]

Mr. Waldegrave: Samples of bile, urine, serum and thyroid which have been collected from cattle, pigs and sheep at slaughterhouses and on-farm under the statutory national surveillance scheme for residues in meat are analysed for the presence of banned substances in accordance with the provisions of Commission decision 92/256/EEC. This lays down the methods to be used for detecting residues of banned substances having a hormonal or thyrostatic action.

Samples of meat and meat products purchased from retail outlets under the separate non-statutory surveillance programme, and covering both home-produced and imported meat and meat products, are also tested for the presence of banned hormonal and thyrostatic substances using similar procedures.

The results of both the statutory and non-statutory surveillance programmes are published annually in the veterinary medicines directorate's annual report and accounts and updated quarterly in its MAVIS newsletter.

Pig Producers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to give grant aid to pig producers for the replacement of sow stalls and tethers. [17063]

Mr. Jack: I have no such plans. Pig producers have been given an eight-year adequate transitional period to introduce the new arrangements and have a unique opportunity to supply British consumers with pork and bacon produced to a high welfare standard. A grant aid scheme would not be fair to those producers who have already made the change.

Spanish Fishermen

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the extent to which Spanish fishermen have been catching undersized fish, illegal fish, using undersize nets and or using illegal holds while fishing off Canada; and if he will make a statement. [17490]

Mr. Jack: Enforcement in the international waters off Canada regulated by the North-west Atlantic Fisheries Organisation is the responsibility of NAFO members fishing there. The United Kingdom has no fishing vessels or national inspectors operating in these fisheries and therefore has no first-hand experience of fishing practices and enforcement there.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the framework document and performance targets for the Meat Hygiene Service. [18395]

Mr. Waldegrave: The Meat Hygiene Service will be launched on 1 April as an executive agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. I am arranging for copies of its framework document to be placed in the Library of the House.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have set the following targets for the Meat Hygiene Service in 1995–96.

Financial Performance

To recover from plant operators the full economic costs of providing the statutory health inspection and controls at fresh meat premises, taking account of any transitional financial arrangements which Ministers may agree.

To recover from Government Departments and agencies the full economic costs of providing agreed services or other work undertaken on their behalf.

To comply with budgetary controls resulting from PES and the Supply Estimates.

Efficiency

To work from the outset for gains in efficiency inter alia by:

(a) minimising the total number of hours and the associated costs of meat inspector and OVS time required to operate the service to the standards laid down and taking steps to adjust staffing levels wherever possible following the completion by end October 1995 of the audit of standards and staffing levels in all full throughout plants;

(b) holding overhead costs in 1995–96 within a limit of £8.115 million (before deduction of income from services provided to central Government).

Note: On this basis the MHS will deliver in 1995–96 an efficiency gain of approximately 10 per cent. in relation to the estimated total costs in 1994–95, and will establish a firm base for further gains in efficiency in future years.

Quality and Delivery of Service

To apply hygiene requirements in such a way as to raise levels of compliance by slaughterhouses and cutting premises progressively by:

(a) establishing a baseline in terms of HAS score where this has not already been done;

(b) in red meat slaughterhouses fully approved on 30 September 1995 which had a score of less than 65 at the last inspection by the state veterinary service in 1994–95, working with plant management to raise HAS scores by at least an average of 10 points by the end of 1995–96.

To complete a welfare audit by the plant OVS of all licensed slaughterhouses, and agree with plant management a timetable for any necessary corrective action, by the end of November 1995. To meet the standards laid down in the MHS customer service statement.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hampshire Police

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the additional police to be recruited by the Hampshire police force will be stationed on the Isle of Wight. [17422]

Mr. Maclean: It is for the chief constable to decide how his officers are to be deployed within the force area. I understand that decisions have not yet been taken about the deployment of extra officers to be recruited.

Closed Circuit Television

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who was on the judging panel which recommended to Ministers which bids should be successful under the closed circuit television challenge scheme; and how many of their recommendations Ministers accepted. [17441]

Mr. Maclean: The recommendations to Ministers were based on the assessments of a five-person panel comprising Home Office officials—including one with technical expertise—a business consultant and an academic consultant, both on secondment to the Home Office. Of the 480 bids received, 289 were assessed by the panel as being of good or very good quality. From that total, Ministers selected the 106 winners.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) unsuccessful and (b) successful bids for closed circuit television challenge funding fell into each of the four categories listed in the bidding guidance. [17443]

Mr. Maclean: A significant number of bids, both successful and unsuccessful, fell into more than one category. The total number of bids by main category as described in the bidding guidance was as follows:

	Number
Category A (Town Centre Schemes)	295
Category B (Neighbourhood Schemes)	40
Category C (Travel and Business Areas)	46
Category D (Community Centres)	99
Total	480

The number of successful bids by main category was as follows:

	Number
Category A	90
Category B	1
Category C	11
Category D	4

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many London bids were received for the closed circuit television challenge competition; and what amount those bids were for. [17445]

Mr. Maclean: Some 60 bids were received from the London region, seeking a total of £3,414,000.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful bids for the closed circuit television challenge scheme attracted private funding; and what was the average proportion of the total cost of each scheme to be financed by private funding. [17438]

Mr. Maclean: Some 103 of the 106 successful bids had pledges of private sector funding. The remaining three successful bids were for neighbourhood or community schemes where private sector funding was not a requirement. It is estimated that the total value of private sector funding pledged for all bids received was £10 million.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for each of the successful bids in the closed circuit television challenge scheme (a) how much they will receive and (b) how much they bid. [17442]

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

Mr. Maclean: There were a total of 65 bids to extend or upgrade existing systems, of which 15 were successful. Funding for those 15 bids amounted to £487,000, representing 9.7 per cent. of the total made available.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers are currently detained under Immigration Act powers in HMP Rochester; and when use of the second wing within HMP

Information on the location of these detained persons, as at 29 March 1995, is given in the table. The second wing of Her Majesty's prison, Rochester is due to become available to house Immigration Act detainees during May 1995.

Michael Grant

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) under what procedure and by whom the decision was made to transfer Michael Grant to Ford open prison; [17142]

(2) what factors were taken into account in determining Michael Grant's most recent security classification; [17144]

(3) what was the classification awarded to Michael Grant following his conviction; and when, and under what procedure, the original classification was lowered. [17143]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 March 1995]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 31 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the security classification of Michael Grant and the decision to transfer him to Ford open prison.

Michael Grant was held as a provisional category A prisoner when he was convicted at Chelmsford Crown Court on 24 October 1988 of attempted murder. His case was considered by the Category A Committee at its meeting on 16 March 1989, and on 24 April 1989 the then Director General approved the recommendation that he should be confirmed in category A.

Michael Grant's security category was next reviewed during the following year. The case was considered by the Category A Committee and the Director General. On 5 June 1990 it was decided that Mr. Grant's security category should be reduced to category B.

On 28 January 1991 Mr. Grant was transferred from Gartree to Coldingley which was a category B training prison at the time. On 17 December 1992 the head of custody at Coldingley approved Mr. Grant's re-categorisation to category C. Mr. Grant had demonstrated his suitability through completing a number of escorted home visits. He was made a category C prisoner on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Grant was recommended for re-assessment of his security category at Coldingley prison on 30 May 1993.On 16 June 1993 Mr. Grant was the subject of a re-assessment board for reclassifying him from category C to category D, that is, the lowest security category. This is for prisoners who can reasonably be trusted to serve their sentences in open conditions. The Governor approved the Board's recommendation to reclassify Mr. Grant to category D on 21 June 1993.

The factors that were taken into consideration by the Board were good behaviour whilst in prison, completion of a successful period of home leave and a successful period of temporary release to attend his father's funeral. He had a sound prison employment record, and probation reports demonstrated that he had the backing of a supportive family. Although his earliest date of release was not until November 1997, the Board considered that he was a prisoner who could be reasonably trusted to serve the rest of his sentence in open conditions.

Mr. Grant was initially held as a category D prisoner at Coldingley. He was later accepted by Ford, who took into account his history of good behaviour in prison and the fact that he had successfully completed several periods of home leave. He was transferred to Ford on 23 May 1994.

Following Mr. Grant's recent failure to return from temporary release on time, he later returned voluntarily and will be recategorised to C and is now held in a segregation unit at Ford.

Murderers

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murderers released on licence since the abolition of the death penalty have been convicted of a subsequent murder. [16395]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 March 1995]: Some 11 persons convicted of murder and released on licence since the abolition of the death penalty in 1965 have been subsequently convicted of murder in England and Wales and a further four subsequently convicted of manslaughter.

In another case, one person committed suicide before being tried for the second homicide offence.

A further person was subsequently convicted of murder in Scotland and another in Northern Ireland.

In addition, three persons convicted of manslaughter for which they received a life sentence and released on licence since 1965 have been convicted of a subsequent murder in England and Wales.

Non-animal Experiments

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of funding was given by his Department for the development of non-animal experiments in each year since 1985. [17062]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 16 December 1994, Official Report, column 828.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sponsors, required to be interviewed following entry clearance applications, whose papers were referred initially to Leeds-Bradford airport, (a) have been interviewed and (b) are to be interviewed at other ports; and if he will list the numbers of sponsors (i) interviewed and (ii) to be interviewed, at each port since January. [17242]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is a follows:

Port	Interview completed	Awaiting an interview
Hull	14	4
Stockton	4	7
North Shields/Newcastle Airport	4	11
Total	22	22

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sponsors are, at the latest date, awaiting interview at Leeds-Bradford airport; and if he will appoint additional immigration staff at Leeds-Bradford airport. [17243]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Some 124 sponsors are awaiting interview at Leeds-Bradford airport. As a matter of routine, the immigration service is currently reviewing the work loads and staffing at a number of ports, including Leeds-Bradford.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or his predecessors, since 1965. [17032]

Mr. Howard: Statutory references to disqualification for membership of the House of Commons are contained in the House of Commons Disqualification act 1975, the Representation of the People Act 1981, schedule 7 to the British Nationality Act 1981, the Representation of the People Act 1983 and section 427 of the Insolvency Act 1986.

An analysis of other legislation introduced by this Department since 1965 for any reference of the type requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost since information is not held centrally.

Donkey Escape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the donkey that escaped from Thorn Cross, Warrington young offender institution has been recaptured; how many personnel were involved in the search; what has been the cost of the search; and if he will make a statement. [16246]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 31 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about a donkey that went missing from the grounds of Thorn Cross Young Offender Institution.

On the morning of 13 March staff discovered that one of two donkeys held in a paddock near Thorn Cross was missing. Four members of staff spent approximately 30 minutes searching in and near the institution for the donkey but failed to find it.

The local police were informed as a precaution against the stray donkey becoming a hazard on the nearby motorway.

A short while later the police notified Thorn Cross that the donkey had been put into a field, earlier that morning, about one mile away from the prison by a passing motorist. The donkey was subsequently collected and returned to the paddock.

This incident involved five prison staff at an approximate cost of £75 plus the services of the local police.

The two donkeys are cared for by inmates on behalf of Sidmouth Donkey Sanctuary and are visited by local handicapped children and other school children.

Prisoner Places (Cost)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost per prisoner place, as measured by the Prison Service's net current expenditure divided by the total number of prison places for each of the past 12 months in England and Wales. [16266]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 31 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average cost per prisoner place for each of the past 12 months.

Cost per place is calculated on an annual basis. Variations in the pattern of expenditure mean that monthly expenditure is not a meaningful indicator.

This information is published annually on a financial year basis once the Prison Service Audited Appropriation figures are available. The most recently available cost per place figures are those published in the Prison Service Annual Report for 1993–94.

Blackmail (Definition)

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider amending the definition of blackmail to include the application of pressure to disclose publicly personal sexuality. [15959]

Mr. Maclean: I do not think it would be appropriate to amend the offence of blackmail in this way. Removing the requirement for there to be material gain or loss would widen the scope of the offence unacceptably, encompassing types of behaviour unsuitable for regulation by the criminal law.

Prisons (Attempted Suicides)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attempted suicides took place in each prison in (a) 1979, (b) 1985, (c) 1990 and (d) the last year for which figures are available; and how many of those attempts resulted in death. [16199]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 March 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 31 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about attempted suicides and attempted suicides which resulted in deaths.

The information is set out in the table below:

Year	1979	1984–85[1]	1989–90[2]	1991–92
Self-harm with suicidal intent	300	402	398	805

I regret that detailed records on self-harm are not available centrally for individual establishments and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

It is difficult to distinguish between self-harm incidents with or without suicidal intent. For this reason, prisons have not been asked to make this classification since 1992 and the figures above should be treated with caution.

Year	1979	1984–85[1]	1989–90[2]	1991–92
Self-inflicted deaths	29	37	43	43

[1] In 1984 self-harm figures began to be collected in financial years and cannot be split into calender years. Therefore, the 1984–85 figure covers 15 months from 1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985. The last two figures in the table cover the same period.

[2] The figures for 1989–90 and 1991–92 cover the period 1 April to 31 March.

The attached tables give a breakdown of deaths for each establishment, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Prisons (Offensive Weapons)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) firearms, (b) knives and (c) other dangerous weapons were found secreted in Her Majesty's prisons in (i) 1979, (ii) 1985, (iii) 1990 and (iv) the last year for which figures are available. [16687]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 March 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 31 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) firearms, (b) knives and (c) other dangerous weapons were found secreted in Her Majesty's prisons in (i) 1979 (ii) 1985 (iii) 1990 and (iv) the last year for which figures are available.

Finds of knives and other related sharp instruments are not recorded centrally. Weapons such as firearms and CS gas canisters have been reported and recorded centrally since June 1988.

The information on firearms and CS gas canisters for 1990 and 1994 is contained in the table below:

	Firearms (all hand guns)	Other (all gas canisters)
1990	Nil	Nil
1994	5[1]	2

[1] Four incidents—one without ammunition. A gas canister was also found on 12 January of this year.

TREASURY

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16274]

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury does not have any agencies. Grants in aid are paid from the Treasury vote to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, the British-American Parliamentary Group, the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the Private Finance Panel Executive. The conditions relating to the way in which these grants can be spent are set out in financial memoranda which do not include specific requirements in respect of public relations companies.

Alcohol Smuggling

Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue he estimates has been lost to Customs and Excise as a result of the smuggling of beers, wines and spirits in the last year. [16770]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is difficult to calculate the true extent of smuggling. Assuming a detection rate of one in 20 would suggest, for the 12 months to 31 January 1995, a revenue loss relating to alcohol in the order of £37 million.

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a sector breakdown for manufacturing showing for each sector the quarterly peak output since 1985 as a percentage of the figure for the fourth quarter of 1994 together with his forecast for 1995 and 1996. [17117]

Mr. Nelson: These figures are to be found in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics", published by the Central Statistical Office and available in the House of Commons Library. The Treasury does not publish forecasts of the sectoral breakdown.

Health and Safety

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Treasury building in Great George street, Whitehall, was last inspected by the relevant local authority for health and safety at work purposes; and whether it currently fully meets all the requirements of the current legislation in that respect. [17308]

Mr. Nelson: The Health and Safety Executive is the responsible authority for enforcing current health and safety legislation in the Treasury building in Parliament street. They last inspected the building in 1992. My staff regularly arrange health and safety inspections of the building by competent persons with a view to ensuring that it meets the requirements of the current health and safety legislation.

Mr. Rupert Pennant-Rea

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he made as to whether the previous deputy governor of the Bank of England should resign; and what was the reason for these representations. [17111]

Mr. Nelson: It was Mr. Pennant-Rea's own decision to resign. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor made clear in his letter to Mr. Pennant-Rea, he felt Mr. Pennant-Rea had done an exceptional job as deputy governor and he was sorry that Mr. Pennant-Rea had decided to resign.

Price Increases

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he applies in deciding on whether an increase in prices is inflationary. [17112]

Mr. Nelson: Any price increase adds to the 12-month inflation rate for 12 months. Whether it affects the inflation rate after that depends on whether other prices rise in response.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the reasons for the changes in manufacturing output less food between (a) 1990 and 1994 and (b) the peak quarter of 1990 and the fourth quarter of 1994. [17138]

Mr. Nelson: There are a large number of reasons for changes in output which it is not possible separately to quantify.

National Savings

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish a remit for sales of debt by the Department for National Savings. [18394]

Mr. Nelson: The remit for the Department for National Savings for 1995–96 is as follows:

Objectives

The Department for National Savings' declared aim is to support the Government's management of its debt and its policies for personal savings by attracting and retaining investments from the retail market efficiently and cost-effectively.

The Department's primary task is therefore to be an efficient and cost effective source of funding for Her Majesty's Government. It is also charged with maintaining a suitable range of schemes to encourage savings among the population.

Volume of Funding in 1995–96

The net contribution of National Savings to funding in 1995–96 is assumed to be around £2.5 billion.

Responsibilities

The Treasury is responsible, under the National Loans Act 1968, for setting the terms of National Savings products. DNS will normally take the lead in bringing forward proposals to Treasury Ministers on product terms, including rates.

Cost comparisons

The Government intend that National Savings' contribution to funding should offer value for money overall compared with its other sources of funding. Product terms will take account of the need for DNS to retain the capability and market presence to contribute to the Government's funding needs over the medium term.

Crown Estate Rents

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to make representations to the Crown Estate Commissioners to keep rent rises for Crown Estate tenants to reasonable and affordable levels. [16923]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 28 March 1995]: The Government are not involved in the setting of rent levels for Crown Estate tenants. The Crown Estate Commissioners act within the provisions of the Crown Estate Act 1961, and the requirements of housing legislation.

WALES

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning indicative grants for Welsh unitary authorities. [16771]

Mr. Redwood: Distribution formulae for calculating unitary authority standard spending assessments are being developed in consultation with the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. I will announce my provisional local government revenue settlement plans for 1996–97 as soon as possible after the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement.

NHS Administrative Costs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 153, if he will list the administrative cost of the national health service in Wales for each year since 1979 in current prices.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 March 1995, Official Report, column 153.

Asthma

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales who (a) are under the age of 18 years and (b) in total per health authority are known to suffer from serious asthmatic conditions. [16772]

Mr. Redwood: Information on the number of people suffering from diseases is not collected centrally. However, latest estimates of the number of completed consultant episodes for the hospital treatment of asthma to residents of Wales are as follows:

Health authority area of residence	Age of patient
	Under 18	[1]All ages
Clwyd	356	790
East Dyfed	191	484
Gwent	475	993
Gwynedd	213	486
Mid Glamorgan	649	1,237
Pembrokeshire	131	267
Powys	35	144
South Glamorgan	475	1,000
West Glamorgan	164	408

[1] Includes age not known.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will make public the recently agreed action plan of the Countryside Council for Wales. [15964]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West, (Mr. Morgan) on 27 March, Official Report, column 424, by my right hon. Friend.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 192, how many people requested assistance from the relevant family health services authority in registering for NHS dentistry during (a) 1993 and (b) 1994. [17746]

Mr. Redwood: From the information supplied by family health services authorities, the numbers of people asking for assistance were as follows:

	1993	1994
Clwyd	1,592	2,187
Dyfed	1,359	1,168
Gwent	991	1,120
Gwynedd	8,365	7,792
Mid Glamorgan	337	298
Powys	977	1,034
South Glamorgan	2,408	1,250
West Glamorgan	130	160

This information was supplied for management purposes only and is not statistically validated.

Bryn Alyn Hall School

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West dated 10 March, what period of time was requested by the proprietors of Bryn Alyn Hall school, Clwyd, to enable them to remedy those matters referred to in the OHMCI Wales letter of May 1994 in relation to the school's approval to admit local education authority placements of special educational needs children; [17692]

(2) pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West of 10 March, if the Department has received the detailed plan of action from the proprietors of Bryn Alyn Hall school to remedy the matters pointed out in the OHMCI Wales letter to the school of May 1994; what further proposals he has made to inspect the school; and if he will make a statement. [17691]

Mr. Redwood: In line with the legislation, my Department agreed the request of the proprietors of Bryn Alyn Hall school to allow a period of time to remedy the shortcomings identified by OHMCI. The period of time requested was not specified, but in a letter 5 July 1994 to the school proprietors my Department allowed an extension of time in two phases: receipt of an action plan within four weeks and, subject to receipt of that plan, a period of four months to address the breaches in approval requirements; the action plan was received. It was also made clear in the Department's letter that OHMCI would be asked to carry out a further inspection of the school in November 1994 to assess progress. The Department is currently considering what, if any, action needs to be taken in the light of the information received from OHMCI following that inspection.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to introduce statutory guidelines for the non-departmental public bodies he sponsors to protect board members who take action to supply information to him regarding allegations of mis-spending of public money; and if he will make a statement. [17671]

Mr. Redwood: The code of best practice for board members of public bodies, sent to all NDPBs in July last year, already confirms that members of an NDPB board have corporate responsibility for ensuring that the body complies with all relevant statutory or administrative requirements for the use of public funds. Any individual member who has a particular concern should raise this in the first instance with the chairman or board. An individual member has the right to raise with Ministers any matter of importance relating to his or her duty as a member of the board. Any board member who has evidence of impropriety by others should make sure it is passed on to someone who can deal with it impartially and fairly.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to reserve the right to make the decision on the proposed transfer of regional accident and emergency services from the Cardiff royal infirmary to the University Hospital of Wales pursuant to section 57 of the June 1991 guidelines entitled "Substantial Changes in the Use of Health Buildings." [17748]

Mr. Redwood: I have not reserved the right to decide this matter. The next step is for the community health council to submit a constructive and realistic alternative proposal to the health authorities. The matter will be referred to me for decision only if the CHC and the health authorities are unable to reach agreement on the proposals.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to the South Glamorgan health authority and the Cardiff community health council concerning the time allowed for the health council to prepare alternative proposals for the future of regional accident and emergency departments and the financial and other resources required by the health council to prepare such proposals pursuant to paragraph 52 of the June 1991 "Guidelines on Substantial Changes in the Use of Health Buildings". [17747]

Mr. Redwood: The recommended period for the provision of alternative proposals is eight weeks from the end of the consultation period arranged by the health authority. Health authorities are expected to provide community health councils with reasonable assistance to help councils develop constructive and realistic alternative proposals for the delivery of effective and efficient health services.

Committee of the Regions

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what public indication he has given on whether he may be willing to provide financial support to the Welsh Forum. [17493]

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 28 November 1994, column 917.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received asking him to consider giving financial support to Welsh representation on the Committee of the Regions; and if he will list those from whom these representations were received. [17495]

Mr. Redwood: Nine; three from the hon. Member, two from Councillor Eurig Wyn of Gwynedd county council and a member of the Committee of the Regions, one from J. H. R. Hughes Esq., central services manager of Rhymney Valley district council, two from Councillor J. R. P. Evans of Rhymney Valley district council and a member of the Committee of the Regions, and one from Councillor T. J. Mahoney of the Assembly of Welsh Counties.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received asking him to consider giving financial support to the Welsh Forum; and if he will list those from whom these representations were received. [17494]

Mr. Redwood: Five; two from the hon. Member, one from Councillor Eurig Wyn of Gwynedd county council and a member of the Committee of the Regions, and one from Councillor T. J. Mahoney of the Assembly of Welsh Counties.

Work Skills

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the skills gap in Wales; and what new steps he is planning to improve the numbers of qualified technicians in Wales and the supply of suitable applicants for apprenticeships on offer leading to technician-level qualifications. [17744]

Mr. Redwood: The 1994 Welsh employers survey, conducted by the independent researchers IFF, covered nearly 3,000 employers in Wales. It found that about 5 per cent. of manufacturing establishments in Wales had vacancies that were hard to fill because of a lack of skilled or qualified applicants. Improving the supply of qualified technicians has long been one of my priorities. In December 1993 I announced that support for new modern apprenticeships in Wales would concentrate in 1994–95 on manufacturing engineering, training people to NVQ levels 3 and 4. Nearly 500 people have started modern apprenticeships in manufacturing engineering in Wales in 1994–95. To support this, during 1994–95 I invested £5 million to update colleges' engineering facilities. This is in addition to the normal capital funding available to colleges through the Further Education Funding Council for Wales.

A concerted action plan to strengthen the supply of technicians in manufacturing industry is set out on pages 12 and 13 of "People and Prosperity—an Agenda for Action in Wales", which I published on 20 March. I wrote to all the TECs on 8 March to tell them to take action ahead of any shortage of engineer, electronics specialists and construction trades appearing.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from National Panasonic concerning the adequacy of the supply of suitable applicants for apprenticeship to intermediate levels of skills between the craft and graduate engineer level. [17694]

Mr. Redwood: A copy of the press release that Panasonic issued on 16 March was obtained by the Welsh Office, and a Welsh Office official spoke to the company. No direct representations from the company have been received, but at my request South Glamorgan training and enterprise council is meeting the company to discuss the issue and to try to solve the problem.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from business leaders in Wales concerning the adequate supply of qualified (a) craftsmen and women, (b) technicians and (c) graduate engineers; and what consultations he has had with the educational establishments in Wales and with the Wales engineering centre concerning the supply and demand for engineering technicians in electronics and other branches of engineering. [17693]

Mr. Redwood: In the course of my visits to companies in Wales, business leaders have commented on these issues but no formal representations have been made recently to my Department. The Welsh Office issued a consultation paper on engineering skills in May 1993. Fifty-four responses were received. In the light of this, I announced in December 1993 a package of measures to improve the supply of engineering skills, linked to modern apprenticeships. I attach high priority to increasing the number of trained engineers and electronics specialists and have instructed the training and enterprise councils to do this.

Health Promotion

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he completed the ministerial review of the functions of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales; when he proposes to make his conclusions public; and if he will make a statement. [17670]

Mr. Redwood: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Wales made his recommendations to me at the end of January. I agree with his conclusion that there is a need for a national body to help with health promotion work in Wales. I have asked my officials to look at the feasibility of alternative framework for this body before deciding on changes that may be required.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many people in Wales were registered for, and in receipt of, mobility allowance in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement; [16775]

(2) how many people in Wales are registered for, and in receipt of, attendance allowance in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [16776]

Mr. Hague: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not available in the form requested. In April 1992 disability living allowance replaced and extended the existing provisions of mobility allowance and attendance allowance for people under the age of 65. AA continues for disabled people whose needs arise after the age of 65. The available information is in the table. Figures for 1993 reflect the fact that AA recipients aged under 65 were automatically transferred to DLA.

Number of people in receipt of attendance allowance in Wales

Date	Number of people
31 March 1992	70,000
31 March 1993	56,000
31 March 1994	67,000

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales were registered for, and inreceipt of, invalidity benefit in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [16777]

Mr. Hague: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is in the table:

Number of Invalidity Benefit recipients in Wales

	Number
April 1992	[1]159,000
April 1993	[1]172,000
April 1994	[2]184,000
February 1995	[2]186,000

Notes:

[1] Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand, at 4 April 1992 and 3 April 1993.

[2] Based on a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the Benefits Agency offices, rounded to the nearest thousand, on the last working day of the month. The figure will include some people who have claimed but are not actually receiving benefit: eg because they are in receipt of a higher overlapping benefit. Figures are provisional and are subject to amendment.

DEFENCE

Queen's Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the Queen's Flight in (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94. [16515]

Mr. Soames: The total operating cost of the Queen's Flight borne on class I votes was £7,590 in 1992–93 and £9,105 in 1993–94.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which members of the royal family used the Queen's Flight; and on how many occasions in 1993–94. [16769]

Mr. Soames: The number of occasions during the financial year 1993–94 on which the named member of the royal family was the principal passenger on an aircraft of the Queen's Flight is as follows:

HRH The Princess of Wales: 56
HRH The Duke of York: 38

HRH The Duke of Kent: 82
HRH The Duchess of Kent: 118
HRH Prince Michael of Kent: 12
HRH Princess Michael of Kent: 2
HRH Princess Alexandra: 40

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the exact dates of visits to Indonesia by officials in his Department since 1 January 1990 and the reasons for those visits in each case. [16514]

Mr. Freeman: Details of such visits are not held centrally. Officials have visited Indonesia from time to time since 1 January 1990 to discuss defence and security matters of mutual interest. Details of their discussions are confidential, as is usual.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the exact dates of ministerial visits to Indonesia since 1 January 1990 (a) naming the Ministers and (b) the reasons for the visit in each case. [16507]

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence visited Indonesia in May 1993. His predecessor visited in September 1991, and the then Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces visited in March 1990 and May 1991. The purpose of these visits was to discuss defence and security matters of mutual interest. As is usual, details of these discussions are confidential.

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16555]

Mr. Freeman: The number of service personnel and civilians employed at present in complemented press and public relations and public relations support posts in London and districts and commands at home and overseas is 160. A figure for 1979 is not available.

Flying Training

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of flying training units which were active in the years (a) 1965 and (b) 1975 and the number which will be active after the "Front Line First" changes have been implemented and the number of training aircraft in use in each unit in each year. [17423]

Mr. Soames: The information requested, by individual service, is as follows:

Royal Navy

(a) The number of flying training squadrons in 1965 and the number of training aircraft could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

(b) The flying training squadrons (Sqn) in 1975 were as follows:

Army

(a) and (b) all Army flying training in 1965 and 1975 was undertaken at Middle Wallop. The numbers of training aircraft could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

(c) Following the establishment of the Defence helicopter flying school at RAF Shawbury in 1997, Army flying training will be conducted at both Middle Wallop and RAF Shawbury. The number of training aircraft at both sites has yet to be finalised.

Royal Air Force

Airfields

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of Royal Air Force airfields which were active in (a) 1965, (b) 1975 and (c) which will be active after the "Front Line First" changes have been implemented. [17424]

Mr. Soames: There were a total of 216 RAF airfields in 1965 and 162 in 1975. It is currently planned that, following the implementation of the "Front Line First" initiatives, there will be 39 active RAF airfields in 1999.

Air Defence

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of Royal Air Force squadrons engaged in the air defence of the United Kingdom and the number of aircraft in each squadron in (a) 1965, (b) 1975 and (c) 1985. [17425]

Mr. Soames: As of 31 March in 1965 and 1985 the squadrons and operational aircraft strengths were as follows:

	1965		1985
19 Squadron	12	5 Squadron	12
23 Squadron	12	11 Squadron	12
56 Squadron	14	29 Squadron	15
64 Squadron	[1]—	43 Squadron	17
74 Squadron	12	56 Squadron	13
92 Squadron	12	74 Squadron	14
111 Squadron	1	111 Squadron	16
Total	63		99

[1] No. 64 Squadron had no operational aircraft on strength in the UK. It is understood that they were deployed to the far east.

Individual figures for squadrons are not available for 1975. The overall strength of operational air defence aircraft on 31 March 1975 was 85 aircraft.

Air Cadets

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the air cadets in the last year. [17426]

Mr. Soames: My Department has received a number of representations about air cadets during the last year.

RAF (Overseas Postings)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to ensure that there will be adequate uniformed RAF technical personnel available for overseas posting at very short notice during periods of hostility or threatened hostility against United Kingdom interests. [17427]

Mr. Soames: The RAF has recently carried out an initial validation of its core requirement for uniformed regular manpower for operations. Detailed validation work is continuing to establish the service personnel required by rank, branch, trade and skill level to meet contingency operations and to protect United Kingdom interests. The RAF has sufficient technical personnel available for deployment to areas of tension as part of the immediate and rapid reaction forces.

Arm Exports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards increasing arms exports to (a) Asia and (b) the Pacific region; and if he will make a statement. [17521]

Mr. Freeman: The Defence Export Services Organisation has decided to direct additional resources specifically towards Asia and the Pacific region with the objective of increasing the United Kingdom share of the defence market—within, of course, the restraints of governmental and international policy.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what forms of government support are provided to British arms exports. [17526]

Mr. Freeman: Within the Ministry of Defence, support for defence exports is provided, primarily, by the Defence Export Services Organisation which exists to help British manufacturers market and sell their products abroad, complementing the wider range of services offered by the DTI. In addition to the DESO/DTI support, the Export Credits Guarantee Department makes available its range of export credit facilities to support defence sales.

Fish Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what communications he has had with the Industrial Ecology research centre of the university of Liverpool in relation to arsenical traces discovered in fish in the proximity of munitions dumps in the Irish sea; [17530]

(2) if he will provide additional finance for the Industrial Ecology research centre of the university of Liverpool to undertake further research work on arsenical traces in fish in the vicinity of munition dumps in the Irish sea. [17531]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no record of any contact with the Industrial Ecology research centre of the university of Liverpool and we have no plans to fund any of its research activities.

Sea Dumping (Munitions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will (a) list the quantity in tonnage and (b) specify the type of (i) chemical weapons and (ii) other munitions dumped in the sea surrounding the British Isles in each of the last 30 years; [17534]

(2) if he will make a statement about the sea dumping of (a) chemical weapons and (b) other munitions in British waters from 1965 to the present day; [17536]

(3) if he will make a statement about the sea dumping of (a) chemical weapons and (b) other munitions in international waters from 1965 to the present day; [17535]

(4) if he will list the names of operations undertaken by his Department regarding the sea dumping of munitions; if he will list the location of dump sites; and if he will specify the type and quantity of munitions dumped. [17652]

Mr. Soames: There has been no sea dumping of chemical weapons since 1957. My Department ceased all sea dumping of conventional ammunition and explosive stocks on 1 January 1993 in line with the Oslo and Paris conventions. Complete records do not exist for dumping before this date. Beauforts dyke operated as my Department's main conventional munitions sea dump site between 1920 and 1973, and Hurds Deep, a site 1,000 miles off Land's End, acted as the dump site of redundant or demilitarised munitions from 1973 until sea dumping was terminated. No records are available to cover more distant international waters.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about the dumping on land of (a) chemical weapons and (b) other munitions from 1965 to the present day; [17532]

(2) if he will (a) list the quantity in tonnage and (b) specify the type of (i) chemical weapons and (ii) other munitions dumped on land in each of the last 30 years; and if he will specify the locations thereof. [17533]

Mr. Soames: It has never been my Department's policy to use land burial as a final disposal route for redundant munitions.

Deaths (Canada)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces have died on training courses in Canada in each of the last 10 years; what were the dates of the deaths and the name and regiments of those involved; and if he will list details of each incident together with the conclusions of any inquiries carried out into these deaths. [17523]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with its Irish counterpart concerning Operation Sandcastle. [17651]

Mr. Soames: The Irish Government have been given details about Operation Sandcastle. There have been no intergovernmental discussions about this operation nor has any request for a meeting been received from the Irish Government.

Departmental Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value, at today's prices, of land, buildings and equipment sold by his Department in each of the last 10 years; and what are the forecast total receipts for the next financial year. [17522]

Mr. Soames: Due to the volatile nature of the property market it would not be possible to apply present day values to land and buildings which have been sold by my Department during the past 10 years. The actual receipts achieved for each of the years in question are as follows:

	£ million
1984–85	27.7
1985–86	60.2
1986–87	75.6
1987–88	77.8
1988–89	149.6
1989–90	74.0
1990–91	81.6
1991–92	102.2
1992–93	68.0
1993–94	70.7
1994–95	[1]62.0

[1] Projected.

The land buildings forecast receipts for the next financial year are £122 million. Any equipment associated with the sale of land and building is included in the figures.

Army Light Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 415, what is the current operational availability of his Department's 846 RB44 Army light vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [17650]

Mr. Soames: All 846 vehicles have been taken out of service while a steering under braking defect is investigated. No vehicles will be returned to service until a satisfactory solution of the problem is achieved.

Vehicle Integrated Communications and Information Distribution System

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to date of his Department's vehicle integrated communications and information distribution system; what was the original total cost of this project at today's prices; what was the original in-service date; when the project is now due to be in service; and if he will specify the changes made to the project in the last two years. [17524]

Mr. Freeman: The total cost to date of the vehicle integrated communications and information distribution system—VICDS—is just over £5 million. The original estimated cost of developing VICDS to production standard at today's prices is £7.5 million; funding for production of VICDS is the responsibility of projects which require VICDS as their communications bearer. The original date for the completion of development was December 1994; VICDS development is now due to be completed in October 1997. VICDS will first enter service with Bowman whose in-service date is April 2000.

There have been no major changes to the VICDS requirement since the successful field trials in 1992. However, following a detailed project review in 1993, the Department revised the procurement strategy for VICDS to address the risks identified in the original programme and to align the VICDS timetable with that of project Bowman. Contracts for the current risk reduction phase were let with Racal Communications Systems Ltd. and Hunting Engineering Ltd. in August 1994.

World Defence Market

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what percentage he expects the world defence market to change over the next five years. [17528]

Mr. Freeman: My Department forecasts that the world defence market annual average value of new orders for the period 1995 to 1999 will be more than 20 per cent. lower than the annual average value in the previous five years.

Injuries Claims

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance is normally given to members of the armed forces in pursuing claims against third parties in foreign countries for compensation for injuries incurred in the course of their duties on service abroad. [17672]

Mr. Soames: There is no general provision for such assistance to service or civilian employees. Some advisory assistance to members of the armed forces serving abroad may be given by service legal officers where appropriate, but this would not extend to meeting the costs of any legal action that an individual might wish to pursue. My Department does however operate a discretionary ex-gratia criminal injury compensation scheme for members of the armed forces and their dependants who are the victims of crimes of violence while serving overseas.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been received from the Canadian Government in regard to the possible toxic or radioactive contamination caused by any accident of RAF aircraft en route from the Pacific to the United Kingdom on a flight path over Canada. [17537]

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any such representatives.

Recruits, Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many recruits to the armed forces were from Wales in 1993–94; and if he will make a statement. [16780]

Mr. Soames: During financial year 1993–94 the number of recruits enlisted into the armed forces from Wales were as follows:

Royal Navy: 71
Army: 587
Royal Air Force: 41

The figures for the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force represent personnel recruited through careers information offices located in Wales, while the Army figure represents the number of recruits who gave their normal place of residence as Wales. No central records are maintained of the country of origin of officers, or airmen aircrew in the Royal Air Force, and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action was taken by Her Majesty's forces to warn off rescue workers at Lockerbie from looking at objects under a red tarpaulin. [16707]

Mr. Soames: My Department is not aware of any such action or incident.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration his Department has given to ending the use of airflights for the transportation of radioactive nuclear material over Britain. [16787]

Mr. Soames: Arrangements for the transportation of defence nuclear materials are kept under review, but in some circumstances RAF aircraft will continue to be the most appropriate means of transportation.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what precautions his Department adopts to minimise the risk of an air disaster involving air flights carrying radioactive nuclear material over Britain. [16789]

Mr. Soames: There are stringent regulations and procedures governing all aspects of the movement of defence nuclear material by air.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policies his Ministry adopts to minimise the flight of radioactive nuclear waste over urban areas. [16788]

Mr. Soames: As matter of long-standing policy, the transportation of all defence nuclear material is kept to a minimum consistent with conduct of business. Route selection criteria for flights include the avoidance of population centres wherever possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the progress that is presently being made towards the introduction of full competition in the supply of electricity in 1998. [17966]

Mr. Eggar: The Government attach great importance to the successful introduction of full competition in electricity supply in 1998. Consumers in the existing competitive market have already seen the substantial benefits that competition can bring. Customers with a maximum demand above 1 MW have been able to choose their electricity supplier since April 1990, when the electricity industry was vested, and the latest figures released yesterday show that average electricity price paid by manufacturing industry in Great Britain fell by nearly 11 per cent. in real terms between 1989 and 1994. Evidence suggests that some smaller industrial and commercial customers have achieved price reductions of up to 10 to 15 per cent. since the competitive market was further widened to cover all premises above 100 kW last year.

We want small consumers, including domestic consumers, to be able to share in these benefits after 1998. The broad objective is therefore that the industry should establish practical arrangements for 1998 that will enable customers to change their electricity supplier cheaply and easily, while continuing present levels of customer protection. This is a major undertaking with implications for every household. It requires careful planning if consumers and suppliers are to have confidence in the new market.

The Director General of Electricity Supply issued a consultation paper in January of this year in which he set out his initial views on the trading and licensing arrangements that will be appropriate for 1998 and beyond, and in which he announced that he was setting up a 1998 co-ordination group for England and Wales under his chairmanship and with the participation of my Department. A separate co-ordination group for Scotland has also been set up. He has now held the first meetings of these groups. I welcome that initiative. The duty to promote competition is written into the Electricity Act 1989 and it is appropriate for the director general to take the lead in ensuring that all parties are working together.

I understand that the director general will shortly set a timetable for the 1998 process, which identifies each of the key issues to be addressed, those responsible and the deadlines that need to be met. Many decisions need to be taken as soon as possible this year and I encourage the electricity industry to work with Offer to ensure that the opening up of the market to full competition in 1998 takes place smoothly and delivers benefits to consumers.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent the timing of the sale of shares in the electricity generators was a consideration in determining the date of the publication of "Energy Paper 65". [16952]

Mr. Eggar: "Energy Paper 65" was published as soon as it was ready. The timing of the sale of shares in the electricity generators was not a consideration in determining the publication date. The prospectus for the sale of shares in National Power and PowerGen included a reference to the new projections.

British Coal

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will make a statement on the future of British Coal's ex-employee liabilities. [17965]

Mr. Heseltine: Acting on behalf of my Department, British Coal and the trustees of the British Coal pension schemes, Touche Ross yesterday invited applications from potential bidders to pre-qualify to tender for the services undertaken by British Coal's Centris division in administering pensions, concessionary fuel entitlements, personal injury claims and other benefits. As well as ensuring value for money, a key objective in the tender process will be to ensure continuity in the high-quality services provided to beneficiaries. The tender will not affect the security of the pension and concessionary fuel entitlements of former British Coal employees and their dependants which the Government are committed to safeguarding.

Post Office

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the performance targets for the Post Office. [18274]

Mr. Eggar: The Government have in recent years set the Post Office performance targets on a three-year basis. The current three year targets expire at the end of the 1994–95 financial year. I therefore need to set the board new targets.

During the current target regime, the Government carried out a review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office. But it is now several years since there was a detailed external study of the operational efficiency of the Post Office. A performance review would clearly be desirable before setting further three-year targets and my Department will be appointing consultants shortly to carry out such a review.

This review will not, however, be completed until the autumn. In order to ensure that the Post Office has targets applying from the beginning of the financial year, I have agreed with the Post Office board that the existing three year targets should be extended on an exceptional basis to create a four-year set of targets to cover the period 1992–93 to 1995–96.

I therefore propose to set the board the following targets:

Annual return on capital employed

Royal Mail	Post Office Counters	Parcelforce
18 per cent.	9.5 per cent.	Break even (before exceptional items)

Reduction in Unit Costs (financial years 1992–93 to 1995–96)

Royal Mail	Post Office Counters
5.5 per cent.	6.5 per cent.

This RUC target compares to a three-year target for Royal Mail and Post Office Counters of 4 per cent. and 3 per cent. respectively for the three years to 1994–95. They take account of progress towards those targets in the three years to date, which both Royal Mail and Post Office Counters are likely to over-achieve in the three years to 1994–95. Parcelforce is not set an RUC target as it is subject to the competitive marketplace.

I believe these performance targets are realistic and will continue downward pressure on the Post Office's costs in the interest of taxpayers and consumers. They will continue to be matched by stretching quality of service targets for both Royal Mail and Post Office Counters which are set after consultation with the Post Office Users National Council.

Business Links

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the internal audit by his Department on business links; and if he will make a statement. [15182]

Mr. Heseltine: It is not the practice to publish internal audit reports.

Gas Bill

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to seek to amend clause 1 of the Gas Bill to provide, in the event of an agreement being reached at the first conference of the parties for the climate change convention to negotiate a protocol to the treaty establishing targets for carbon dioxide emissions beyond 2000, for the promotion of energy efficiency to become one of the regulator's duties and objectives. [17001]

Mr. Eggar: The Gas Bill will provide new opportunities for companies to market energy efficient services and packages. In a competitive market, this strategy can allow a supplier to gain business from other firms, while saving energy.

The Bill provides that the Secretary of State and the director shall each have a duty to exercise his functions in the manner he considers best calculated to promote the efficient use of gas conveyed through pipes. No amendment to clause 1 is therefore needed to enable energy efficiency to be one of the regulator's duties.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16222]

Mr. Heseltine: Guidance on Government use of public relations companies is contained in "A Working Guide for Government Information Officers", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Overseas Licensing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what role Her Majesty's Government have in the procedure for licensing the manufacture of equipment, with special reference to Land Rover vehicles, in countries other than the United Kingdom; what account it take of those countries' human rights records when making the licensing arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [17141]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 March 1995]: It is a matter for manufacturers' commercial judgment as to whether they wish to have their products manufactured overseas under licence. Vehicles and related equipment, specially designed or modified for military use and components therefore specially designed or modified for military use are controlled under schedule 1, part I, group 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, category ML6. Exports of equipment and technology for the production of all goods specified in group 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order are also controlled (category ML18). Any application for licence to export such vehicles, equipment or technology would be considered against internationally agreed criteria governing the control of exports of military equipment. These criteria include consideration of the human rights record of the country to which the goods would be exported. There are military equipment embargoes imposed by the European Union against Burma and China which were put in place as a result of those countries' record on human rights.

Energy Charter

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about funding for the energy charter secretariat. [17210]

Mr. Ian Taylor: In common with many other international organisations, the energy charter treaty secretariat will be funded by contributions from contracting parties according to a scale agreed in the course of negotiation. Depending on the final number of signatories, the United Kingdom contribution is likely to be about 7 per cent. of the budget which is expected to be agreed at the provisional charter conference on 5 and 6 April.

The United Kingdom approach to funding international organisations is to require them to produce budgets which, while meeting clearly defined objectives, also reflect the need for value for money and recognise the financial constraints on all Governments.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representation he has received about proposals to site the energy charter secretariat in London; and if he will make a statement. [17208]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have received no representations seeking to locate the energy charter treaty secretariat in London.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about his Department's plans to promote the energy charter. [17209]

Mr. Ian Taylor: In December 1994, when the energy charter treaty was signed, my Departmental issued a press notice and sent a briefing note, "The Energy Charter Treaty: Key Points For British Business", to about 500 companies and organisations with energy interests. I have today placed copies of this publication in the Library of the House. We will be discussing future plans for promoting the Treaty with UK energy organisations after the provisional charter conference on 5 and 6 April.

British Embassy, Washington

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports the British embassy in Washington DC has made on the Democrat party administration's deregulation activities. [17089]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 30 March 1995]: The most recent report on the deregulation activities of the Democrat party administration from the British embassy in Washington DC was made in September 1993. The report concerned the national performance review report "From Red Tape to Results: Creating A Government that Works Better and Costs Less", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17621]

Mr. Heseltine: Expenditure from my Department's centrally managed publicity budgets has been as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	£000 1994–95[1]
(a) TV Advertising	0	0	0
(b) Radio Advertising	1	2	2
(c) Press Advertising	1,138	782	554
(d) Other Promotional Materials and Activities	8,784	7,684	7,337
(e) Total	9,923	8,468	7,893
(f) Proportion of (e) that was Spent on Recruitment Advertising percentage.	0	0	0

[1] Estimated forecast outturn.

The budgets for 1995–96 have yet to be finalised.

Recruitment advertising is not funded from the Department's centrally managed publicity budgets.

Departmental Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of producing and circulating the last departmental annual report; what was the circulation list; how many copies were produced; how many copies were sold; and at what price. [16620]

Mr. Heseltine: The cost to my Department of producing and circulating DTI's most recent departmental report—"Trade and Industry 1995", Cm 2804—was £43,378.67, including VAT, but not including staff time. In addition, £25,627.30 was the cost to DTI of the copies it purchased for internal and external circulation from Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The costs of printing and publishing, were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which aims to recover these costs from sales revenue, including revenue from the copies sold to DTI, referred to above.

The report was circulated to the top 1,000 companies in the United Kingdom, to other companies which seconded staff to the Department during 1994 or which supported such secondments; to trade associations, chambers of commerce, training and enterprise councils, business links and other key opinion formers in the business community. Copies were also sent to members of the Trade and Industry and of the Science and Technology Committees of the House of Commons and to the right hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham).

Five thousand five hundred copies of Cm 2804 were printed and published. In addition to those required by Parliament and the Department, nearly 1,550 copies were produced to satisfy sales at a price of £16.80 net.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of producing and circulating the Department annual report for each of the last 10 years in real terms. [16621]

Mr. Heseltine: Departmental reports were published for the first time in 1991. The external costs to the Department of production and circulation in real terms, including VAT, for the five years of publication were as follows:

Year	Cost at 1994–95 prices[1] £
1991	[2]10,560.98
1992	[2]8,109.82
1993	[2,3]17,300.00
1994	28,061.99
1995	43,378.67

Notes:

[1] The figures do not include the costs of copies purchased by the Department from HMSO.

[2] The departmental report was not widely circulated externally by the Department in 1991, 1992 and 1993. In addition, much of the production work was carried out in-house in these years and is not included in the figures. In 1994 and 1995, this work was increasingly contracted out.

[3] The figure for 1993 is an estimate.

Patent Office, Newport

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost of the consultants employed to examine if the marketing section at the Patent Office in Newport is to be contracted out. [17413]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Patent Office will be looking at the feasibility of contracting out its marketing activities and consultancy advice may be sought. However, so far no consultants have been appointed.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent changes have taken place in the cost of the Pergau dam; and what is now the total cost of the dam. [17081]

Mr. Heseltine: Whilst I am aware of press reports about possible additional costs arising in connection with the Pergau dam project, these would be matters of a commercial nature for discussions between the contracting parties. Unless made public by those parties, any revision of costs would be subject to normal considerations of commercial confidentiality.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the waiting time for initial interview in Pakistan of applicants seeking settlement here as spouses. [17767]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The waiting time to first interview for spouses in Bombay and New Delhi applying for entry clearance for settlement was three months at the end of December 1994. In Madras, all applicants seeking settlement are placed in the same queue with a waiting time to first interview of three quarters of a month at the end of December 1994. There is no queuing system in operation in Calcutta.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising, for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since then: and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17624]

Mr. Howard: I am accountable for four executive agencies—HM Prison Service, the Forensic Science Service, the UK Passport Agency and the Fire Service College—and for some 38 non-departmental bodies which are listed in "Public Bodies 1994", which is available in the Library.

Information on spending on advertising and other promotional materials and activities by each agency and non-departmental public body for which I am responsible is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The outcome of each Justice and Home Affairs Council is reported to Parliament by means of an answer to a parliamentary question. Since the Council held on 20 June 1994 we have also submitted to the Select Committees a memorandum previewing the likely discussion at each Council, and subsequently a memorandum of evidence on the main conclusions reached. All texts adopted at a Justice and Home Affairs Council are deposited in the Library.

The then Home Secretary gave oral evidence to the Home Affairs Select Committee on 21 April 1993 on intergovernmental co-operation in justice and home affairs. A memorandum of evidence of work carried out under title VI was submitted to the Home Affairs Select Committee on 7 December 1993 in advance of oral evidence by officials on 15 December. On 24 January 1994, my officials provided two further papers on police co-operation and answers to a number of supplementary questions which the Committee did not reach at its oral evidence session.

Most recently I appeared before the Home Affairs Select Committee on 21 January 1995 to give evidence on criminal justice matters, including organised crime and intergovernmental co-operation in the fields of justice and home affairs.

Everthorpe Prison

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made on the reports of the disorder at Everthorpe prison; and if his conclusions have changed his policy in respect of illegal drugs in prisons. [17351]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 March 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Everthorpe prison.

A task force has been established to consider and progress the recommendations of the report on the disorder at Everthorpe prison. One of these recommendations is the introduction of a coordinated drug reduction policy at Everthorpe. This policy will be introduced this year.

There has been no change to the Prison Service's policy on tackling drug misuse in prisons as a result of the disturbances at Everthorpe. A strategy of controlling supply and providing support and treatment is being pursued, underpinned by mandatory drug testing for prisoners.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Armenian Orthodox Church

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government will take to urge the Turkish authorities to withdraw their requirement that, apart from regularly scheduled worship services, the Armenian orthodox church obtains special written permission for any function or meeting held in church facilities with more than 10 people in attendance. [17773]

Mr. David Davis: The Turkish public order decrees which require notification in advance of gatherings over a certain size apply generally and are not directed specifically at the Armenian orthodox church.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government will take to urge the Turkish authorities to allow the Armenian orthodox church in Turkey to hold its representative assembly so that it can elect delegates to participate in the election for the Supreme Patriarch in Armenia. [17772]

Mr. David Davis: Our consulate-general in Istanbul discussed this with the Turkish authorities and with representatives of the Armenian orthodox church. The church has now decided not to hold the assembly. The views of the Armenian orthodox church in Turkey will be represented at the elections for the Supreme Patriarch by a number of bishops chosen by the Ecumenical Patriarch of Istanbul.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17737]

Mr. Goodlad: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) on 29 November 1994 at column 250 and 10 January 1995 at column 63.

The FCO and ODA do not at present use the Internet for e-mail. However, both wings are currently considering how to implement a public inquiry Internet e-mail address, for launch later in the year.

A project is underway to establish an FCO world-wide web service on the Internet which should come on stream before the summer recess. A further announcement will be made at that time.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17457]

Mr. Baldry: Consular Department operates a public information telephone service for travel advice. Because of increased demand—staff were handling as many as 600 calls per day—and in order to improve our service to the public a new automated telephone answering system was introduced on 27 February 1995. The service offers travel advice for the 11 countries most in demand and is available on 0374-500900.

Call costs to the public are at standard or local rate. The new service involved no capital expenditure. Its running costs are £500 per month. The national and local media, the travel industry and other existing customers have received information about the service. No publicity costs have been incurred. It is still too early to assess the effectiveness of the new service.

Irish Nationals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Irish Republic will sign the appropriate convention enabling it to receive Irish nationals serving custodial sentences in prisons in the United Kingdom. [17660]

Mr. Hurd: This is a matter for the Irish Government. At the recent plenary meeting of the British-Irish inter-parliamentary body the Irish Foreign Minister, Mr. Spring, confirmed that legislation to ratify the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons was being prepared by the Irish Department of Justice, and was expected to be introduced in the Dail after the Easter recess.

Death Penalty

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to stop the execution of a British citizen in the electric chair in the United States of America on 6 April; and what assessment he has made of the applicability of the international covenant on civil and political rights. [17899]

Mr. Baldry: None. There are no special grounds for a plea for clemency by us on Mr. Ingram's behalf. The death penalty is permitted in certain circumstances under international human rights law. Mr. Ingram, who is a dual British–US national was convicted of a "most serious crime" as specified in article 6 of the international covenant on civil and political rights. Mr. Ingram received both a fair trial and a lengthy appeals process.

EU Ottawa Representative

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the name of the senior representative of the European Union or Community representing its interest in Ottawa; for how long that envoy has held this post; and if he will give their personal and occupational curriculum vitae. [18034]

Mr. David Davis: The head of delegation of the Commission of the European Communities in Ottawa is Mr. John R. Beck. Mr. Beck has held this position since April 1993. Mr. Beck has been working for the European Commission since 1973. He had previously worked at the Economist intelligence unit and the London chamber of commerce.

Fisheries, Canada

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which article of which treaty enables him to prevent, or vote against, any proposal for retaliatory action by the European Union or Community in respect of their dispute with Canada relating to fisheries. [18035]

Mr. David Davis: We believe that the best way to resolve the fisheries dispute between the EU and Canada is by negotiation. There is no formal proposal to impose sanctions. A proposal under article 228a of the treaty of Rome to interrupt or reduce, in part of completely, economic relations with Canada would require the adoption of a common position or joint action according to the provisions of the treaty on European Union relating to common foreign and security policy, which would be subject to unanimity.

Overseas Posts

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many labour attachés and labour reporting offices there are in each embassy or overseas posts; and at what annual cost. [18079]

Mr. Goodlad: At FCO posts overseas there are at present eight United Kingdom-based and five locally engaged officers with a formal labour reporting responsibility. Five of the UK-based officers are full-time labour attaches. As the following table shows, the 13 officers expect to devote, each year, a total of 10 man-years to labour reporting, at a total cost of £683,000.

[17628]

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Law Commission Report

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department who are the members of the inter-departmental working party established by the Lord Chancellor to prepare the Government's response to the Law Commission report on mental incapacity; what specific remit the working party has been given; whether the working party will be taking further written or oral evidence; what steps are being taken to ensure that the working party endorses the Government's policy of opposition to euthanasia and if he will make a statement. [17754]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The working group is made up of officials from the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Department of Health, the Home Office, the Department of Social Security, the Welsh Office and the Treasury. The terms of reference of the group are:

To co-ordinate the Government response to the Law Commission report on mental incapacity published on 1 March 1995.

To produce an initial report by 1 September 1995.

No decisions have yet been taken as to whether the group will take further written or oral evidence.

The Government consider euthanasia to be unacceptable and the working group has no remit to consider any change to this policy.

PRIME MINISTER

Malaysia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the Malaysian authorities about trade relations between the United Kingdom and Malaysia. [18579]

The Prime Minister: I welcome Dr. Mahathir's positive remarks, during his recent visit to Britain, that Malaysia wants to continue building the strongest possible ties with Britain, and is putting behind her the two countries' recent trade problems. This was a constructive initiative. Britain has close and long-standing links with Malaysia. We look forward to working with Malaysia to develop these to their full potential in the future.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss during his visit to Washington, the United States' experience of deregulation and the lessons learnt by the administration which can be applied to the United Kingdom. [17900]

The Prime Minister: I am always interested to hear new ideas to take forward the Government's deregulation initiative.

EMPLOYMENT

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since then; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17636]

Miss Widdecombe: Information about the spending on advertising and promotional activity by non-departmental public bodies and agencies is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The publication entitled "Public Bodies 1994" is held in the Library and lists the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Employment Department.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17635]

Miss Widdecombe: The expenditure by the Employment Department on advertising and other promotional activities between 1992–93 and 1993–94 is shown in the following table:

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
(a) Television advertising	Nil	Nil
(b) Radio advertising	1,034	194,554
(c) Newspaper advertising	4,674,390	7,120,535
(d) Other promotional materials	3,209,309	3,654,466
Total	7,884,733	10,969,555

None of the above expenditure was on recruitment advertising.

The expenditure figures to date for 1994–95 are shown in the following table:

(a) Television advertising	3,199,260
(b) Radio advertising	409,534
(c) Newspaper advertising	4,438,393
(d) Other promotional materials	2,763,979

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information superhighway. [17743]

Miss Widdecombe: Officials within the Department are currently investigating the possibility of establishing links to the Internet electronic mail service. The Department's approach to the information super-highway is to regard it as a potential vehicle for improving services to the Department's customers and as an additional publication medium for promoting open government.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the number of new directors each year that have joined the board of directors and (b) the percentage annual turnover of directors in respect of each training and enterprise council in England and Wales since their creation. [17052]

Mr. Paice: I am unable to give the information that the hon. Member is asking for as it is not collected in that form. However, the total turnover for board members for training and enterprise councils in England and Wales is shown in the following list:

March 1992 to February 1993: 20 per cent.
March 1993 to February 1994: 25 per cent.
March 1994 to February 1995: 19 per cent.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amounts are available under objective 4 of European structural funds for the retraining of existing employees in 1994–95; and how much has been applied for and spent in 1994–95. [17342]

Miss Widdecombe: A total of 3,377 million ecu is available for spending in Great Britain under objective 3 and 4 of the structural funds between 1994 and 1999. The Government announced their intention last year to concentrate available funding on helping unemployed people under objective 3. Therefore, nothing was applied for or spent under objective 4 in Great Britain in 1994–95.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17459]

Miss Widdecombe: Details about the public information telephone inquiry lines operating throughout the Department are not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Applications

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if planning approvals granted since January where the application used imperial units of measurement, are valid; and if he will make a statement. [16766]

Sir Paul Beresford: All planning permissions granted are valid unless and until declared invalid by a court. As far as this Department is aware, no planning permissions have been declared invalid on the grounds that the application for permission used imperial measurements nor are we aware of any applications to the courts to declare permissions invalid on these grounds.

Local Government Finance, Leicestershire

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the standard spending assessment for Leicestershire; how much was spent in each of the last five years; and what is the planned standard spending assessment for this year. [17157]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The figures are:

£ million

	Standard spending assessment	Net revenue expenditure[1]
1990–91	458.828	484.585
1991–92	539.740	545.463
1992–93	579.013	581.405
1993–94	548.651	545.528
1994–95	560.740	567.888
1995–96	531.173	—

Notes:

[1] All figures are at outturn with the exception of 1994–95 which is budget.

The figures have not been adjusted for changes of responsibility or function. On a comparable basis, the standard spending assessment for 1995–96 is a £3.206 million increase from 1994–95—£527.966 million.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was budgeted by the county council for education in Leicestershire in each of the last five years; and how much is planned for this year. [17156]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information on the planned budget for 1995–96 has not yet been received. Budgets set for the previous five years were as follows:

Leicestershire budgeted[1] education net current[2] expenditure

	£ million
1990–91	340
1991–92	375
1992–93	416
1993–94[3]	374
1994–95	375

Note:

[1] Final outturn expenditure figures would be different.

[2] Net current expenditure is defined as employee plus running expenses less sales, fees and charges, and other non-grant income. It is not consistent with the definition of net revenue expenditure to compare with SSA.

[3] Further education colleges were removed from local control on 1 April 1993.

County Council Reserves

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the most recent information is on the current reserves held by the county councils of (a) Suffolk, (b) Essex, (c) Cambridgeshire and (d) Norfolk; and what the figures were 12 and 24 months previously.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The available information is as follows:

Local Authority Reserves 1 April 1992 to 1 April 1994

The latest available estimates of the level of reserves as at 1 April 1992 to 1 April 1994 are attached. These are split, where possible, into schools' reserves ('LMS'), and other ('Non-LMS'). Non-LMS reserves include funds, which may be substantial, held for specified purposes which may not be available to the council for general use—for example, funds to finance capital projects to which the authority is committed; and insurance funds where the authority is bearing its own insurance risks.

These estimates are subject to amendment as authorities finalise their accounts. Compatible data on the use of balances in 1994–95 which would be needed to derive an estimate of the level of reserves at 1 April 1995 is not yet available.

National Parks

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people both live and work in each of the national parks; and, in each case, what this is as a percentage of the economically active population. [17165]

Mr. Atkins: The Department does not maintain statistics specifically relating to those people both living and working in national parks, and it could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what ethical guidelines exist in respect of the development of genetically modified organisms; what structures there are for the control of (i) development and (ii) release of genetically modified organisms; and how many genetically modified organisms have been (1) developed and (2) released in each year since 1989. [17064]

Sir Paul Beresford: There are no specific ethical guidelines in respect of the development of genetically modified organisms which may subsequently be released to the environment. The structures for the control of development and release of GMOs include the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the GMO (Contained Use) Regulations 1992; the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the GMO (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 and 1995, and the GMO (Contained Use) Regulations 1993. Records are not kept each year of how many GMOs have been developed. Prior to the regulations requiring a consent for the release of GMOs coming into force on 1 February 1993, there had been about 50 releases of GMOs in the United Kingdom. Since that date, consents to release GMOs to the environment have been issued as follows: 15 in 1993, 24 in 1994, and to date, 15 in 1995.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d), and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Sir Paul Beresford: The figures for central publicity expenditure by my Department in each of the financial years/categories requested is detailed below. These figures exclude recruitment advertising expenditure. Budgets for financial year 1995–96 are still being prepared and are not yet available.

	TV	Radio	Press	Other	£000 Total
1992–93	3,545	Nil	3,324	7,828	14,697
1993–94	2,774	347	2,028	6,959	12,108
1994–95	2,698	477	1,295	4,408	8,878

These figures include VAT, agency fees where relevant and all other levies as paid.

Spent on recruitment advertising during financial year 1994–95 was approximately £38,200. Figures for previous years are not readily available and cannot be provided within the acceptable cost limits.

Emissions

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he had to monitor PM_{10} in rural areas. [15717]

Mr. Atkins: My Department plans to begin monitoring PM_{10} at a small number of rural locations this year.

Minicab Offices

Mr. John Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue jointly with the Secretary of State for Transport, guidance on the siting of minicab offices and their effect on traffic flow. [15692]

Sir Paul Beresford: Traffic flow may be a material consideration in determining an application for planning permission for a minicab office. We have no plans to issue guidance on this.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17451]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department does not keep central records of the information requested on usage of public information telephone lines.

Water companies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what agreements were entered into with water companies at the time of privatisation regarding charging bills at a scale which would accumulate money for future use; if he will make it his policy to require use of surplus funds to be devoted to reduction of water bills; and if he will make a statement. [17254]

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 March 1995]: No agreements were entered into at the time of privatisation regarding accumulation of funds for future use. Initial price limits were set at a level to ensure water companies were able to finance the proper carrying out of their functions, in accordance with the requirements of legislation. This function is now the responsibility of the Director General of Water Services who, in his recent periodic review of price limits, has set new limits for future increases in charges which assume improved efficiency and lower rates of return by the companies. He has stated that any additional savings should be shared with customers through increased spending on discretionary service improvements or lower charges.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Green Paper on Drugs Misuse

40. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will comment on submissions made on the Government Green Paper on drugs misuse. [15731]

Mr. Newton: Over 400 detailed responses were received from individuals and organisations during the consultation period on the Green Paper "Tackling Drugs Together". The great majority of respondents have very much welcomed the Government's initiative in developing a three-year strategy for tackling drug misuse and supported the main proposals. A number of issues on which clarification has been sought are being addressed in the preparation of a White Paper, which we intend to publish shortly.

Procedural Reform

41. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, columns 19–20, what timetable he envisages for reviewing recent reforms in parliamentary procedure and for considering further reforms; and if he will make a statement. [15732]

44. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), of 20 February, Official Report, columns 19-20, what timetable he envisages for reviewing recent reforms in parliamentary procedure and for considering further reforms; and if he will make a statement. [15736]

Mr. Newton: As I explained in the debate on 19 December, Official Report, columns 1456–65, the reforms which the House has agreed to are in operation as an experiment for the remainder of the Session, and will be reviewed towards the end of the Session. If the hon. Member wishes to suggest further reforms, he might like to submit them to the Procedure Committee.

Divisions

42. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many votes there have been in the House since January; and what was the equivalent figure for 1994. [15733]

Mr. Newton: The number of Divisions in the House for the period from Tuesday 10 January 1995 to Tuesday 21 March 1995 inclusive was 76. This period represented 50 sitting days, with one "constituency Friday" not included in the total. During the first 50 sitting days of 1994, covering the period of Tuesday 11 January 1994 to Monday 21 March 1994 inclusive, there were 116 Divisions.

Standing Committee Membership

43. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent representations he has received on the proprietary of hon. Members with registered interests serving on Standing Committees discussion issues relating to those interests. [15735]

Mr. Newton: In the course of business questions, I have received oral representations from five hon. Members.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Phone Numbers

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government current and future policy regarding portability of phone numbers between BT and cable companies. [17126]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Responsibility for number portability falls to the Director General of Telecommunications. He and I agree that the introduction of portability is essential to the development of effective competition. Oftel has made proposals for a regime to govern portability, and I expect progress to be announced shortly.

Konver Programme

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the projects for which assistance under the Konver programme has been sought but for which no decision has been made; [17757]

(2) if he will list the projects for which assistance under the Konver programme has been refused; [17755]

(3) what is his assessment of the success of the projects funded by the Konver programme since it began; [17768]

(4) if he will list the projects which have been funded by the Konver programme since it began, the total value of each such project, and the value of the contribution made in each case by the Konver programme. [17756]

Mr. Eggar: Lists of both the successful and unsuccessful applications for Konver I were placed in theLibraries of both Houses in December 1993. There are no outstanding decisions on the Konver I projects.

It is too early in the life of the programme to assess how successful the projects are going to be. Many projects still have a year to run. As is usual with all programmes, an independent evaluation will be undertaken.

For Konver II, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Leeds, Central, (Mr. Fatchett) on 20 March 1995, Official Report, columns 796–97.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16289]

Mr. Heseltine: There was no expenditure on public relations under the Department's central publicity budget in 1993–94.

Carriage Charges

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had about the increased level of carriage charges imposed by the Royal Mail for the delivery of newspapers to small shop outlets; and if he will make a statement. [17488]

Mr. Eggar: None. I understand from the Post Office that the Royal Mail does not currently provide a service for delivery of newspapers to small shop outlets.

Car Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the level of import penetration in the car market in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) Italy; and if he will make a statement. [17125]

Mr. Page: The information is in the table.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the percentage change in United Kingdom export unit values relative to those of the EEC Six for each quarter since the fourth quarter of 1986. [17163]

Sarin

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his time scale for the banning of the manufacture of Sarin in the United Kingdom. [17166]

Mr. Heseltine: Sarin is one of a number of chemicals, the production of which will be permitted under the chemical weapons convention only for research, medical, pharmaceutical or protective purposes. The legislation to implement the CWC in the UK and to enable the UK to ratify it will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits. The CWC will enter into force for participating states 180 days after 65 countries have ratified it. So far, 27 states have done so.

Chernobyl

Mr.Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent communications he has received from the Ukrainian Government in regard to technological assistance required at the Chernobyl nuclear plant. [17552]

Mr.Page: No such approach has been received.

Patent Office

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how long it has been the policy to offer staff recruited to work at the Patent Office in Newport two-year contracts; what benefits the Patent Office has derived from this policy; and if people employed on two-year contracts are afforded the same rights as Patent Office staff not on fixed-term contracts. [17414]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Patent Office does not have a policy of recruiting staff on two-year contracts and currently has no such employees. However, the office does employ staff on renewable six-month contracts and has done so since March 1991 when it became clear that there has been a considerable reduction in demand for trade marks. A number of staff were therefore recruited on short-term contracts in order to retain the flexibility to reduce staff numbers quickly if market pressures so required. Although those pressures remain significant, reductions required to reflect efficiency improvements and changes in demand have so far been accommodated by normal staff turnover.

Staff on fixed-term contracts do not have all the rights of established civil servants. As well as terms of employment, there are differences between conditions of service, including amounts of sick leave entitlement.

Copyright Offences

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce regulations to give effect to enforcement procedures under the Copyright Designs and Patents Act 1988. [17687]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Enforcement of copyright offences already falls within the responsibilities of the police. The Copyright, Designs and Patents Acts 1988 contains provisions facilitating both civil and criminal proceedings under that Act. These provisions which re-enacted and improved upon earlier legislation have been in force since 1 August 1989. Section 165 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 additionally makes it a duty of local weights and measures authorities to enforce copyright offences. However, when agreeing to introduce that provision, the Government made it clear that it would not be brought into effect until there had been an opportunity to carry out full consultations with local authority associations on the possible resource implications. Those consultations are not yet complete.

Companies House

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost to date of the report by SRU Ltd. into the future of Companies House; and what estimate he has made of the final cost of all consultancy work on the subject of contracting out Companies House. [17228]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The cost of consultancy advice from SRU Ltd. on the future of Companies House was £283,000, exclusive of VAT.

At this stage it is not possible to say what the final cost of all consultancy work on contracting out companies House services will be.

Land Rover

Mr. Wray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what Government regulations apply in respect of the licencing for manufacture in other countries of Land Rover vehicles; and to what extent human rights are taken into account in respect of the licencing arrangements. [17787]

Mr. Ian Taylor: It is a matter for manufacturers' commercial judgment as to whether they wish to have their products manufactured overseas under licence. Vehicles and related equipment specially designed or modified for military use and components therefore specially designed or modified for military use are controlled under schedule 1, part 1, group 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (category ML 6). Exports of equipment and technology for the production of all goods specified in group 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order are also controlled under category ML18. Any application for a licence to export such vehicles, equipment or technology would be considered against internationally agreed criteria governing the control of exports of military equipment. These criteria include consideration of the human rights record of the country to which the goods would be exported. There are military equipment embargoes imposed by the European Union against Burma and China which were put in place as a result of those countries' record on human rights.

TREASURY

Civil Service (Privatisation)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil service functions are currently being considered for privatisation; and who the consultants are in each case. [16972]

Sir George Young: An activity is identified as a possible candidate for privatisation either in the Department's annual efficiency plan, or as part of a prior options review process under which activities are reviewed to see whether they should be abolished, privatised, strategically contracted-out, market tested or given agency status. Prior options reviews are announced in the monthly "Market Testing Bulletin". Decisions on possible candidates for privatisation are announced by departmental Ministers as and when appropriate.

Information on the consultants used by departments and agencies in cases currently being considered is not held centrally.

Income Tax (Welsh Authorities)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which tax offices in Wales are responsible for processing the income tax of the employees of (a) the Welsh local authorities and (b) the Welsh health authorities; how many staff at each office are engaged in this work; what proposals he has to alter these arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [17545]

Sir George Young: Details of the tax offices in Wales which are responsible for processing the income tax of the employees of the Welsh local authorities and Welsh health authorities together with the approximate number of staff engaged on this work are as follows:

Tax office	Approximate staff deployed on local authority work	Approximate staff deployed on health authority work
Aberystwyth	0.2	—
Bangor	5.5	1.5
Brecon	2.5	0.8
Bridgend	0.4	—
Carmarthen	7.0	4.25
Colwyn Bay	7.4	—
Llanelli	0.25	—
Merthyr Tydfil	1.0	—
Neath	2.3	—
Newport 1	7.5	3.0
Newport 2	0.6	—
Pontypridd	0.8	3.0
Wrexham 2	0.9	—
Cardiff 1	12.5	—
Swansea	12.0	3.4

The current reorganisation of local authorities in Wales will necessitate some changes to the organisation of the employee's tax records. Full details of the local authority changes and the resulting impact on each tax office are not yet clear

Barings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the activities of Mr. Christopher Heath in future markets were first drawn to the attention of the Bank of England.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Heath joined the Barings group in June 1984 and left in March 1993. Prior to leaving he was the managing director of Barings Securities Ltd. and a director of Baring Brothers and Co. Ltd. His role in the activities of Baring Securities, particularly in the far east and in the Japanese equity warrant market, were known to the Bank of England. As for his involvement, if any, in futures markets and the Bank of England's knowledge of such activities, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor told the House on 27 February, he has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him. He expects to publish the full report subject only to the need to protect the legitimate confidentiality of innocent third parties and any other legal constraints.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16291]

Mr. Nelson: Total expenditure was £1.6 million of which just over £1 million was for contracts with the private sector including the cost of press handling and marketing advice on the BT2 final instalment and BT3 share offer.

Exchange Rates

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will state the £/Irish Punt exchange rate in (a) 1965, (b) 1975, (c) 1985, and (d) currently; [16711]

(2) if he will state the £/deutschmark exchange rate in (a) 1965, (b) 1975, (c) 1985 and (d) currently. [16710]

Mr. Nelson: The exchange rates requested are:

	DM/£	Irish £/£
1965 (average)	11.17	1.00
1975 (average)	5.45	1.00
1985 (average)	3.78	1.22
30 March 1995	2.25	1.00

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by rank order of import penetration for the manufacturing industries listed in table 15.10 of the April 1991 "Monthly Digest of Statistics" the percentage increase in output in the fourth quarter of 1994 compared to (a) 1973 and (b) 1979; and if he will make a statement. [17113]

Mr. Nelson: Comparative output data for 1973, 1979 and the fourth quarter of 1994 are not available at the requested level of disaggregation.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in the value and volume of imports and exports of (a) manufactures, (b) North sea oil and gas, (c) food, drink and tobacco, (d) other goods, (e) travel and tourism, (f) financial services and (g) other services between 1990 and 1994. [17188]

Mr. Nelson: Information relating to changes in the value and volume of imports and exports between 1990 and 1994 can be derived from data available on the Central Statistical Office database, which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library. The CSO is unable separately to identify North sea oil and gas.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account his Department's definition of export-led growth takes of imports; and if he will list the change in the value and volume of imports and exports of (a) manufactures, (b) North sea oil and gas, (c) food, drink and tobacco, (d) other goods, (e) travel and tourism, (f) financial services and (g) other services between 1992 and 1994. [17164]

Mr. Nelson: Changes in both gross and net exports are considered when assessing the sources of GDP growth. Figures for export and import value and volumes are available on the Central Statistical Office database, which can be accessed through the Library of the House.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each quarter since the fourth quarter of 1986 the percentage increase or reduction in the rate of exchange between sterling and the ecu currencies other than the deutschmark. [17115]

Mr. Nelson: Information on sterling's exchange rate against the ecu currencies other than the deutschmark can be found in table 7.1 of "Financial Statistics" published by the Central Statistical Office.

Investments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list United Kingdom earnings from (i) overseas investment and (ii) investments by United Kingdom manufacturers overseas for each quarter since 1989. [17123]

Mr. Nelson: The information available is given in the table. Figures are available only on an annual basis. The information is classified according to the activity in which the investment is made rather than the activity of the investor.

Direct investment by UK companies overseas: net earnings[1] (£m)

	Manufacturing industry[2]	Total all industries
1989	7,477	16,608
1990	7,130	15,526
1991	6,532	12,688
1992	6,368	13,285
1993	6,983	16,367

Pig Producers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to (a) give 100 per cent. first-year allowance to pig producers for any costs associated with the replacement of sow stalls and tethers, (b) change capital allowances to allow buildings with a short life span to be written off for tax over their useful life and (c) allow losses for the pig industry to be carried back for three years for income tax. [17065]

Sir George Young: (a) I have no such plans;

(b) The net cost—less any receipts on disposal—of agricultural buildings can already be written off for tax over their actual life, however short, under the capital allowances code as it now stands;

(c) I have no such plans.

Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will resume publication in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" of the four ratios in table 15.10 of the April 1991 issue on an annual or quarterly basis. [17114]

Mr. Nelson: Ratios for divisions 17, 18 and 24 of the standard industrial classification 1992 will be published on a quarterly basis in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics". The remaining divisions will be published on an annual basis.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the reasons for the state of the balance of trade in manufactured goods in 1994; and what this balance was (a) in 1994 prices and (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product relative to that in (i) 1970, (ii) 1977 and (iii) 1979. [17118]

Mr. Nelson: A recent assessment of factors affecting the balance of trade in manufactures was published in the November 1994 "Financial Statement and Budget Report", based on data available at that time. Estimates for the balance of trade in manufactures up to and including 1994, both in 1994 prices and as a percentage of gross domestic product, can be calculated from series on the Central Statistical Office database. This can be accessed through the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the reason for the change in the deficit in the balance of trade with the EC Twelve in manufactured goods between 1992 and 1994; and what was the contribution to that change of monetary and exchange rate policies. [17162]

Mr. Nelson: The balance of trade with the EU in manufactures depends on a variety of factors, including competitiveness, domestic demand and mainland European demand. By keeping inflation low, monetary policy has contributed to British industry's ability to compete in both overseas and domestic markets.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by rank order of import penetration for the manufacturing industries listed in table 15.10 of the April 1991 "Monthly Digest of Statistics" the percentage change in the volume of output, exports and imports in (i) 1994 and (ii) the fourth quarter of 1994 since the 12 months ended in 1989 and the implied increase in import penetration. [17116]

Mr. Nelson: Comparative data for 1994 and 1989 are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the balance of trade with the EC Twelve in manufactures between 1992 and 1994 of the increase in United Kingdom export unit values for manufactures relative to those of the EC Six between the third quarter of 1992 and the first half of 1994. [17124]

Mr. Nelson: The balance of trade with the EU in manufactures depends on a variety of factors, including competitiveness, domestic demand, and mainland European demand.

Council Tax Appeals

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what timetable guidance he has given to local valuation officers in respect of setting council tax appeals. [17681]

(2) if he will take measures to accelerate the processing and settlement of council tax appeals. [17669]

Mr. Nelson: Targets for settling council tax appeals in England were announced by the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration on 31 January 1995, Official Report, column 580.

Referring to initial appeals, he said that it was hoped that all but a handful would be settled by the summer. By 28 February, the last date for which statistics are available, 88 per cent. had been cleared. When the bulk of initial appeals have been settled it is expected that any further new appeals will generally be settled within 12 months of their being received.

Local valuation offices are expected to deal with appeals within these targets, having regard to when the appeal was made and giving priority to cases where hardship is identified.

Given these arrangements, I do not intend to take any further measures to accelerate the processing and settlement of council tax appeals but will continue to keep the matter under review.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many council tax appeals submitted from the borough of Basingstoke and Deane in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95 are outstanding. [17668]

(2) how many council tax appeals were submitted from the borough of Basingstoke and Deane in (a) 1993–94 (b) 1994–95; and what percentage has been settled. [17682]

Mr. Nelson: The number of council tax appeals submitted from the borough of Basingstoke and Deane in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95, and the numbers outstanding and the percentages settled are as follows. The figures for 1994–1995 are for the period from 1 April 1994 to 28 February 1995, the last date for which statistics are available.

Year	Appeals submitted	Appeals outstanding	Percentage settled
1993–94	2,940	634	78
1994–95	285	230	19

VAT

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer from which date the value added tax changes will be introduced which stem from the EC seventh VAT directive and which specifically affect (a) importers of works of art, (b) antiques, (c) collectors' pieces and cars and (d) agents. [18578]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The provisions in the Finance Bill introducing many of these changes will take effect following Royal Assent, which is a moveable date. I am aware, however, that businesses would find it of assistance to have a firm date by which they should amend their procedures in order to be able to take account of changes. In view of this, it has been decided that the changes which affect importers of certain works of art, antiques, collectors' pieces and cars, and agents who act in their own names will be introduced with effect from 1 June 1995. I am sure that the affected businesses will welcome this decision.

Software Licences

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount was paid to Computer Associates for it to transfer software licences to EDS as part of the Inland Revenue's outsourcing programme. [17320]

Sir George Young: [holding answer 30 March 1995]: EDS and Computer Associates have a universal enterprise agreement which allow EDS to use all the Computer Associates products for which the IR had licences. It was not therefore necessary to transfer the IR/Computer Associates software licences to EDS, and nothing was paid to Computer Associates.

EDUCATION

Teachers

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for each of the past five years, the number of (a) teachers and (b) auxiliary school staff in England who are employed on a temporary basis, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17761]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table gives information about types of contract for teachers employed in local authority-maintained schools; this was first collected in 1992. Information collected on non-teaching staff in schools does not distinguish between permanent and temporary staff.

[1] Information for self-governing (GM) schools is not collected.

[2] Teachers in regular service are those employed at the time of the survey on a contract of a month or more.

[3] Occasional teachers are employed for the whole of the survey date on a contract of less than one month.

[4] Excludes sixth form colleges.

Non-teaching Staff

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by local education authority all categories of non-teaching staff employed (a) in schools and (b) outside schools indicating which are considered to be administrative staff; and what is the ratio to teachers. [17654]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows, for each local authority in England, the full-time equivalent numbers of selected categories of non-teaching staff employed in LEA maintained schools. This information is taken from the department's 1994 annual schools' census.

Information about non-teaching staff employed in the local authority education service is collected by the Local Government management board. This information covers all non-teaching staff whether employed in or outside of schools. This source does not distinguish between staff employed in schools and those employed elsewhere, nor does it separate administration from other staff. Further details of the data available together with data for each local authority were provided in my letters dated 21 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin), in answer to his question, Official Report, 21 February column 181, and to my hon. Friend the member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson) in answer to his question, Official Report, 28 February column 534. Copies of the letters are available in the Library.

Correspondence

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, when she expects to answer the question table by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Yardley for answer on 6 March on the percentage of secondary school children entitled to free school meals. [17753]

Mr. Robin Squire: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on Friday 31 March.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by her Department, in each case stating the costs of establishing, operating and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment her Department has made of their effectiveness. [17461]

Mr. Forth: A dedicated public inquiry unit was established within the Department's information bureau and library in 1987. With the advent of a new switchboard in 1991 a single number—0171 925 5555—was established to handle public inquiries. In September 1994 a voice processing system with automatic call routing capabilities was added to the telephone line at a cost of £18,477. The unit's annual staffing costs are estimated at £127,000. The telephone number appears on all departmental press releases, in entries in directories and year books and in appropriate departmental publications. No extra costs have been incurred in publicising the number.

It is estimated that 65 per cent. to 70 per cent. of all inquiries are made by telephone. The total number of inquiries handled by the public inquiry unit as a result of telephone calls, letters and personal callers to the Department's inquiry room at its headquarters are as follows:

1987: 30,633 (April–December only)

1988: 51,468

1989: 55,674

1990: 49,553

1991: 58,103

1992: 51,866

1993: 51,327

1994: 63,974

The introduction of the call routing system has increased the effectiveness of the public inquiry unit by enabling telephone callers to be automatically directed to staff able to handle specific queries or to the publication ordering service.

National Youth Agency

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will withdraw central Government-funded support from the National Youth Agency; and if she will make a statement. [17147]

Mr. Boswell: Central Government grants to the National Youth Agency have already been agreed for 1995–96. Funding from the Department for Education for future years will be decided in the light of the outcome of the policy review of the agency currently taking place.

School Capital Grants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what capital grants were (a) applied for and (b) granted for 1995–96 for each grant-maintained school. [18078]

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member with this information.

GCSE

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the GCSE average point scores for (a) each twentieth group and (b) for the cumulative twentieth groups of 15-year-old pupils ranked according to their average point scores for (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994, in respect of (1) all pupil, (2) pupils in the grant-maintained sector, (3) pupils in the independent sector, (4) pupils in the whole maintained sector and (5) pupils in the local education authority maintained sector giving the numbers of each group of the whole cohort in each case. [18033]

Mr. Forth: The information requested is shown in the table. The total number of pupils are divided into 20 groups of equal size. The cumulative number of pupils in each of the 20 groups and their cumulative average point score are listed in the table. The numbers and average point score of individual groups can be derived from the listed figures.
